"On Thursday two persons, one European and one Indian, accused of shooting an adversary fatally in two different cases were acquitted by the Lahore Chief Court on the ground that both the accused had exercised their right of self-defence only. These two judgments are shock to the sensibilities of people who deplore the murderous attacks frequently made by ignorant and quarrelsome people on innocent villagers. In a Province like the Punjab where murders have increased enormously, we fear their effect may act as incentive to crime. But it is equally possible that they will act as a deterrent to serious crime and will have a preventive effect. For when people in the villages get to know that they could kill an adversary under circumstances when they could also plead a right of self-defence, the attitude of the aggressors will be greatly modified. It will be remembered that on the 18th instant in the Calcutta High Court, Justice Mukerjee acquitted several Chamars of Bhagalpur who had beat to death a dissolute zemindar who entered the zenana of the accused for immoral purposes. In such cases the judicial pronouncement of the right of self-defence will undoubtedly act as a deterrent to crime. At the same time ignorant people might misread the lesson or the moral of the acquittal and cause embarrassment to the police. In the case of Private Peskett, the right of self-defence arose from alleged fear, but it was created by the agressive conduct of the accused himself. It is difficult to perceive how the killing of an innocent villager could be interpreted as an act of real self-protection. Whatever may be the legal technicalities warranting these acquittals the man in the street cannot help pointing to them as further instances of miscarriage of justice."

"The verdict of the Jury in Private Peskett's case and the resulting acquittal of the accused have gone to strengthen the existing belief in the people that as between a European accused and an Indian sufferer the system of administering justice in the country is defective. The European is tried with the help of a jury consisting of his own countrymen and the Indian sufferer is placed at a disadvantage in that he has no one on the jury who can appreciate the evidence adduced in support of his position. The people doubt the ability of a purely European jury to appreciate the difficult and altogether helpless position of the Indian sufferer. In other cases they invariably rely on the court, but in such a case the court has merely to accept the verdict of the jury. At this rate the question suggests itself why there should be a trial at all before a civil tribunal or why the offending soldiers might not be dealt with departmentally by a court martial and the offence punished or condoned as it might appear from the evidence placed before the military tribunal. We feel constrained to suggest for the earnest consideration of the Government of India that the present system of trial should either be improved and the chances of miscarriage of justice reduced or be entirely abandoned in favour of trial by a court martial. At present these repeated acquittals by civil tribunals afford an excuse for the military authorities to under-rate their own responsibilities in the matter. No one knows whether the exposures made before the civil tribunals do ever engage the attention of the military authorities and whether measures are adopted by them to prevent a recurrence of the mishap. For the effect of such trials should be preventive even more than punitive. It is not at all a racial question. No one wants to get capital out of such unfortunate occurrences and everybody desires such mishaps should be prevented. But does any one imagine that the result of this case will have a preventive effect?

"The recorded evidence in this case throws side lights on the manner and method of carrying on these dog-shooting expeditions in the cantonments. No clear instructions were issued by the Cantonment Magistrate to the soldiers whom he appointed to shoot dogs. Apparently the soldiers were free to shoot what dog they liked, for Private Talbot said his own ideas of decency guided him in killing and sparing dogs. In fact he invaded a farm and shot two dogs that had been tied up. In answer to a question by the Chief Judge, Talbot said that Captain Barry, the Cantonment Magistrate, merely asked him to shoot stray dogs and that he, the witness, had received no instructions. A dog that was tied up was not a stray dog and yet it was shot. The cantonment boundary was not known by the dog-hunters and it was not shown to them either. As the Hon'ble the Chief Judge pithily observed the soldiers 'were just let loose', and the unsatisfactory state of affairs in regard to the shooting of stray dogs within cantonment limits was 'apparently more the fault of the superior authority than of the dog-shooter.' Then again Inspector Beaty is reported to have told Talbot that before the month was out he would get mobbed. We do not know whether it was right for an Inspector of Police to frighten like this soldiers who are none too slow in using their guns against a defenceless population. There is no doubt that the cantonment authorities are responsible for the mistakes of soldiers. But unless the soldier is made to feel his responsibility, tragedies of this kind with their attendant sense of wrong and discontent will not cease."

"Private Peskett, who was accused of the murder of a villager named Natha, a resident of village Tajpur near Mian Mir, was placed on his trial in the Chief Court before the Chief Judge and a jury on the 26th instant. The facts of the case are these. Peskett accompanied by another soldier named Talbot was out shooting stray dogs. At Tajpur a number of villagers accused them of killing a village dog and an altercation followed. According to the accused the villagers assumed a threatening attitude. Talbot said he was assaulted. In self-defence and also to protect Talbot Peskett fired and Natha was killed. This happened on the 26th of May. Peskett was arrested and charged with murder, or, in the alternative, culpable homicide. After two days' trial the jury found the accused not guilty and he was acquitted. In commenting upon cases of this nature it is necessary that the utmost self-restraint should be exercised so that feelings of race and colour may not be excited. But it may be very well asked whether in this case the right of private defence could extend to the infliction of death. Admitted that the villagers were threatening and hostile can it for one moment be suggested that they would have murdered Peskett and his companion? They carried no lethal or other weapons and were unarmed. We do not remember one single case in which Punjabi villagers have been accused of murdering a European soldier in broad day light. There might have been a scuffle and the soldiers might have received bodily injury, but would that have justified the use of their rifles? If a man finds a burglar in his house and is about to be attacked by him he would not be justified in shooting the burglar unless he apprehends that his own life is in danger. It is only in extreme cases that the right of private defence extends to the causing of death is self-defence A woman may justifiably kill a man who attempts to violate her chastity. A man may kill another who is about to murder him. But when a man apprehends nothing worse than a common assault—and nothing more is alleged in this case—there can be no justification for his killing his assailant. It was not a case of death by accident or misadventure in a struggle, but a deliberate act which was likely to, and did, cause death. The villagers were unarmed; the soldiers carried loaded rifles. The villagers had no thought of murdering the soldiers. At the worst it would have been a case of simple assault. When Peskett fired he knew he might kill a man and he did so. Nevertheless, the finding of the jury is that he committed no offence."

The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 3rd July 1912 :—

"The acquittal of Private Peskett by the Chief Court, who killed a villager while surrounded by a threatening mob of people at Tajpur, will come as a surprise. The villagers had no lethal weapons in their hands. The soldier had consequently no reasonable fear of death. If in exercise of his right of private defence, he had tried to overawe his assailants by firing his gun and even wounded any of them in the legs or arms, he would have been perfectly justified. But one cannot understand how a man can be justified in killing one of his assailants, when his own life is not in danger. If Private Peskett has only committed a rash act in murdering the man, even this would subject him to some punishment. He is, however, entirely acquitted and this has thus given rise to general surprise."

Police mal-practices in the Punjab.

28. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 2nd July 1912 :—

"The Chief Court judgment in the Ferozepore torture case reveals certain irregularities and even mal-practices on the part of the police. Among others may be singled out the following glaring instances:—(1) Bishen Singh, the chief culprit, a private individual, could not have had for his conduct any other motive than that of gratifying a private grudge. (2) It has been found that the police were using the opportunity to extort money and, in fact, did extort Rs. 20 from Chetu's family for themselves. (3) In pursuing Chetu's mother and Hira Singh when they were going to Ferozepore and in compelling them to return to the village, Bishen Singh and a constable were acting under written orders from Ibrahim, the Head Constable. (4) In so doing, the Head Constable must have known that something had happened which was to be kept from the notice of the Ferozepore authorities at all risk. (5) The unfortunate victim was confined in Bishen Singh's havel with the connivance of Kamukhia Rami, police constable; and apparently the Head Constable did not object to such confinement and took no steps to have him removed to the police station. (6) There appears to have been a determined effort on the part of both the Head Constable and the Sub-Inspector to hush up the affair and make it appear that the case was really one of suicide. All these have been pointedly referred to by the Hon'ble Judges in the course of their judgment. The judgment raises the point—but does not answer it—whether other persons were concerned in the affair or not. However that may be, the fact remains that not only the police played into the hands of Bishen Singh to help him to gratify a private grudge against Chetu, but used the opportunity to extort money, and some of them were privy to the misdeeds and were even anxious to suppress them. In the face of the remarks made by the Chief Court the Government cannot any longer delay the institution of formal proceedings against the individuals concerned. A mere departmental white-washing will not meet the ends of justice. Nor will the Government have acquitted itself by visiting a private individual with the maximum punishment under the law for an offence which limb of the law permitted him to commit and tried to suppress."

(g)—Postal matters.

Complaint against some Muhammadan postal clerks at Rawalpindi.

29. The Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 22nd (received on the 27th) June 1912, publishes a note headed "Improper doings of Muhammadan clerks of the Postal Department, Rawalpindi." It reports that the replacement of the Muslim Superintendent of Post Offices, Rawalpindi Division, by Sardar Bhagat Singh, M.A., has enraged the Muhammadan clerks employed in the above Department. They have, it adds, begun to do such improper things that, if prompt notice is not taken of the same, the consequences are likely to prove the reverse of desirable. Continuing, the paper states that (some time back) Signaller Fazl Rahman wrote to Inspector Muqbul Ilahi—and that also on Government paper—to ask the latter to see that no Hindu entered the (local postal) service. A Muhammadan clerk also received a letter (? from the signaller) asking him to harrass Hindu messengers into leaving the service and making room for Musalmans. It is, however, to be regretted that neither the Postmaster-General nor the Postmaster, Rawalpindi, have as yet taken any notice of these improper proceedings. There can be no doubt that the latter officer reposes great faith in the Muslim Inspector and clerks, and that the last named can make him do whatever they like. But when there exist letters written by Muhammadan clerks—and that also on Government paper—in connection with the above "conspiracy," why have no enquiries been made into the matter? This can only mean that the Postmaster wishes to hush up the affair, but it is to be hoped that the Postmaster-General will take due notice of the conduct of the Muslim clerks concerned.

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Parkash newspaper.

30. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 25th June (received on the 2nd July) 1912, has an article headed "Dissemination of seditious ideas; the Parkash inflames (people) against Government." The Editor says that recently he referred to, and attempted to refute, the false charge made by the Parkash against the English that they had introduced flesh-eating among Hindus (lit. into India). Instead, however, of expressing regret at its unbecoming conduct the Parkash asks whether the Arjun has been entrusted by Government with the duty of submitting good (or) bad reports about the press, just as the C. I. D. does. After ridiculing the Parkash for asking this question, the Editor of the Arjun asserts that some people in the Arya Samaj have not only been laying stress on political agitation, but are also engaged in unholy and dangerous efforts to cause feelings of resentment and distrust in Samajic circles against the British Government. Continuing, he reprints a passage from an article which appeared in the Parkash, dated the 27th February (last), under the heading "Find a solution to the real difficulties of the Gurukula." The quotation is to the effect that, at the time of its introduction into India, the Gurukula system of education was a national one, i.e., it was recognised by the Government of the time; (but) that the present Government favours a different educational system and is not prepared to render "us" any help in respect of "our" system of education; that for the present "our" Government, from which we can expect help, consists of the Arya community; but (lit. and) that the upper section of this community, which possesses a feeling heart, is unwilling, through fear of being considered seditious by Government, to venture near the Samaj or render help to any of its works. Commenting on the extract the Arjun remarks that the words of the Parkash cannot but prejudice those people against Government who are not cognisant of the truth. The said paper tells its readers in plain language that "our" Government is not that which now rules over India; but that it consists of the Arya community which gives money for the Gurukula. If such ideas continue to be disseminated in the Arya Samaj they are likely to lead to dangerous results, which should be patent to all. After observing that the remarks of the Parkash about the upper section of the Arya community also constitute a charge against Government, the Editor says that the paper named is engaged in disseminating in the Arya Samaj not only political, but also extremely dangerous and anti-British ideas. Next he regrets that none of the authorities of the Samaj should condemn the conduct of the journal in question.

The new capital of India.

31. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 3rd July 1912 :—

"The continuous surprises in the making of the new capital are not wanting in humour but they are not very creditable. At the time of the announcement of the new site it was explicitly stated that the final recommendations and plans would not be made before the town-planners' return from England in the winter. It is however now stated that they have already drawn up a comprehensive lay out plan of the new capital which it is understood has been accepted by the Government. This is a part of the work which the town-planners intended to do in winter. They are going back to England by this mail. But if the site and the general lay out plan have already been approved by the Government, as it appears from the latest announcement, what will be there for the town-planners to do in the winter? We understand that a small Local Government will now be created at Delhi and the preparation of projects will be taken in hand. These preparations require the guidance of administrative insight and practical economy. One of the experts is supposed to be experienced in administrative questions in connection with the building of a new city. He should be here to advise in this matter and the other experts should be also consulted. It is further stated that the experts are now being ably assisted by the officers of the Indian Public Works Department. This is hardly news to any one. We recall Lord Hardinge's desire of adopting the Indian style of architecture in Government buildings in the new capital and the recent welcome announcement that Indian architectural plans for some buildings will be invited. But if the Government leave the entire construction in the hands of the Public Works Department there will be little chance of complete success of indigenous architecture in Government buildings as desired by the Viceroy. The list of these unaccountable inconsistencies however does not end here. The useless waste on the temporary works at Delhi has already been justly criticised in the Press and it may be recalled that in the recent debate on the Government of India Bill special reference was made to it. The works of temporary Delhi have not yet advanced very far and much useless expenditure might have been avoided if the temporary constructions were made more solid and in the close vicinity of the permanent capital. But now it is stated that the quarters in course of construction at Delhi for clerks serving in the Government offices may be permanent buildings in that city of changing sites. When the Secretariats are built in the new city, it is undestood a light railway will connect the clerks' quarters with their offices. It is a clever idea, but we wonder whether the inventors of this scheme have taken into consideration the cost of the maintenance of a light railway. The scheme may appear plausible but it will be perfectly preposterous if put into practice. Besides the establishment of a light railway it is just possible that other arrangements also would have to be made. Municipal and conservancy arrangements should also be necessary and these will be separate as there will be at least a distance of 8 miles between the clerks' quarters and the permanent capital. The clerks in the Government offices are numerous and they will certainly make a large colony with corresponding requirements. The Durbar area has been condemned on account of its being unhealthy. Why should the clerks be forced to stay in such a locality? Whatever the new capital may ultimately be it is at present the capital of the Kingdom of Topsy-Turvydom. Day after day we hear of new incomprehensible schemes. It has been a series of surprises throughout. We wonder what further schemes have the Government or the experts still in view."

A Press Panchayat for the Punjab.

32. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 4th July 1912 :—

"We publish elsewhere an open letter addressed by Sardar Bahadur Sardar Dyal Singh Man, President of the Council of Regency, Faridkot State, about instituting a Press Panchayat in the Punjab. His sentiments are excellent and the offer he makes of standing as a hostage to Government for the Pressmen is worthy of appreciation. On the face of it such a scheme obviously would be most beneficial, and we wish it could be established with a view to bringing about a better understanding between the press critics and those criticised. Any attempt that is made to reform the Punjab Press is quite as welcome to us as an attempt to reform Government—if not more so. Any corrective and righteous influence exercised through a body of the Pressmen themselves on the individual members thereof, would be preferable to action under the Press Act. But in the absence of a detailed scheme it is impossible to say anything about it. The proposed Panchayat may be a just and welcome institution, or it may be turned into an organ for stifling public voice. If the former, its working should be based upon the recognised principles of Press freedom. If those who form it and guide it follow Chapter II of J. S. Mill's 'Liberty,' viz., 'Liberty of Thought and Discussion,' we think, no difficulty will be found to work it. If, on the other hand, they borrow the ideas of those who pass the Press Act of 1910, we must confess, that no journalist worth the name will join it. But we are sure that a better understanding between the Pressmen and the outside world, including the official, would lead to excellent results. The journalist with a function will only be too glad to avail himself of it. Only the proposers must put aside silken ropes intended to bridle and meet the knights of the pen with logic and facts. It must be remembered that even the Roman Catholic Church at the time of the canonization of a saint, listens to a Devil's advocate, because the holiest of men, it appeared, could 'not be admitted to heavenly honours until all that the Devil could say against him is known and weighed.' If the Punjab journalist is no more than the Devil's advocate, it well becomes official saints to listen to him and weigh what he says, instead of shutting him out summarily."

I.—Politics.

The Turco-Italian war.

1. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 29th June 1912, publishes a communication headed "Italy's dangerous moves." The writer—"Shaukat" of Meerut—says that the European powers are using Italy as a pawn on the political chessboard. He scouts the assertion that her capture of some Turkish islands can in no way affect the war in Tripoli. The Turks have not been able to turn her out of their African possession even after six months' continuous war; while they are in a state of unpreparedness, she can boast of warships; consequently it is suicidal on their part to fight her. This was why Italy's supporters egged her on to invade Tripoli. Since European monarchs commenced the war, they alone can mediate between the combatants, and in any case the Turks are certain to prove the losers.

Russia and Persia.

2. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 1st (received on the 8th) July 1912, has a note headed "A grand meeting of the Calcutta Muhammadans," referring to the meeting, held on the 13th ultimo, at which the recent Muscovite doings in Persia were condemned and a resolution passed asking Government to permit Indian Muhammadans to go as volunteers to those countries ( ? Tripoli and Persia) in which their afflicted co-religionists sorely needed their help. If, says the Muin, Muhammadans all over the country were to unite in asking for such permission from Government, their demand would be granted. In the event, however, of the Government of India returning an unfavourable reply to them they should send a powerful deputation to England, to knock at the door of Parliament and petition His Majesty the King Emperor. At least the sympathies of "our" Sovereign and the British public will be moved in "our" favour. The writer deplores Meshed shrine being trampled under the hoofs of Russian horses and the mosques being converted into stables, but it is worse to see Indian Muhammadans content themselves with abusing Russians at public meetings for such outrages, or with arranging to observe annual mourning, like effeminate and cowardly men. They must arise in their might and go to England like a whirlwind, making the welkin ring with their cries. Let them see then what will happen.

Lord Kitchener's Rule in Egypt.

3. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 11th July 1912 :—

"Mr Wilfred Blunt writes to the Manchester Guardian pointing out some of the aggressive features of Lord Kitchener's overlordship in Egypt as leading to future troubles. He says that progress in Egypt has been set back and the policy has been lower than the one-man rule of Lord Cromer. The Khedieve's powers have been curtailed and all real administrative power has passed back as in Lord Cromer's time into the Consul General's hands. He further says that Lord Kitchener has assumed powers and privileges intended to show that England is the absolute master of Egypt. We are afraid Mr. Blunt wholly ignores the extraordinary circumstances created by the Italo-Turkish War and the activities stirred among the militant Islamic populations in neutral lands. Even in India dry bones are astir and we think it unfair to condemn Lord Kitchener without also considering the Pan-Islamic tendencies and activities. However, this is not the occasion for stirring up Moslem opposition and measures ought to be taken to restore contentment to the Egyptian populations."

British rule in India.

4. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 1st (received on the 8th) July 1912, publishes an article headed "Permanence of British rule in India is necessary—II." In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject—(vide paragraph 3 of Selections No. 27), the paper says that, if the revolutionists in India were to raise forces strong enough to drive the English from the country, which however they cannot do, or, if the present Masters of India were to leave it to its own fate, murder and rapine would reign supreme in the land. Next it contends that in the above contingency the sceptre would pass not to Hindus, who are not powerful enough to vanquish their enemy, but to the Muhammadans, who would undoubtedly be supported by the warlike and sturdy tribesmen, now busily equipping themselves with modern arms and gaining experience of warfare by constantly raiding into British territory. The Amir, it adds, would also lend them help. He is gradually arming one crore of Afghans, and could easily send 7 or 8 lakhs of them to India. It is not, moreover, unlikely that a Jehad might be proclaimed in Afghanistan, and that "the revolutionary fire" might spread even to Persia and Central Asia. If the Afghans were to obtain India, they would treat Indian Musalmans as their equals, but, if China or Japan were to conquer this country at the instance of Hindus, the followers of both Islam and Hinduism would fare even worse than they do under the British. In conclusion, it calls upon the revolutionists to ponder over the results that are likely to follow their insane acts, and advises them to give up their crazy ideas and to become loyal and devoted supporters of their present benevolent and kind Government.

Lord Crewe on India.

5. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 29th June 1912, has a leader headed "The Administrative Reforms Bills passed." Adverting to the recent debate in the Lords on the Government of India Bill, the paper remarks that the Swarajists need not feel impatient at Lord Crewe's observation on the colonial form of self-government for this country. If England and India, it adds, trust each other, and if Indians win the confidence of the English, the best interests of this country will have been served.

Writing under the heading "Another settled fact," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 30th June 1912, says that it is an ordinary thing with the present ministry to go back on its word. After referring to the unsettlement by it of Lord Morley's "settled fact," the paper speaks of Lord Crewe's recent remarks in the Upper Chamber about the impossibility of the colonial form of self-government being ever conferred on India. His Lordship, it adds, was perhaps under the impression that, just as Muhammadans kept silent over the severe blow dealt to them through the reversal of the Partition of Bengal, that noisy collection of revolutionary schemers, the enlightened Hindus and the section of the Calcutta Anglo-Indians which is displeased with him, would also take no notice of his announcement. The hopes bred in Indians by the Government of India's despatch of August last and the Secretary of State's "significant silence" (on the subject of provincial autonomy) have been dashed to the ground by the remark that India could never hope to obtain self-government. After quoting extracts from the Tribune, the Amrita Bazar Patrika and the Statesman, taking exception to Lord Crewe's words, the Editor remarks that India can remain a British possession only if Great Britain regards India as part and parcel of herself, and reposes confidence in her; and the only form, in which this confidence can be shown, is for England to permit "us" to manage "our" own affairs under English supervision. India cannot for ever remain in her present condition, and, if her children bring themselves into line with the English in matters physical, intellectual, moral and economic—which they are certain to do one day,—they should no longer be kept in their present state of subjection. The time will come when India will be a self-governing country under British suzerainty, which will, however, be preserved by Muhammadans.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 1st July 1912, says that since the Surat embroglio the final goal of the National Congress has consisted in securing the colonial form of self-government for India. After remarking that "other sections of the population also" approve of this goal, the paper observes that Lord Crewe's words are likely to render the people uneasy and to deal a severe blow to the influence which the Congress has gained during the past few years owing to its present policy of moderation.

The Civil and Military News (Ludhiana), of the 1st (received on the 8th) July 1912, says that British statesmen think and rightly so—that India is inhabited by different peoples, which are, through feelings of religious animosity, always ready to exterminate one another, and that if India were removed from under British protection murder and rapine would reign supreme in the country. It adds that Lord Crewe's words are likely to serve as a wet blanket to the supporters of the National Congress, but that these men are not likely to give up their ideal of Swaraj.

The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 4th July 1912, publishes a cartoon, in which Lord Crewe is seen dragging the National Congress down a staircase, which leads up to "The sun of Swaraj." In the letter-press the paper says that it remains to be seen what reply the Congress will make to His Lordship.

Elsewhere the paper says that Lord Crewe's speech has dashed to the ground the hopes of Indians of attaining Swaraj some day. Are the people of this country, it asks, such a worthless lot that they can never expect to secure a boon like self-government? It concedes that they are as yet unfit to manage their own affairs, and that they cannot obtain Swaraj unless all classes learn to trust one another. There can, nevertheless, be no denying the fact that they are not wanting in ability, and that, if they remain under British protection for some time longer, they will, like the English, become fit to rule themselves. In conclusion, it enquires what necessity there was for Lord Crewe to deny Swaraj to Indians, when they wish to have it only under British suzerainty.

"The explicit declaration of the Secretary of State for India that it is impossible to grant self-government to this country has come as a surprise to a large number of Indian politicians. To Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji belongs the credit of fixing autonomy for India on the colonial lines as the goal of the political ambitions of Indians. The ideal has been condemned in India. It has been denounced as impossible of attainment by leading statesmen in England. But, these facts notwithstanding, it has been cherished by many an Indian, who welcomed the 3rd paragraph of the Despatch on Indian Changes as a recognition on the part of the Government of India of the practicability of the ideal. The passage held forth as the aim of the Government of India the development of local self-government 'until at last India would consist of a number of administrations, autonomous in all provincial affairs, with the Government of India above them all, and possessing powers to interfere in case of misgovernment, but ordinarily restricting their functions to matters of Imperial concern' The whole paragraph seemed to suggest that Lord Hardinge and his colleagues had ultimate self-government for India in their mind when they prepared the famous Despatch. It was taken in this sense by Lord Curzon. A similar meaning was attached to it by other politicians. And though Lord Crewe tried to give it a different interpretation, the assertion of Mr. Montagu at Cambridge, that the passage in question represented the trend of British policy and set forth the aim of British statesmanship in India, which was to create a number of autonomous governments under the superintendence of the Government of India, appeared to set all controversy at rest. The recent declaration of Lord Crewe, however, has revived the discussion and different interpretations are being read into the paragraph by different schools of politics. One thing is, however, clear. Whatever the real meaning of the Government of India, a majority of British politicians, along with the moderate section of Indian politicians, are averse to the Indians entertaining the idea of self-government modelled on the lines of British colonies. Lord Morley was an able man and a truer Radical than the present Secretary of State. And it was Lord Morley who emphatically declared that 'for as long a time as my poor imagination can pierce through, for so long a time will the Government of India remain absolute.' Lord Crewe has only followed the lead of 'honest John' in stating that 'I see no future for India on those lines. I think the experiment is one which it is impossible to try.' The recent declaration of the Secretary of State need not have caused so much surprise or disappointment.

"Our politicians have not, however, given sufficient attention to the reason vouchsafed by Lord Morley for his explicit repudiation of the ideal. In one of his speeches he stated that the present state of things must continue so long as the races inhabiting the country have not evolved a political personality. This clearly means that India cannot get self-government so long as the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans do not improve. The spread of education, the enjoyment of common rights and the subjection to common disabilities, all this was expected to break down the barriers of race and creed. But so far from that being the case, a contrary spectacle is to be witnessed. The relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, Bengalees and Beharees, are becoming more and more embittered. In some Provinces Hindus who lived on amicable terms with their Musalman neighbours now look upon them as foreigners. Ideals of nationality are being evolved which are foreign to Muslim sentiment, which take no consideration of Muslim feelings. Urdu, the Lingua Franca of India, is being substituted for by (sic) Hindi in British Provinces and Native States, and even the usually far-seeing politicians like the Gaekwar are seen starting Hindi schools in parts of the country where Deonagri is a foreign tongue. Histories are being compiled which exalt Hindus at the expense of Muslims and dramas prepared pouring ridicule on the chastity of Muslim princesses. Boycott is the reply of the Hindus if the Musalmans try to induce their brethren to take to trade and commerce. And similar response is returned if they endeavour to propagate their religion. It has never been contended that the adequate representation granted to Musalmans on the Legislative Councils has injured Hindu interest. Yet it is this adequate representation, that is made a cause for complaint. It has never been claimed that cow-killing is one of the causes of Hindu-Muhammadan differences. Yet attacks are now made on the Musalmans if they slaughter cows even in private. It is known that Indian Musalmans take a deep interest in the affairs of Persia and Turkey. But rejoicings are openly expressed if any attempt is made to rob these Muslim States of their integrity and independence or of their territories, and no hesitation manifested in declaring that Hindu-Muhammadan union will come about only in the event of the utter humiliation of the Musalmans at home and abroad. There are, it is true, some far-seeing statesmen in our midst who are above these differences, who would like the establishment of better relations between the two great communities in India. But their voices are like the voice of one crying in the wilderness. Their views may be acclaimed, but they are not acted upon. The tension between the two communities is increasing and giving cause for sorrow to the well-wishers of the country in almost every Province.

"But it is on the establishment of federation between Hindus and Muhammadans that the ultimate good of India depends. Self-government is a vain dream unless this consummation is realised. The energies of our politicians, therefore, should be directed to this ideal. Autonomy may be a goal impossible of attainment. But when the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans are brotherly, there is every hope of increased administrative powers being granted to this country. Let union between Hindus and Muhammadans, therefore, be the goal of our political ambitions for the present as well as the future."

"Lord Crewe's repudiation of any promise of self-governing powers to Indians on the colonial model would not have evoked the intense feeling in India it has now done had His Lordship not been so positive in his statement for all times to come. He might have contented himself by saying that India is not qualified for any representative or self-governing powers for the present and that unless the people show by their capacity and fitness that they can maintain a purely representative form of Government, the question cannot be raised. The Government have, however, committed themselves to a policy of provincial decentralisation with almost autonomous powers under the present constitution. Surely even Lord Crewe cannot maintain that the policy of the Government is to convert provincial rulers under this system into so many Nawabs of the Great Mogul. But who wanted Lord Crewe to solve the political problems of the people of India 'for the future'? The question certainly was not relevant. What Lord Curzon wanted to know was whether the Government had committed themselves to the grant of self-government with autonomy. That arose from the present policy of the Government and has a practical bearing. It is a question of the distant future about which no statesman need trouble himself much. That Lord Crewe could not see any future for India for self-government on colonial lines has therefore given offence to India and it is worth while to examine if there is any positive defect in Indian character or disqualification which impedes progress on the most accepted and progressive lines."

The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 6th July 1912 :—

"From the giddying heights of the Hopeland to which the people had been helped on to mount by the King Emperor's blessed hands, there has been a terrible-knock down and that too at the hands of His Majesty's own Secretary of State. What a speedy turn of the wheel!

"But what is a knock-down to one set of people will prove a pick-me-up to another set. The malcontents had been put to bed with lullabies of enlarged council representations and were transported in dreams to the Lotus-land of Colonial self-government. The opiate of hope conveyed in the King Emperor's messages had left them limp and nerveless with the after effects of intoxication.

"Lord Crewe has most inopportunely come in with his whipping pronouncements to wake them up from their slumbers. Tilak and Aravinda with their supposed doctrines of self-government without the flag are rotting in oblivion. Surenderanath and Gokhale with their homilies of self-government within the flag will fare no better. The Secretary of State has knocked the bottom out of the political propaganda of the Congress and its apostles. 'Onward ho!', prompts he from behind the wings, 'once more with agitation and fermentation!' What a powerful pick-me-up the sleeping dogs have been served with again!

"Denuded of all adornments the plain meaning of 'Lord Crewe's pronouncements is that ye 300 millions of human beings throbbing and pulsating with hopes and aspirations of citizenship of the British Empire as you are, ye shall never get it. British subjection without the honour and privileges of British subjects shall be your lot for ever'!

"Those of us that have been doing our level best to allay the unrest of the past, that have been mediating between the Government and the people, that have been bringing about good understanding, peace, and content in the land by our endeavours in good faith, we have been given notice to quit, to hide our faces from our people for fear of being disgraced, and to leave the field to 'our betters' the exit, secret agitators, to the dark frowning discontented man.

"The troubled waters of mistrust are once more rising high in the people's heart. All the good effects of the King Emperor's visit, his darshan and sharvan are being annulled at a stroke.

"At such a crisis we appeal to His Majesty directly to wipe off the evil effects of the Secretary of State's words by one definite practical step in the contrary direction. A stitch in time will save nine. Our appeal is to Lord Hardinge also whose good heart and good intention the people have entire faith to come to the rescue by one more of his daring strokes of genius that the people may have heart again.

"We of the Punjab also appeal to Sir Louis Dane to intercede on behalf of his people and urge a positive remedy for the wounded feelings of his faithful subjects."

The Indian gold reserve.

6. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 29th June 1912, publishes a note headed "The Treasury of the Secretary of State for India." Referring to an article recently published in the British Empire Review on the above subject, it says that the said treasury contained £1,853,995 18*s*. 3*d*. (excluding £11,600,000 on account of the value of the Indian gold reserve) on the 8th March last. After remarking that all this Indian money has been lent in London at the low rate of interest of about Rs. 2½ per cent. and that the names of the borrowers have been kept secret, it complains that the proceeding is assuredly open to objection, seeing that Rs. 4 per cent. per annum can easily be realised in India. It does not, besides, become the Secretary of State to engage in money-lending and to keep the money out of India for the special benefit of London bankers, when Indian traders and mill-owners are better entitled to profit themselves by the money and can also pay a higher rate of interest. It, therefore, appears advisable that the Secretary of State should allow a considerable portion of the gold reserve to remain in India, so that Indian traders (also) may derive benefit from it.

The Public Service Commission.

7. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 11th July 1912:—

"Our Simla correspondent informed us on Tuesday of the possibility of an official announcement on the proposed Public Service Commission in the course of this month. He also stated that according to private advices received by the last mail the appointment of Sir K. G. Gupta and the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale as members of the Commission might be looked forward to. The Simla correspondent of the Hindu (Madras) adds to the list the names of Babu Surendra Nath Banerjea and the Hon'ble Justice Sir Sakaran Nair. Among Muhammadans, he thinks Mr. Ebrahim Rahimatoollah and Mr. Mazhar-ul-Haque 'ought to meet the requirements of the Commission.' These are, of course, mere suggestions, but even as such they seem to be defective in essential respects. A Royal Commission ought to be fully representative in character; and one of its objects should be to ascertain the peculiar wants and difficulties of the non-regulation Provinces. As an instance in point we are entitled to ask whether the Punjab is ever to continue as a non-regulation Province and whether the claims of its progressive communities should continue to be subordinated to the primitive requirements of an agglomeration of unprogressive tribes pouring into it from across the border. There is no knowing whether the Punjab will in any way be represented on the Commission. There does not seem to be any disposition among the men in authority to consult the wishes of the leaders of this Province. The Aitchison Commission of 1886-87 was composed of fourteen members, exclusive of the President and the Secretary. Of these four were Hindus and two Muhammadans. The Hon'ble Mr. Romesh Chander Mitter represented Bengal, the Raja of Binga represented Oudh, and Messrs. Salem Ramaswami Mudaliar and Krishnaji Lukshman Nulkar the Southern and Western Presidencies. There was no Indian to represent the Punjab and the Central Provinces. We hope that blunder would not be repeated on the present occasion. As a result of past neglect the Hindus representing the intelligence, wealth, and enterprise of this Province are now subject to innumerable disabilities. A repetition of that blunder on the present occasion will create a sense of despair in the progressive sections of the community. We do not overlook the fact that the commission should not become unweildy; but there are matters of Provincial interest and Provincial importance which can be ascertained only by those belonging to this Province. If it is not possible to appoint an Indian to represent this Province as permanent member of the commission, we venture to suggest for the consideration of the Government the desirability of appointing two members on the commission when it visits this Province for enquiry. Men of experience and knowledge like Sir P. C. Chatterji andDiwan Narendra Nath can throw a flood of light on the departmental vagaries of this Province. We hope the matter will receive the earnest consideration of the Government of India."

Indians and patriotism.

8. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 6th July 1912 :—

"The separatist tendency in the Indian nature is a matter of national complaint and the source of despair to all patriots. Disintegration rather than combination seems to be the genius of the race. But nowhere it is more in evidence than in the Punjab. One would suspect the Punjabis were never a homogeneous people. That perhaps the ever-recurring inroads from Central Asia hardly allowed them to solidarise into one race. But the closing of the passes by the British Government would seem to have had the effect of insulating Punjab from the Asiatic continent and making the Punjabis evoke susceptibilities of true patriotism and a feeling of racial oneness at last. However the momentum of fighting of sect against sect, community against community, party against party, clique against clique, and of each against the other—is not over yet; and perhaps it will take several decades of education, self-searching and discipline to cool it d own, and for Punjab to attain the normal temperature of nationality with other races of India.

"Yet there are men in the soil of Punjab who are sincere in their wishes for patriotic actions and patriotic discipline, and their number is growing. We should like to draw their attention to one point round which they must rally if they are ever to achieve any success in nation-formation. It is to the co-ordination of their personal wills to the wills of others.

"It goes against the grain of most Punjabis to surrender their own wills to the wills of other individuals, parties, communities or sects. Hence we constantly witness in Punjab the unseemly sight of each striving to rise at the expense of others, of men of the same party defaming each other, people of the same sect forming into newer and newer factions, representatives of the same people vilifying one another and thereby making failures of institutions, societies and religious or political bodies."

* * * * * * *

Sir Louis Dane's successor.

9. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 7th July 1912 :—

* * * * * * *

"Whilst on this point we should like to make it clear to His Excellency the Viceroy that if public opinion among the people had any voice in nominating a successor to Sir Louis Dane, the choice of the Province would fall on Mr. E. D. Maclagan who is popular and whose selection would be acclaimed with as much pleasure in all Indian circles as has been that of Sir James Meston in the United Provinces."

Employment of Indian soldiers abroad.

10. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 6th July 1912 :—

"It is reported that Lord Kitchener has asked for an increase in the British garrison in Egypt. If British soldiers are not available the choice falls on Indian troops. Unless the political situation in Egypt and the Mediterranean changes, it is almost sure that Lord Kitchener will insist upon increasing the defensive forces of Egypt and the chances are that India will be called upon to meet the demand for more men in the army. The Indian Army has been called upon in the past to make up the deficiency in the defensive forces of Egypt and this was strongly resented in India. But the reason of the resentment has now disappeared and there is no objection to the employment of Indian troops out of India. Formerly whenever Indian troops were sent out they were supposed to be employed to safeguard the interests of India and the Indian exchequer had to pay for their upkeep. But since the outcry in India after the last Egyptian campaign it has been decided that the charges for regiments despatched abroad for Imperial purposes should be borne by the Imperial Government. Mr. Gokhale has repeatedly pointed out that if the Government of India can temporarily spare a number of Indian troops or lend them for a certain purpose out of India they might be very justly altogether dispensed with. This argument has remained unanswerable."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Sikh scripture.

11. The Jiwan Tat (Lahore), of the 30th June 1912, has a letter headed "Examination of the Granth and Janam Sakhi of Sikhs." The writer makes quotations to show that, according to the teaching of the Granth, it is God who makes people take to evil ways and that He disregards the dictates of justice. He also cites verses from the scripture named to contend that its teachings go against one another, and that they promise salvation and several other blessings to man in return only for reciting the name of God, which he says, makes Him out to be a very unjust being. In conclusion, the writer asks what useful purpose it can serve to recite teachings which clash with truth.

Muhammad and Dayanand.

12. The Indar (Lahore), of the 28th June (received on the 5th July) 1912, has a note headed "Muhammad's household life and Swami Dayanand's Sanyasa." Dayanandis, it says, contend that the Swami was superior to the Prophet, seeing that, while the latter was a married man, the former led a life of celibacy. In the paper's opinion, however, Muhammad's household life has proved more useful for the world than Dayanand's Sanyasa. It was owing to the founder of the Arya Samaj having been a Sanyasi that he taught a doctrine like that of niyog. He was, therefore, inferior to Muhammad.

The Arya Samaj.

13. The Indar (Lahore), of the 28th June (received on the 5th July) 1912, publishes an article headed "Will not our Dayanandi brothers come to their senses even now?" The paper says that it has for a long time past been warning Dayanandis not to offend (the followers of) other religions. The authorities also, it adds, have now begun to take most serious notice of the above conduct of the followers of Dayanand. The Magistrate of Pilibhit (United Provinces) recently bound down the office bearers of the local Arya Samaj to keep the peace for some such fault on their part. Again, the authorities concerned have prohibited Dayanandis from delivering lectures at Patna; while, according to the Musafar (Agra), they are said to have been similarly treated in the Bharatpur State. After contending that Dayanandis must have been to blame in all these cases, the paper says that they are in the habit of mercilessly attacking the founders of other religions, and that this spirit has been bred in them by the existing Satyarth Parkash. Next it opines that, so long as this mischievous book is not disowned by them or proscribed by Government, there can be no peace in "the religious world of Upper India." Continuing, it says that Dayanandis are reported to be in trouble even in the Dholpore State, and that they must have committed some fault there also. Proceeding, it refers to the Arjun's remarks against the Parkash, and goes on to say that Dayanandis have now openly stepped into the arena of dangerous politics.

The Vedas and revelation.

14. The Indar (Lahore), of the 28th June (received on the 5th July) 1912, publishes an article headed "The Vedas and revelation." In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 20 of Selections No. 25), the Editor observes that, if the Dayanandis' conception of revelation were accepted as true, God would be reduced to the position of a frog of the rainy season. He denies the existence of the God believed in by them, and says that the parrot, the maina, the harmonium, the stones of a flour mill, and the creaking of his shoes are preferable to such a God. Next he endeavours to refute the arguments advanced by Arya Samajists in support of their theory of revelation, and proves that God speaks to His sons even now. He further remarks that it is foolish and blasphemous to believe that all the mantras in the existing Vedas were revealed by God, seeing that some of them "proceed from mean feelings and low things," while not a few come from goats, sheep, camels, cows, &c., although he certainly believes the remainder to have been revealed by God.

Elsewhere the Editor states that the Arjun has challenged him to a discussion on the subject of the Vedas and revelation. Will the Editor of that paper say then, he asks, whether one should believe in a God who is stricken dumb, and goes to sleep or expires after having spoken once (Aryas contend that God revealed the Vedas in the beginning of the world and that no revelations have been received from Him since)? Does he accept the stupid Arya conception of revelation and can he say whether the Rishis, to whom the Vedas were revealed, possessed any sort of knowledge before that event, or whether they could, like animals, only eat, drink and bleat?

The Satyarth Parkash.

15. The Indar (Lahore), of the 28th June (received on the 5th July) 1912, has a paragraph headed "The existing Satyarth Parkash in the Government court." After reiterating his charges against the Satyarth Parkash now in circulation, the Editor states that, according to report, Dayanandis have decided to institute a case against him. The prosecution, he adds, will afford Government an opportunity to decide whether or not the existing Satyarth Parkash deserves to be confiscated under the Press Act. After remarking that one Muhammadan, one Christian, and one Sikh Barrister should conduct the case (on behalf of the defence), he contends that the book in question deserves proscription, seeing that it contains dangerously offensive remarks about the founders of (non-Vedic) religions and passes unlawful criticism on the British Government.

Elsewhere the same paper has a note headed "The author of the existing Satyarth Parkash was a liar." The paper says that recently it published a few lines about the author having been a hypocrite. After remarking that it now wishes to prove that he was also a liar, it quotes an extract from the Satyarth Parkash now in circulation. The quotation is to the effect that the English allow shoes made in their own country to be taken into offices and courts; that the permission does not extend to Indian-made shoes; and that this should be sufficient to show that they place a higher value on shoes made in their own land than on the inhabitants of foreign countries. Commenting on the same, the paper says that it leaves no room for doubt that the words could have been penned, not by a religious man, but by a politician and a liar. He has unjustly accused the English of respecting the people of this country even less than their shoes. On the contrary, adds the paper, Swami Dayanand has praised British rule in his Satyarth Parkash published in 1875.

Banka Dyal and the recent controversy about the presidency of the Hindu Conference.

16. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 28th June 1912, publishes an article from Dina Nath's pen headed "It is equally hard for me to speak or to hold my tongue." The writer begins by deploring the recent controversy about the presidency of the next session of the Panjab Hindu Conference. Next he says that only an ill-informed, mean-minded or evil-intentioned person can charge Lala Lajpat Rai with misappropriation of public money. After remarking that the Lala has given thousands of rupees for works for the public good out of his earnings, he states that Pandit Rambhaj Dat may be relied upon to refund to the public Rs. 163 (not about Rs. 3,000, as his critics say) on account of the value of the postage stamps received by him in respect of the issue of the Hindustan, which was to have consisted of one lakh of copies. As to the accusations preferred against Lala Jaswant Rai, Dina Nath can assert from personal knowledge that there is not an iota of truth in them. The Lala received about Rs. 5,000 in aid of the Panjabee Defence Fund, and he not only spent every pie of it on persons accused of political offences, but also himself subscribed nearly Rs. 2,500 towards the fund. Again, his net earnings from the Panjabee amounted to Rs. 25,000, and this amount he set apart for the benefit of the public by means of a document which was drawn up after consultation with Dina Nath, and is now lying sealed with a Hindu barrister. The trust is administered by a committee composed of two lawyers and an Arya graduate. After stating that the interest from it has been used for the public benefit for the last two years, the writer goes on to say that the Editor of the Jhang Sial has been pouring "the oil of mischief and falsehood on the fire of the controversy" in order to win fame and prosperity. He holds Dina Nath responsible for the articles which have appeared in the Hindustan, on the controversy referred to, although the latter was not in (editorial) charge of the paper at the time of their publication. His sole offence is that his is a successful and widely circulated paper, and it was for this offence that Banka Dyal girt up his loins to abuse and defame him and to try to injure the Hindustan, with the further object perhaps of securing a few hundred more subscribers for his own paper. Dina Nath explains that if he had kept silent over this there might have been misunderstanding (? about him), and injury would have been inflicted on the Hindustan, which is "a useful force for the Hindu community." He has, therefore, been compelled to make known to the Hindu public the unpleasant truth that Banka Dyal is a most dishonest, mean, hypocritical, lying, immoral, and treacherous person. Five years ago, he adds, this man started a fund in aid of Pindi Das and succeeded in collecting over Rs 350, which, with interest and compound-interest, should now swell to about Rs. 600. Banka Dyal says that, of this amount, a sum of Rs. 100 was subscribed by him towards the Arabindo Ghosh Defence Fund. He had no right to spend any part of the collections in this way, and, to make matters worse, he alleges the receipt for the remittance has been mislaid, nor can he say whether he remitted the money by post or through some bank. As to the balance, he states that he is in debt and will pay it (to Pindi Das) when he can afford to do so. When asked why he did not deposit the collections in some bank and what right he had to put them to his own private use, he can only hold his tongue. This incident alone should suffice to prove him to be a mean, dishonest, and deceitful man; but it does not stand by itself. Last year he ordered some (printing) stones, etc., from "Master" Atma Ram, Proprietor of the Sewak Steam Press, (Lahore). The articles were despatched to him by rail, while the railway receipt was sent by value-payable post. He, however, refused to take delivery of the receipt, but got the stones, etc., from the railway station by executing an idemnity bond. "The Master" went to the writer and Mahashai Krishan (Editor of the Parkash) and told of his intention to prosecute Banka Dyal for cheating. They, however, prevented him from launching the prosecution, and a few days later he received a promise from Banka Dyal at Lahore in the presence of certain respectable persons to be paid his dues at an early date. After remarking that the promise has not been redeemed up to the present, Dina Nath observes that it would be untrue to suppose that Banka Dyal is without funds and is, therefore, compelled to withhold payment. He has recently furnished a security of Rs. 2,000 and invested another three or four thousand in (printing) machines, an engine, etc. The fact of the matter is that his intentions are not honest, and that his "religion" consists in unfairly pocketing other people's money. Here is another incident to bring out this trait in his character. When he was called upon last year to deposit a security of Rs. 1,000 Maulvi Zaffar Ali, Editor of the Zamindar, remitted to him Rs. 5 in aid of the Jhang Sial Security Fund. The Maulvi (also) wrote (in his paper) that Banka Dyal was a foul-mouthed man, and that he had remitted Rs. 5 to the latter to help in keeping alive the foul-mouthed Jhang Sial. Banka Dyal had the meanness to accept the remittance, and to write (in his paper) that he would help the Zamindar with double the amount in return. He did not, however, subscribe even a pie towards the Zamindar Security Fund. His conduct in having accepted the above remittance meant that he admitted himself to be a foul-mouthed journalist, but did not like to lose a sum of Rs. 5. He proved the truth of the adage "Shoe-beat me on the head, but give me (my) bread." Can there be a more mean and degraded person than the Editor of the Jhang Sial?

Dina Nath further remarks that it is natural in Banka Dyal to hate morality and love obscenity. In support of this assertion he refers to the article which the latter recently published to attack the chastity of the Hindu women of the Punjab, as also to the Jhang Sial's last Holi number, which, he says, was a sink of filth and from which he quotes several obscene lines. He, can, he adds, assert without fear of contradiction that in this respect Banka Dyal "is, in the journalist world, Satan in human form." Proceeding, he says that if Banka Dyal were to turn against Lala Lajpat Rai, Pandit Rambhaj Dat, Babu Ganga Parshad Varma, or any other political worker, it would be an ordinary thing for him to make false reports to Government about the object of his displeasure, and so to prefer unfounded charges against such a one as to make Government look upon him as a rebel and grind him in its "powerful administrative mill." Only a traitor of the first water can devise such a horrible plan, but this is the easiest thing for Banka Dyal to do. He has used "this very disgusting weapon" against the very writer of this article, and has played the rôle of an honorary detective in the columns of the Jhang Sial in order to assure Government that the Hindustan is a seditious paper; that its large circulation is due to the publication by it in the past of seditious articles; that these writings were from the pens of Sufi Amba Parshad and Mr. Zia-ul-Haq; and that the friendship between the Sufi and Dina Nath was due solely to both being men of seditious ideas. He has undoubtedly preferred the charges to induce Government to use its great might to crush the writer; but there is absolutely no truth in the statement that "I" published any seditious articles in the Hindustan in 1907, the year of which Banka Dyal has spoken. Nay, both (Sir William) Clarke and Sir P. C. Chatterji wrote in their judgments in the case instituted against "me" in 1907 that the Hindustan had always kept itself within the bounds of law. Can, then, there be any doubt even now that Banka Dyal is a traitor and a liar, an enemy of the country and the nation, and an extremely degraded man? The writer has done his duty in exposing the man in his true character, and it is now for the public to treat him as it treated Pandit Gopi Nath (of the Akhbar-i-'Am) on having realised his (true) moral worth.

The jhatka question.

17. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 30th June (received on the 8th July) 1912, has a note headed "Duty of Hindu newspapers in regard to the jhatka question." It complains that the jhatka shop in Hoshiarpur was recently closed by the Deputy Commissioner at the instance of some bigoted Muhammadans, and that he has allowed the shop to be re-opened only on conditions which are almost impossible. Jhatka shops have been closed in several other places also, and all sorts of restrictions are being imposed at Jhelum, Hafizabad, Dinanagar, Gurdaspur, &c., on the sale of jhatka meat. It considers it preposterous that the killing of goats by Musalmans should not offend Hindus and Sikhs, but that the killing of goats by Sikhs should be used by the Prophet's followers to mislead the authorities into forbidding jhatka on the grounds that injury is caused to Muhammadan feelings. Why should Government, it asks, prevent Sikhs and Hindus and not Muhammadans from eating flesh, and why should Sikhs be forbidden to kill goats, although Musalmans have general permission to do so? It is the duty of all "our" Sikh and Hindu contemporaries to invite Government's attention to the matter. "We" feel convinced that if Musalmans succeed in having the sale of jhatka meat stopped, they will be so puffed up with the idea of their political importance, that assuredly they will make other and similar demands likely injuriously to affect the religious liberty of non-Muslim communities.

The Quran.

18. The Arya Musafir (Jullundur), for June (received on the 9th July) 1912, publishes an article headed "A question to Muhammadan Ulemas." In continuation of his previous remarks on the subject of the Quran (vide paragraph 15 of Selections No. 24), the Editor says that the more he studies the scripture the more convinced he is becoming that it cannot satisfy the mind of any sensible person. It contains verses, he adds, which not only contradict one another, but also prevent the reader from feeling any respect for it or the Prophet. He quotes a verse in which the founder of Islam was forbidden to marry more wives than he already had. After remarking that Muhammad took more wives unto himself subsequent to the revelation of this verse, the Editor asks why he disobeyed God, and he calls upon Muslim Ulemas to answer the question.

Complaint against Christian Missionaries in India.

19. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 27th June (received on the 5th July) 1912, has a note headed "Another Hindu girl in the clutches of Christians." The cases, it says, of Hindu and Muslim boys and girls being decoyed away by Christian Missionaries are steadily on the increase. The cases at Benares, it adds, in which a Muhammadan and a Hindu girl are concerned, must still be fresh in the minds of its readers. A similar case has now been reported from Lucknow, the story being to the effect that (some) Missionaries at Bachhrawan have decoyed away the minor daughter-in-law of one Kali Din of Etawah (United Provinces). The Government of India prides itself on regarding all religions with the same eye; but some people ask with surprise why Christian Missionaries alone should venture to treat Hindu and Muhammadan boys and girls in this way? It is noteworthy, too, it adds, that it is girls that are generally decoyed away.

Indian prisoners and the Salvation Army.

20. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 10th July 1912 :—

"A committee appointed by the Punjab Government, consisting of the Inspector-General of Jails, the Revenue Secretary, and Commissioner Booth-Tucker of the Salvation Army, is stated to have recommended that juvenile prisoners, should they be willing to live in the Salvation Army colony on the Lahore Jail Roads, should be released on certain conditions, and allowed to reside there. Prisoners will obviously prefer living in comfort and greater liberty to imprisonment and there is every probability that most of them will elect to reside with the Salvation Army. The institution is, however, a proselytising society and will try to convert the prisoners under its protection to Christianity. We know that it has done much for the criminal tribes in this Province. We admit further that it is to some extent helping the industrial regeneration of the country. We further confess that Hindus and Muhammadans have no societies of their own for reclaiming criminals. But making over juvenile criminals to the Salvation Army will be practically similar to making over starving children to Christian Missionaries during a famine. Prisoners brought under the influence of the Salvation Army are likely to renounce their ancestral religion in favour of Christianity. But as the Punjab Government must be well aware of the fact, the people of this country value religion above everything else, and will not regard the recommendation with favour. We, therefore, appeal to the Local Government not to accept the recommendation or at least to defer its carrying out until Hindus and Muhammadans have established societies of their own for the reclamation of criminals."

The Shamsi Hindus of Sialkot.

21. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 2nd July 1912, publishes an article headed "The wave of religious intolerance in Sialkot," referring to the reported boycott by the Sialkot Hindus of the local Shamsi Jhiwars on account of one of these burying his wife's dead body. The paper deprecates the conduct of educated Hindus—vakils and others—in taking part in the boycott, and hopes that the Deputy Commissioner will call upon them to explain what right they have to boycott a section of His Majesty's subjects. It appeals to the Muhammadans of Sialkot to abstain from retaliating and to extend their sympathy to the Shamsis referred to, so that the Hindu boycott may not lower the spirits of the latter. In conclusion, it reports that powerful speeches in favour of the oppressed Jhiwars were made on the 18th, 19th and 20th ultimo by Munshi Abdul Ghani, Maulvi Ghulam Muhammad, and Agha Muhammad Safdar Khan.

VI.—Legislation.

Sikh demand for separate representation.

22. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 3rd July 1912, has a note headed "Sikh demand for separate representation." With regard to the recent resolution of the Singh Sabha of Rawalpindi on this subject, the Editor observes hat it does not deserve a moment's consideration from any officer of Government. Sikhs do not form even one-sixth of the population of the Punjab, and they are still less numerous in other provinces. It is impossible to understand on what grounds they ask for a third of the non-official seats on the District and Municipal Boards and for four and three seats on the Punjab and Supreme Legislative Councils respectively.

VII.—General Administration.

(b)—Police.

Attempt to wreck a train.

23. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 9th July 1912 :—

"A story is going round that an attempt, which was fortunately discovered and frustrated in time, was made to wreck a special train by which Lord Carmichael was to travel down from Darjeeling. This story should be accepted with the greatest caution and it is some relief that the C. I. D. are not attempting to magnify it into a political or anarchist conspiracy. No infernal machine or bomb was discovered and the sleepers found lying across the rails might have been left by some mischievous persons or careless coolies. It must be remembered that there is nothing like a bitter or violent unrest in Bengal at present. No instances have lately happened of political crime or dacoity. The removal of the capital from Calcutta to Delhi has been acquiesced in by the majority of the Bengal leaders and the opposition has been confined to European merchants. Lord Carmichael's personal popularity is assured and he is everywhere spoken of in terms of warm praise. It would be the height of unwisdom to spread a scare of anarchist conspiracies without sufficient foundation."

(d)—Education.

Industrial State scholarships.

24. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 3rd July 1912, has a note headed "New industrial scholarships." The paper complains that not one of the ten industrial scholarships recently granted by the Government of India has fallen to a Muhammadan. While Muhammadans have been kept out of their dues, two scholarships have gone to Christians, who are very few in number. Moreover the scholarships have not been used to enable the holders to acquire a higher education in respect of the various industries. No less than a half of them has been awarded for Mechanical and Electrical Engineering, a practice which cannot be commended.

The Muslim University.

25. The Millat (Lahore), of the 28th June 1912, says that it is rumoured that the Government of India has made the conditions regarding its supervision over the proposed Muslim University more stringent. This is due, in the writer's opinion, to the conduct of those who were foolish enough to oppose the proposal that His Excellency the Viceroy should be the Chancellor of the University. Next it regrets that some Muslim jornalists have begun to oppose Government, in season and out of season, through sordid motives. It would not surprise any one, the paper opines, if their writings were to make the authorities believe that Muhammadans also can be incited into hostility towards Government. It, therefore, considers it desirable that the thoughtful members of the Muslim community should hold meetings all over the country, to tell their ignorant co-religionists that Government is solicitous for their well-being, and that the closer it is associated with Islamic movements the better it will be for Muhammadans. They should also assure Government that the Prophet's followers repose the fullest trust in it.

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

Cotton growing in India.

26. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 6th July 1912 :—

"Lord Crewe has done well to give a plain answer to the representations of the cotton merchants. These gentlemen are shocked if India imposes a revenue duty on imported cotton goods and insist in the name of free trade that a similar countervailing duty should be levied on cotton goods manufactured in Indian mills. But they forget their free trade principles when the growing of cotton for English mills comes in, and not only do not hesitate to press for subsidies for the purpose but go so far as to advocate compulsion for the growth of cotton in the canal colonies. As the Secretary of State pointed out, the animal-breeding conditions imposed on some colonists in India are also to the advantage of the colonists themselves, for they can always dispose of their horses and camels at advantageous terms; but if there is a bumper American harvest, the prices of Indian cotton will go down to an appreciable extent. Thus while the market for the animals is assured by the Indian Government in view of its military needs, the same cannot be said of the cotton market, which is affected by world factors. The argument is unanswerable, but it would be vain to expect the International Cotton Committee to give up its objects simply because its case is neither strong nor righteous. We must, therefore, be prepared for a repetition of similar representations in the near future."

(f)—Railways and Communications.

Drinking water at Railway stations.

27. The Munir (Jhang), of the 1st (received on the 8th) July 1912, publishes a letter headed "Scarcity of water at railway stations and the cry of Railway passengers." The writer complains that third class passengers, especially women and children, have to suffer greatly in the hot weather for want of drinking water at railway stations. Even the water procurable is generally putrid and full of maggots, and the existing state of affairs is owing to Station Masters making watermen, both Hindu and Muhammadan, do private work for them even at the time of the arrival of passenger trains.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 8th July 1912, publishes a similar communication, in which the writer makes the further remark that 95 per cent. of Station Masters are Hindus.

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Frontier Province.

28. The Panjab Advocate (Mianwali), of the 27th June (received on the 2nd July) 1912, publishes a communication headed "Personal rule—III" In continuation of his previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 38 of Selections No. 26), the writer, H. C. Mujrim, of Rawalpindi, takes exception to the payment of a subsidy to the Afghan. He adds that the said paper's filthy writings (about Hindus) drove the Hindu residents of the Frontier Province and other parts of India to lay bare their lacerated heart to the Supreme Government (lit. the higher authorities). So far, however, from interfering with the Afghan, the Frontier Government seems determined to encourage the journal named, which has been engaged only in "sowing the seeds of loot, murder, rapine and disunion on the Frontier." It is the Afghan, asserts the writer, at whose prompting rascally dacoits have been practising oppression on the Hindus of the Frontier Province. Continuing, he refers to the offensive remarks which that paper is frequently charged with having published about Hindus. He also ascribes to it the loot to which the Hindus of Peshawar were subjected in March 1910, as also the loss inflicted on them by the recent fire in the Asia mohalla. Further he accuses it of having sprinkled salt into the wounds in the hearts of Hindus by publishing in golden letters the Government of India's disappointing reply to the memorial, in which the (Hindu) residents of Dera Ismail Khan prayed it to re-amalgamate the Frontier Province with the Punjab. After remarking that the Frontier Government has taken no notice of any of the above improper doings of the Afghan, he says that Government's conduct is attributable to its being very fond of personal rule. But for this, he adds, it would not have ended the days of the defunct Frontier Advocate, the only organ of the (local) Hindu community, and that too, at a time when the said Hindus were being crushed under "a mountain of oppression." He then goes on to say that, if the Government had not been an admirer of personal rule, it would have listened to the cries of the Frontier Hindus (lit. people) and consigned the accursed Afghan to Hell. Nor would it have reserved certain departments for Muhammadans and thereby afforded Hindus a sight of the times of Aurangzeb.

This being so, how can "we" expect it to safeguard the lives and property of Hindus, (especially) when ("we" see that) Hindus are subjected to new acts of oppression daily? Next the writer urges Hindus to memorialise His Excellency Lord Hardinge again and again, saying that their indifference is bringing about the time when, "casting a foul (lit. absurd) stain on the pure lives of their goddesses of chastity (their women)" and "handing over their amassed capital and other property to the oppressors," they will either pass over to oblivion or have to migrate to other provinces.

Consumption of intoxicants in the Punjab.

29. Writing under the heading "The state of the Punjab" the Arorbans Gazette (Amritsar), of the 24th June (received on the 4th July) 1912, publishes extracts from the Punjab Administration Report for 1910-11, regarding the consumption of intoxicants in this province. Commenting on the same it remarks that the Local Government has expressed the opinion that the evil cannot be eradicated till public leaders co-operate with the authorities in stamping it out. To speak the truth, however, this co-operation cannot prove of much use, seeing that Government itself is engaged in excise trade and excise officials cannot get promotion unless they show profits in their department. So long, adds the paper, as Government wishes to make money through the Excise Department the consumption of intoxicants will continue increasing day by day.

The Afghan newspaper.

30. The Panjab Advocate (Mianwali), of the 27th June (received on the 4th July) 1912, publishes a communication headed "The Afghan's gentlemanliness." The writer—"A Truthful Musalman"—says that it is an open secret that the Afghan (Peshawar) can publish whatever it likes, and that there is no one in the Frontier Province to interfere with it. Next he advises his "Frontier brothers" to forthwith submit a memorial to the Government of India (against the paper named). The Afghan, he adds, not only devises new plans daily to wound the feelings of Hindus, but has begun to extend its attentions even to Muhammadans. Continuing, he refers to its recent articles against the Khan of Hoti and in defence of the Hon'ble Sir George Roos-Keppel. Why, he asks, did it keep silent during the trial of the Khan, and why has it begun to talk like a buffoon when the charges against Sir George have been established? It wishes only to mislead the public, and to prove itself worthy of the subsidy paid to it by the officer named. Everybody knows that it was owing to his refusal to give a contribution (for the proposed Islamia College) that the Khan of Hoti incurred (the Chief Commissioner's) displeasure and has had his honour ruined. The writer wishes to tell his co-religionists that the aforesaid College is a mystery, and that a political character is being imparted to it.—(To be continued).

Military Drill Books in Panjabi.

31. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 5th July 1912:—

"We respectfully invite the urgent and special attention of the Military authorities in India to a letter on the subject of Military Drill Books from a sepoy in the Army. The position taken by the writer is an eminently reasonable one. The necessity of having drill books in Panjabi—the language of the people themselves—and in Gurmukhi script, need no demonstration. The number of Sikhs employed in His Imperial Majesty's Indian Army is an exceptionally large one, and it is an undoubted fact that most of these Sikh soldiers are versed in no other language but their own, the Panjabi which they read and write with the help of the Gurmukhi script. Now the state of things pointed out with regard to them has only to be brought to the notice of their authorities to be remedied without delay. It is said, that as soon as a revised edition of the drill books is out, work is started on its translation in Urdu, with the result that within a couple of months or so, the Urdu-knowing sepoys are in a position to procure a copy of the Urdu edition. On the other hand, the condition of Sikh sepoys not versed in Urdu but in Gurmuki is pitiable in the extreme. They have to go from pillar to post among their Urdu-knowing comrades, generally non-Sikhs, to enquire what the changes in the revised edition are. It is a pity that there should not be a single good translation in Gurmukhi, the one extant having a large admixture of Urdu words which are unintelligible to Gurmukhi knowing men. Most of the men in military service have scarcely gone beyond their three R's and would find it exceedingly convenient to possess an edition of the drill books in Panjabi. We would, therefore, extend a whole-hearted support to the eminently reasonable suggestion of 'A Sepoy' and humbly request His Excellencey the Commander-in-Chief in India to order the translation into simple and easy Panjabi of these books and their publication in the Gurmukhi script for the convenience and advantage of the Sikh Sepoys especially and Panjabi sepoys in general under His Excellency's Command. We feel sure the Panjabi Parcharak or the Sikh Educational Committee of the Chief Khalsa Dewan could readily undertake the work of translation if they are asked to do so. They are certainly the most fitted and the best equipped for the task. In any case the publication of an edition in simple and intelligible Panjabi and in Gurmukhi script is a desideratum which we respectfully trust His Excellency will see his way to order to be immediatly removed. We need hardly add that by so doing His Excellency will graciously place the whole Sikh troops under his command especially and the Sikh community in general under a deep debt of obligation."

Salaamophobia.

32. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 9th July 1912, publishes the following communication from a correspondent under the nom de guerre "A. B. C." :—

"The outbreak of a dangerous malady is reported from Shaikh Budin, Dera Ismail Khan. A gallant Captain of His Majesty's Indian army is suffering seriously from salaamophobia. The case seems to be an imported one as the local officers are all courteous and sympathetic. Some of the experts are of opinion that the patient may have caught the infection from his companion—a gallant Major now on leave. The symptoms so far are not very serious, except perhaps for the patient himself; they consist in forcing every man on the road or near by to rise and salaam. His Captainship takes delight in calling Indians as 'Kala log,' and gets furious if the word 'Sahib,' is addressed to an Indian; the words 'Lala Sahib,' 'Shah Sahib' and the like, seem to him to be an inconsistency in terms as no 'native' can be a 'Sahib'! The gallant Captain so far forgot himself one day as to openly take to task (evidently for not salaaming him) a distinguished Muhammadan Barrister-at-Law of a very high family, who has spent seven best years of his life 'at home' in high society to which very few Anglo-Indians can claim the honour to belong. The passage-at-arms said to have taken place between the two should disabuse the Captain of his notion that Indians are devoid of all self-respect. Be that as it may, we would strongly request the Government to send the Captain to some cooler station or to put him under the treatment of an expert lest he should develop some more allied symptoms and be a danger to the public.

I.—Politics.

British faults as seen by un-British eyes.

1. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 18th July 1912 :—

"Herr Mariano Herggelatt has prepared a catalogue of British faults; and he exhibits them in a few terse sentences. He thinks, that the British do not excite themselves over mistakes committed over things forgotten or neglected. However much opinions may differ on the several points raised by the German author, those who are aware of 'settled facts' should admit the correctness of his estimate on some points. But as coming from Germany this estimate of the British people will certainly be regarded as prejudiced. So far back as 1901 Edward Carpenter published his estimate of the British. To him the British seemed 'a people that knew not Love with cold-mutton faces and cod-fish eyes hurrying around, intent on endless quests and gathering wealth in high and low places, and picking over the scrap-heaps of the world, and building up carefully their own good names and reputations and following up clues of knowledge and philanthropy and feeding piously and perennially the lusts of their bodies.' In them he said, 'the one thing that might make life rational and vital was absent.' After reading this, the German estimate need surprise no one."

The Muslim peril.

2. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 10th (received on the 17th) July 1912, has a paragraph headed "The dreadful Islamic bugbear." The writer refers to an article in a recent number of the Forum showing the possibility of 15 lakhs of regular and about 20 or 30 lakhs of irregular Muslim armies trained by France, England, Germany and Russia, uniting in times of need. According to the Forum the time is fast approaching when Muhammadan regiments will refuse to obey their European officers ; when Muslim armies of Algiers, Morocco, Tunis, Egypt, India, East Africa and Central Asia will muster around the green flag of the Prophet and unfurl the standard of Jehad ; and when Muhammadans will obey the commands of none but God, as manifested in the Quran. Commenting on these assertions, the writer in the Vakil says that it is absolutely impossible for the various Muslim armies in the different parts of the world ever to unite in any one place. That will certainly be a most glorious day (for Musalmans) when they obey the commands of none but God ; but, says the writer, it is also the moral and religious duty of Muhammadans to obey the powers that be, and a true Musalman can never be mutinous or rebellious towards his rulers without reason or cause. It is impossible for Muhammadans to abandon their country, and, mustering below the (Prophet's) flag, to destroy the Christian world.

Indian Muhammadans and the Islamic world.

3. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 10th July 1912, publishes an article headed "Britain and the Central Asia question." Indian Muhammadans, says the writer, have the desire for independence that is common to all men in the world. Others indeed of their religion in other countries—Afghanistan, Persia, Turkey—do enjoy that independence ; but, in India, though they have not freedom, yet, seeing that they have every other blessing—intellectual, spiritual and economic—under British rule, they do not wish to see any change in the existing political condition of India. But they can remain thus loyal to England only so long as they are convinced that she is not in league with tyrannical, bigoted, and promise-breaking European powers, that are now trampling on the independent Muslim Kingdoms. The chief reason for the respect with which the world regards the English is the commanding position England has in Asia as master of India, a position guaranteed by the loyalty of Indian Muhammadans. There was a time when far-seeing British Statesmen realised England's duty to her loyal Muhammadan subjects ; but the wave of bigotry which has swept over Europe has led some to attempt a change in the British policy towards Islam, a change from Great Britain's just and fair conduct in former times. The Times, in the writer's opinion, deserves special mention among the papers referred to : for some time past it has been spitting poison over every question affecting the independence of Orientals, especially Muhammadans.

Indian soldiers for Egypt.

4. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 5th July 1912, publishes an article headed "Endeavours to take regiments from India for other parts of the Empire." Lord Kitchener is said to have made the request to the Home Government that, in order to protect British interests in Egypt, either the strength of the British garrison there should be increased, or one Brigade of the Indian Army should be lent to that country. The Editor does not wish to discuss how far it would be advisable to increase the British garrison in Egypt, how the increase would affect the Egyptians, or how the Liberal Ministry's conduct would be interpreted by the Islamic world in general and Ottoman Empire in particular. But, he says, a Government that did not hesitate to appoint a military autocrat like Lord Kitchener to succeed a liberal statesman of the type of Sir Elden Gorst, cannot be expected to oppose His Lordship's desire. It will not be possible to find in England the thousands of men required to augment the Egyptian garrison, and so India will have to supply the necessary forces. It is true that, since the decision that the cost of the Indian regiments sent for service abroad should be paid by the Imperial Exchequer, the people of this country have viewed with approval the despatch of Indian forces for employment in other parts of the Empire. But, if the absence abroad of a large number of regiments cannot injuriously affect the defence of India, then there is no reason why that force should not be made over to Egypt for good—an action which would cause a reduction in the military expenditure of this country.

Ill-treatment of Indians in Canada.

5. Writing under the heading "Case against two Sikh ladies in America," the Hindustan (Lahore), of the 5th July 1912, regrets that the Prime Minister of Canada has not fulfilled his promise to a Hindu deputation that Hindus in Canada would be allowed to bring over their wives and children from India. Two Sikh women (who went to Canada some time back) have, it says, been prosecuted for refusing to leave that country.

In another note it reports that a Lala Mehr Chand writes from Vancouver (Post Box 232, Hill Crest) to say that the Court decided on the 23rd May last that these women had the right to live with their husbands. He adds that the decision has caused unbounded joy among the Canadian Indians, and that hundreds of Indian wives are expected to arrive shortly in Canada with their children.

A complaint.

6. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 7th July 1912, has an article headed "A gross and foul attack on the loyalty of Sikhs." Not only says the writer, has the British Government refused to grant Sikhs any special concessions, or even their lawful rights, in return for their loyalty during and since the Mutiny, but now, in spite of their being British subjects, they are denied the right even of citizenship in Canada. An inflammatory speech made by a Mr. H. H. Stevens in "the House of Commons at Vancouver" has lacerated the hearts of 30 lakhs of the King Emperor's Sikh subjects. Sikhs themselves, said Mr. Stevens, were in great trouble at the time of the Mutiny, and, if they had not joined the English, they would have been destroyed by Muhammadans, who were twenty-four times more numerous than the followers of the Gurus. The paper endeavours to controvert these remarks, and urges the Government of India to ask the Canadian Government either to compel the withdrawal of the remark by Mr. Stevens or to issue a communiqué to reassure Sikhs.

The Trans-Persian Railway.

7. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 18th July 1912:—

"The special article in the Times (London) from its military correspondent on this question and the debate on it raised by Lord Curzon in the House of Lords cannot but astonish Indians. The advocates of railway as a civilizing agency are the first to condemn its extension to India from across Persia because of its supposed weakness to England from a strategic point of view. Lord Lamington, Lord Crewe, Lord Inchcape, in fact, every one of the noble Lords is opposed to the scheme; and even Lord Morley goes no further than giving it the negative support of not objecting. Lord Curzon conjures up visions of altered strategic position in India, of the extension of the North-West Frontier, of the transport of more British soldiers to India and, in fact, of everything else short of an actual collision of forces on Indian borders. Why this should be so it is hard to say. In the 315 millions of Indians the British have a strength unequalled by any other powers. Rather than conciliate Indians and depend upon them for the security of the country it is astonishing that British statesmen should try to hinder the progress and development of Persia or in the alternative to import more British troops and burden the Indian tax-payers with the cost of their maintenance and equipment. It is, however, encouraging that English authorities like Sir Valentine Chirol and experienced Anglo-Indians like the Hon'ble Mr. M.de. P. Webb of Karachi foresee no danger in linking India with Europe by rail."

Indentured Indian labour for the Crown Colonies.

8. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 16th July 1912 :—

"When the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale proposed to do away with the system of indentured Indian labour to the Colonies, the Hon'ble Mr. Clarke grew eloquent over the joys of the system and his speech was the subject of indignant comments everywhere. Here is a case arising from indentured labour to Natal which we hope the Hon'ble Mr. Clarke will read fot himself. The case is :—

"'Jadubansi, an Indian woman, was charged with refusing to return to her lawful employer, she being an identured servant. The accused pleaded guilty. It was stated that the circumstances of this case were that the woman had served continuous sentences amounting to six months, for a steadfast refusal to return to her employer. She had been working on an estate at Stanger, and, in some accident, her baby had been burnt. She had come to Durban to make a complaint to the Protector and had since refused on every occasion to comply with her indenture. The Judge, Mr. J. T. Gibson of Durban, remarked that it seemed an unfortunate thing that a woman could thus be punished time after time for a matter wherein she had shown a particular aversion from some special place of employment. But she was willing to work elsewhere, though her employer would not allow her to do so. According to the Indian Opinion (June 1, 1912) Jadubansi's child was so severely burnt that it died and the woman accused her employer of deliberately refusing to attend to the wounds. The woman's duties in her master's house kept her away from the child from 5 a. m. to 7 p. m. with the exception of two short intervals for breakfast and dinner. Consequently, the child had to be left alone.'

"It further appears that her employer denied the charge, but any one can see that the woman had no other motive for prefering jail to honest labour and for her willingness to work anywhere else except under the man for whom she had an aversion. And yet indentured slavery has no remedy in such a case."

(b)—Home.

British rule in India.

9. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 8th July 1912, publishes an article headed "Permanence of British rule in India is necessary—III." In continuation of his previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 4 of Selections No. 28), the writer calls on Indians to add to the strength of British rule in India. "For how can the heartfelt desire of Indians to obtain the colonial form of self-government be realised? Before such a desire can be called improper or absurd the very nature of Indians must be changed and made unlike that of all other men, so that they will love subjection and slavery for ever. And, if such a change is impossible, then the people of this country cannot help demanding from Government an equality with the Crown Colonies." The only constitutional way, adds the writer, for Indians to attain the colonial form of self-government is for Hindus and Muhammadans to join hands, and bring about a complete economic revolution with the aid of Swadeshism. "Thus shall we compel Great Britain to regard India not as a dependency, but as part and parcel of herself."

Lord Crewe on India.

10. Writing under the heading "Promise about self-government," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 3rd (received on the 9th) July 1912, says that the lovers of Swaraj can on no account feel disappointed at Lord Crewe's rem arks about the impossibility of this country ever obtaining the colonial form of self-government. They hold the opinion that His Lordship's words are not more infallible than were the declarations by many British statesmen that the Partition of Bengal was a settled fact. And just as (even) after these utterances the Bengalis continued to exert themselves under Babu Surendra Nath Banerji to have the Partition reversed, a similar, nay, a more powerful, agitation is now about to be set on foot under the leadership of the gentleman named. After quoting an extract from the Bengalee, in support of the assertion, the Vakil remarks that the agitation, which brought about the reversal of the Partition after six years' hard work, is again going to manifest itself with still greater vigour and to secure a still more important object. It is not wrong to say, on the score of past experience, that Lord Crewe's settled fact will be as easily unsettled on some future occasion or that India will gain the colonial form of self-government. It cannot, therefore, speak of the Secretary of State's words as discouraging, nay, it regards them as being hopeful in every way.

The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 5th July 1912, remarks that the Secretary of State's words suggest the question, "What natural defect is there in Indians or what offence have they committed as a people, that they cannot, as all other British subjects, be given self-government?" After conceding that so far they have not fitted themselves for Swaraj, the paper asks Lord Crewe to say what their final political goal should be. As His Lordship is responsible for the maintenance of peace in India, he is bound to return a satisfactory reply to the question.

The Rajput Gazette (Lahore), of the 6th July 1912, says that it is an admitted fact that self-government is the final goal of every nation. Indians also wish to secure, and that as early as possible, Swaraj under British protection; and their just demand has the support of many a fair-minded Englishman. Lord Crewe himself supported (lit. expressed) the idea in the despatch relating to the recent administrative changes. Now, however, he has not only contradicted himself, but has also "thrown a veil over the British Government's policy of liberality and an extremely important and sacred object connected therewith." His words have caused a peculiar sort of uneasiness among educated Indians. Seeing that all other classes of British subjects are in the enjoyment of Swaraj, why should Indians not be given self-government. They are in every way fit for the privilege, which is, moreover, their heritage. Swaraj is the final political goal of all Indians as a people, and they will never abstain from demanding it. Sooner or later Government will have to grant their demand.

The Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 6th July 1912, remarks that perhaps the British Government has, from the very outset, been determined never to give self-government to Indians. So far, however, this determination has been withheld from the world, particularly from the educated community of this country. Lord Crewe's pronouncement makes it clear that in England, at any rate, this idea is strongly held. The Secretary of State's opinion in the matter is calculated to discourage the National Congress; some sincere members, however, will, the paper feels sure, never cease from their efforts. They know that it is not for men to lose heart, but that they must go on crying to Government, in the hope of being heard one day. Bengali agitation has brought about the unsettlement of Lord Morley's "settled fact," and, therefore, Lord Crewe's plain-speaking cannot dishearten the true supporters of the National Congress. They have come to know how their labours for over 25 years past have affected Parliamentary statesmen, and they will now continue their efforts with still greater vigour. They should also feel obliged to Secretary of State for having opened the eyes of educated Indians.

The Arorbans Gazette (Amritsar), of the 8th July 1912, says that neither Liberals nor Conservatives wish to give self-government to India. Lord Morley declared in plain language at Arbroath in 1907 and in the Upper Chamber in 1909 that Indians would never be granted Swaraj. Many Indians compare this country to Ireland, and imagine that they, too, like the Irish, will obtain home rule. "We" should, however, under no circumstances forget that Ireland is a white country; that she has a number of representatives in Parliament; and that her children are treated with due respect in foreign lands. The Irish know the right way to agitate and to secure self-government. Unlike "us," they do not ask for favour and kindness, but demand their natural rights. Reprinting the passage in the Indian Government despatch on the subject of provincial autonomy in India, the Editor remarks that the meaning of the passage is obvious. Lord Crewe's interpretation thereof is wholly incorrect. At all events, it is idle for "us" to hope to get anything from British statesmen. It was remarked by Lord Macaulay in 1833 that that would be the proudest day in British annals, on which Indians would become fit to govern themselves. British statesmen of these times, however, will not bring that day nearer; the very thought of it sends a shiver through them. And so, it is wholly idle to hope that they will confer "the right of self-government" on "us."

The Muin (Amritsar), of the 8th July 1912, remarks that the passage in the Government of India's despatch on the subject of provincial autonomy had the effect of causing "dysentery in the political stomach of some Conservative statesmen," for the reason that the interpretation put upon it in this country was that Indians were to receive self-government at an early date. Lord Crewe now has cured these statesmen of their fell disease, and the writer agrees with every word spoken by the Secretary of State. It is impossible, he argues, for the English to concede self-government to Indians and thereby give up of their own accord a great country, whose possession, won by arms, confers on them the highest worldly blessings. It is, however, a matter of surprise to Indians, says the writer, that British Ministers should at one moment make such a remark as "We rule India for the good only of Indians, and, when they become fit to govern themselves the reins of the country's administration will be handed over to them;" and at another moment say that it is wholly absurd and stupid to think that India will ever get the colonial form of self-government. Such contradictory statements have, moreover, made Indians lose all faith in the promises of Ministers. The writer deplores that the moral weakness of certain cowardly men, who have, by mere chance, the reins of administration in their hands, is bringing odium on the whole Empire, and, for no reason, causing feelings of contempt and indignation among 30 crores of the Emperor's subjects. Lord Crewe is congratulated on having put aside hypocrisy and having laid before the world the true feelings ot the British nation (towards India), and now it is for him to tear to tatters the late Queen Victoria's proclamation (of 1858) and order the demolition of the marble pillar at Allahabad on which the whole of that proclamation is inscribed. This would bring those Indians to their senses who are in the habit of building castles in the air. Their work does but breed revolutionary movements in the country, and make trouble for both Government and people.

Mr. Montagu and the Government of India Bill.

11. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 13th July 1912 :—

"There are a couple of sentences in the speech delivered by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons on the 10th ultimo on the occasion of the third reading of the Government of India Bill, which knock on the head all ideas of consistency in public life. Sir John D. Rees, in opposing the Bill and while criticising the action of Government in cancelling the partition of Bengal, repeatedly quoted the words of Lord Morley, who had declared that the partition was a settled fact.' These words are capable of but one meaning, that the subdivision of Bengal into Western and Eastern Bengals is a settled fact and this sense is made all the clearer when we remember that the words in question were used to re-assure the Musalmans of Eastern Bengal, who felt apprehensive as to the effect of the anti-partition agitation on the minds of the rulers and who feared that Government might yield to the clamour for reuniting Bengal and Eastern Bengal, to the prejudice of Muslim interests and in disregard of Muhammadan sentiment. We make bold to say that considering the occasion which called forth the speech and the text of the utterance, the words in question could not possibly possess any other meaning than the one we have given above. And yet Mr. Montagu had the coolness to observe that what Lord Morley meant while using those words was that the great improvement of administration which was to result from the subdivision of Bengal could never again be sacrified, that the partition of Bengal could never be reversed, and that there had been no reversal. The Under-Secretary of State for India further went on to observe: 'What was to be the meaning of the words "settled fact," in politics? Were they to mean that a thing once done should never be modified in the light of experience? However badly it had been done, were they all to sit and admire it for generation after generation without having the courage to alter it? That was a theory of crystallised conservatism, which he believed to be the worst that could be applied to a quickly changing and developing country like India.' We are glad Mr. Montagu has been so explicit in using such clear language, which has emphatically demonstrated that, according to him and others who are of his ways of thinking, there is and there can be absolutely no settled fact in politics. The announcement is sufficiently clear and strong to destroy, root, branch and all, the notion of ultra-conservatism, which appears to be engrained in the Muslim brain, that the word of a responsible Minister is irrevocable, and Mr. Montagu's declaration should teach the Musalmans that there is and that there can be no finality in politics, as in other vocation of life, that with the changing needs and circumstances of the day State policy is subject to change and evolution as much as any physical or social organism, and that it is suicidal to rest on one's oars and that, in this age of perpetual change and constant struggle, that community alone can continue to live and prosper which is ever vigilant and ceaselessly active in the protection of its vital interests."

Muslim politics.

12. The Millat (Lahore), of the 12th July 1912, has an article headed "Agitation is useless: Let (our Muslim) brethren think and reflect." To prove his contention that agitation is useless the writer refers to the agitation against Muhammadans getting separate electorates, against the use of Urdu in the Punjab, against the passing of the Land Alienation Act, and for the re-amalgamation of the Frontier Province with the Punjab. From all these agitations the Hindu gained nothing, and therefore, says the writer, let Indian Muhammadans eschew politics and remain loyal to their present Government.

Lord Macdonnell and the Government of India Bill.

13. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 13th July 1912 :—

"The undying hatred of Lord (late Sir Antony) Macdonnell for Muhammadans cannot but manifest itself in every public utterance of the ex-Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces. In each and every speech delivered by him on the Morley-Minto reform scheme and the Indian administrative changes he has left no opportunity to make envenomed remarks calculated to wound Indian Musalmans to the quick. When Mr. Montagu called in question the solidarity of the Indian Muhammadans and made remarks on their homogeniety, the Under-Secretary of State was only quoting Lord Macdonnell. But unabashed by the rebuff experienced in the apology of Mr. Montagu or perhaps to wreak a petty spite for that, His Lordship attacked during his speech on the second reading of the India Bill the Muslim League. Too much importance, said Lord Macdonnell, should not be attached to exotic associations like the All-India Muslim League, which had greater vitality in London than in India. In speaking of the League as an 'exotic association,' His Lordship seems to forget that he himself is not an indigenous Indian, whose knowledge of this country cannot be half as great as that of the members of the association. But we may say, in our turn, that too much importance should not be attached to the utterances of men like Lord Macdonnell who command greater esteem and respect among a set of Radicals in London than among sober statesmen in India or England."

The Nicholson Committee.

14. Discussing a recent article in the Pall Mall Gazette on the Nicholson Committee the Tribune (Lahore), of July 18th, 1912, makes the following remarks :—

" * * * * Retrenchment in the expenditure on the army has for years been advocated by the Indian National Congress as also by those friends of India who have not joined the Congress. It is maintained, and we believe with perfect truth, that the money spent on the army in India represents the bulk of the revenues of the country and that the excessive military expenditure has for years past stood, and now stands, in the way of the material and economic development of the country. If Lord Nicholson's Committee can succeed in effecting a substantial reduction in the total expenditure on the army in India, it will have done a great service to this country which would feel grateful to the Ministry which appointed the Committee. But, as we have already said, we do not know how far the Pall Mall Gazette is well informed on the subject. From the way in which Lord Crewe has behaved on the self-government question we have grave doubts that he will not succumb to the agitation that Lord Curzon and others are sure to set on foot in order to prevent the expenditure on the army from being reduced to any material extent."

Ill-treatment of political prisoners in Andamans.

15. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 16th July 1912 :—

"The Bengalee publishes gruesome details of the ill-treatment of political prisoners in Andamans. It would be remembered that not long ago one of them by the name Indu Bhushan Roy had committed suicide. Our Calcutta contemporary learns that before committing suicide Indu Bhushan Roy had an interview with the jailor and asked him to change his work. He addressed to him words to the following effect :—

"'See my hands have become so blistered by the juice of the rambash that I cannot move my fingers freely and it is so painful that I cannot get a wink of sleep the whole night. I cannot take my food to my mouth. The touch of "dal" causes me so much pain that tears come to my eyes and my food is left untouched. I will die of pain and starvation. Kindly change my work or allow me to go to hospital for a few days to get my palms healed.' Saying this, he stretched his hands to the full, but met with a rebuff from the Jailor. We will not produce the language which the Jailor is reported to have used. Is it not the case that Indu Bhushan Roy pleaded again, begging to be allowed to report himself personally and show his hands to the Medical Superintendent? But the Jailor shouted:—'You must carry out my orders.' Then after thinking for a couple of minutes he again said; 'all right, I will change your work' and ordered the warder in charge to engage Indu in Kolu oil mill from next morning. Indu got so frightened that he told the Jailor that he would simply die if he had to work in the Kolu mill with those hands of his.'

"What followed was the suicide of Indu Bhushan Roy. He was found hanging in his cell, and when the medical man went to see in a most leisurely manner life was extinct. It is clear that Indu Bhushan Roy put an end to his life unable to endure the cruelties to which he was subjected. Surely such cruelties cannot be defended even on administrative or political not to say humanitarian grounds. The object of the punishment is to impress the offender of the fairness of the punishment and to reclaim him if possible. Can it be said that this object is attained by goading the prisoner to commit suicide in this manner? Let alone humanitarian considerations, can harassment and vindictive treatment of youths such as those concerned in political offences produce a wholesome impression on the offenders themselves? The Government of India themselves are responsible for the administration of the penal settlement and as such whatever is done in that settlement is understood to have the full support of the Government. While transportation to a penal settlement is different from mere deportation there can be no justification for adding cruelty to penal labour. The matter is one important enough to deserve the personal attention of His Excelleney the Viceroy."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

The Hindus in Afghanistan.

16. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 13th July 1912 :—

"Hindus are evidently very hard to please. The Amir during his Indian tour went so far in his efforts to conciliate them as to forbid the slaughter of cows in his name on the occasion of the Bakr 'Id. Hindus in Afghanistan enjoy equal rights with Muhammadans. Hindu students flock to the State schools. All posts and offices under the administration are open to the Hindus. Colonel Diwan Narinjan Dass is a sort of Accountant-General in Afghanistan and his co-religionists practically monopolise all the appointments of cashiers, treasurers and accountants in the kingdom. The Amir has on several occasions been observed to go out of his way to make presents of fruits and sweets to his Hindu subjects. Yet these facts notwithstanding, stories are being published by certain Hindu papers in Lahore of all sorts of indignities being heaped and oppressions practised on the Hindus and Sikhs residing in Afghanistan. One of the writers recently asserted that the Afghans openly abused and maltreated the Hindus and Sikhs, who dare not retaliate; that attacks on the chastity of Hindu females were too common, the Afghans kidnapping Hindu and Sikh women with impunity; that the Afghans who committed offences against the property or persons of the Hindus were treated too leniently, and Hindu merchants had to pay more octroi at Dhacca than the Musalmans. It will be a revelation to our readers to learn that not one of these assertions was supported by proofs. The Editor of the Paisa Akhbar, however, sent to the Editor of the Siraj-ul-Akhbar, Kabul, a copy of these complaints with a request to investigate the grievances. Sardarzada Mahmud Tarzi has sent a reply, contradicting all these false stories. As for the Afghans abusing Hindus or maltreating them, he says that the courts are open for dealing with these offences. If the Hindus do not retaliate, they can knock at the doors of justice and the offenders are certain to be dealt with according to their deserts. No distinction is made in the courts between Hindus and Muhammadans, and the Afghans are sentenced to be hanged when convicted of murdering Hindus. As for the attacks on the chastity of Hindu females, the Afghan writer repels with indignation the suggestion of the Hindu scribbler. The latter gave only one instance of the kidnapping of a Hindu woman and admitted that the woman fled away with a strong and handsome Afghan of her own free will. Such an incident might well form the plot of a fascinating novel, but seeing that cases of women leaving their homes with their paramours are not rare in India and other countries the story cannot be adduced as a proof of the Afghans kidnapping Hindu women with impunity. Abduction is a very heinous offence in Afghanistan and though the victim be a Hindu female, its perpetrator cannot escape with the slight punishment inflicted on such offenders in India. Again, as to the alleged extra taxes levied on Hindu merchants at Dhacca, the Editor of the Siraj-ul-Akhbar wrote directly to the Revenue Minister at Kabul in this connection, and the latter has replied that the import and export dues levied at the Dhacca barriers are the same for all people, without any distinction of creed, but merchants trying to smuggle their goods are charged double and even treble the sum ordinarily levied on goods. And lastly, the Amir has never compelled any Hindu to become a Musalman. If, however, a Hindu embraces Islam of his own accord and being boycotted by his relations is without any ostensible means of livelihood, then, of course, he receives some help from the Government in the way of earning a living. It is clear from this reply that so far from the grievances being true, they are utterly without foundation, if not malicious. The Hindus, far from being treated badly, seem in some instances to attempt an evasion of the payment of taxes and when called to account invent stories about tyranny and oppression. And to top it all, the Englishman's frontier correspondent states that the Intelligence Bureau in Afghanistan has reported that the Hindu fortune-tellers and Sadus who go to Afghanistan every year act as foreign spies and that the Amir has been therefore advised to order their expulsion from his dominions. But His Majesty has not yet done so. Verily the Amir and his officials practice unheard of tyrennies on the 'meek Hindu!'"

III.—Native States.

Installation of the Maharaja of Nabha. Postponement of the—

17. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 13th July 1912 :—

"His Highness Maharaja Hira Singh died on the 25th December last. In the ordinary course His Highness the Tikka Sahib, the present Maharaja, should have been formally installed in the course of a few weeks. On the death of the late Nizam there was no difficulty in installing the present Nizam. Even in Mysore, which is said to be a gift of the British Raj to the present Royal House, no difficulty arose with regard to installation on the death of Maharaja Chamarajendra Wodier. In Nabha the date of installation was formally fixed but was cancelled abruptly for reasons which are not well understood. Indian States are governed by treaties and engagements entered into by the British Government. Each State has its peculiar rights and privileges recognised in such treaties and engagements. But on occasions the Foreign Office which is guided by 'precedents and prescriptions' chooses to treat all States alike and calls them the members of one and the same family. But the Foreign Office is sometimes so unreasonable and obstinate that it refuses te treat the State as members of one family and persists in treating each on its own merits. It adopts the first course where it can bring all under a common denominator disregarding the pride and prestige of historic States. But it declines to adopt the same course where it is advantageous to individual States. The varying terms of engagements with the States with regard to salt, opium, ganja, railway police, civil and criminal jurisdiction over railways, post and telegraphs, imperial service and transport corps, employment of Europeans or British officials in particular offices and numerous other matters go to show that the Foreign Office is not very anxious to treat all States alike. Why then does it insist on uniformity in some other respects which the Sovereign Princes consider galling to their pride and prestige? The treaties and engagements of each State should be uniformally respected and the precedents of each State faithfully followed. Above all the Government should recall the incidents connected with Colonel Low's Mission in Hyderabad (Daccan) in 1853 and with Lord Lytton's transactions with Sir Salar Jung through Sir Richard Meade. Every State is not a Mysore. Government can afford to be magnanimous to Nabha for its splendid services during the mutiny."

Change of Minister in Hyderabad.

* * * * * * *

"The announcement embodied in Firman is a momentous one and in keeping with the public expectation, rumours being persistently current for sometime past that Maharaja Sir Kishen Pershad would shortly retire from service. The present is not the time to discuss the merits or demerits of the outgoing Minister. Instead of dwelling on the past, we would like to refer to the future. And as for the future, there is every reason to hope that Hyderabad is entering on a new era of progress and prosperity and that the changes now effected are destined to open a fresh chapter in the history of the premier Native State of India."

* * * * * * *

"Hyderabad may well form high expectations of the third Salar Jang. Indeed, however high these expectations be, we confidently look forward to their being fully realized; while the association of a veteran of the wide experience and great attainments of Nawab Imad-ul-Mulk with the new Minister is a guarantee of the success of his administration."

IV.—Kine-killing.

Cow-protection and Sikhs.

19. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 11th July 1912, publishes a communication headed "A Sikh woman's prayer to the Gurus' followers." After relating a story how Guru Gobind Singh once saved a number of cows from being sacrificed by Muhammadans, the writer—Sada Kaur, daughter of Sardar Mahna Singh, of Rasulpur, Bahraich district (Oudh), vide paragraph 10 of Selections No. 23—, urges Sikhs not to forget their duty of protecting kine. They may separate themselves from Hindus, she adds, but should display no remissness in the matter of cow-protection, which is a legacy left to them by their ancestors.

V.—Native Societies and Religious matters.

Six great men of India.

20. The Afghan (Peshawar), of the 5th (received on the 11th) July 1912, has a note headed "Six great men of India (vide paragraph 20 of Selections No. 27)." It says that the Parkash, the Hindustan, etc., wish "to raise up only Hindus on the bamboo" (to hold up to ridicule). Next it gives the names of the first paper's six great men of India, and goes on to remark that, according to Hindu papers, greatness has fallen to the lot of Hindus only. The fun of it, however, is that it is not only Hindus who are regarded with the greatest contempt in foreign countries, but that the same treatment is accorded even to non-Hindu Indians, in consequence of their being the former's neighbours. The six men mentioned do not deserve to be called the six great men of India.

Muhammadans, Christians, Hindus and Sikhs.

21. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 7th July 1912, publishes an article headed "A destructive storm." Although, it says, Muhammadans are behind Christians in the matter of wealth, numbers, education, &c., their religion is being propagated everywhere at a more rapid pace than is Christianity. This is due to the equality of treatment accorded to all followers of Islam. Christians profess to observe no caste distinctions, but in practice they are prejudiced and bigoted in the matters of colour. A white-complexioned Christian will not treat his black African co-religionist as his equal, and this bigotry is likely to prove the ruin of Christianity. Chhut created estrangement between the various Hindu sects, with the result that their country was conquered by Muhammadan invaders. How they fared under the Muslim rule is well known, and they are being swallowed up by Islam even under British rule. Another serious danger for the Hindu community arises from "the untouchables," whose conversion to other religions would endanger the very existence of Hindus. The low castes among Sikhs constitute a similar danger for Sikhism. "Let us then treat one another as equals."

The inaugural speech of the Egyptian president of the recent Session of the Nadwat-ul-Ulema.

22. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 12th July 1912, publishes a communication from Shibli Numani headed "A gross calumny." The writer states that Syed Rashid Raza has written to him from Baghdad to say that "the Egyptian nationalist paper" and the Turkish Hilal-i-Osmani have reported in their columns that the Editor of Alminar (i. e., the Syed) took part in the (recent annual session of the) Nadwat-ul-Ulema; that he delivered a lecture in praise of, and inculcating obedience to, the English; and that this led to all Indian Muhammadans feeling displeased with him. As, however, this is a palpable lie and calculated to injure the Musalmans of this country, the writer requests all Muslim papers to contradict the slander, and to give expression to the opinion of the Prophet's followers about Syed Raza's speech. Copies of the issues concerned should also be sent to him, so that he may translate the writings into Arabic and send the same to Egypt. The above unfounded report has rendered Syed Rashid Raza most anxious, and it is grossly unfair that he should receive this reward for the trouble suffered by him in coming out to India.

Popular Muhammadans.

23. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th July 1912, publishes a communication headed "Who are the popular Muhammadans of this year." The writer suggests that all Muhammadan newspapers should annually ask their readers to answer the above question, the results obtained being published by the Muslim League. He adds that the selection should cover all classes of the Prophet's followers, political lecturers, workers and writers, traders, zamindars, &c.

The management of waqf properties.

24. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 7th July 1912, publishes a communication headed "Waqf properties attached to mosques." The writer—one Usman Ghani of Fatehgarh—complains of the mismanagement of these properties and says that, after a careful study of the laws on the subject, he has come to the conclusion, that, under sections 3 and 7, Act XX of 1863, committees can be formed, with the sanction of the Local Government, to manage and supervise waqf properties. These committees can be invested with all the powers detailed in the Bengal Regulation No. XIX of 1810 and exercised by the Board of Revenue before the passing of Act XX of 1863. He suggests the establishment of such a committee to manage waqf properties in Lahore.

The Tat Khalsa.

25. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 12th July 1912 :—

"In Sardar Jogendra Singh's Presidential speech at the Sialkot Conference, there was a reference to the Tat Khalsa and the good work they have done and the progress they have achieved. This reference requires to be cleared up. It struck us at the time that Sardar Jogendra Singh was not sufficiently clear and explicit on the point. It is certainly by no means the first time that the term Tat Khalsa has been used. During the last twenty years or so, the term has been hurled at us, educated Sikhs, as an epithet of reproach and opprobrium by our opponents, and we have not cared to reply to the veiled insinuations it was intended to convey or the covert innuendoes it was desired to apply. But our opponents apparently never knew what the historic significance of the term was, or how it originally came into existence. Had they known it, or cared to fined out, it would have been clear to them that there was nothing of reproach or opprobrium associated with the term itself. It is necessary now that Sardar Jogendra Singh has used the term, to advert to its history for the benefit of all concerned who may still be groping in the dark. Students of Sikh history must be aware that after Sri Guru Govind Singh Ji Maharaj, our tenth Guru, shuffled the mortal coil, Baba Banda, who had been a leading disciple of the tenth Guru Sahib and who had done good work during the lifetime of the Guru, reached Amritsar after a successful conquering march from the Deccan, carrying all before him, his worldly wisdom took the upper hand of his better part, he claimed for himself succession to Gaddi of the Gurudom, as eleventh Guru; and his disciples adopted for him the style and practices of the Gurus. Against such a course there was the tenth Guru's own injunction to all Sikhs to accept the Granth Sahib as their Guru. The disciples of Baba Banda, however, stuck to their guns, and formed a section by themselves which came to be known as 'Bandai Khalsas,' adopted certain innovations in salutation which came to be known as Darshani Fateh. The main body of the Panth stood firm in their allegiance to the Tenth Guru's injunction and their acceptance of the sacred Granth as their Guru. As opposed to, and contradistinguished from the Bandai Khalsas, these strict followers of Guru Granth Sahib were called Tat Khalsas or the true Khalsas. With the gradual reduction in number and practical disappearance of Bandai Khalsas, the term Tat Khalsa also fell into disuse. After the lapse of nearly two centuries, the term has been restored and revived by our opponents who have never taken kindly to our efforts at progress and amelioration and have looked down upon them with disapproval and contempt. As we have shown the term 'Tat Khalsa,' historically speaking had long ceased to exist and was no longer in use. It has been applied for some time by our opponents more as a nickname than any thing else for 'educated and progressive Sikhs.' It is in that sense and in that acceptance that Sardar Jogendra Singh has accepted and used the word. We should have preferred had Sardar Jogendra Singh let the term alone for exclusive use in the armoury of opponents, for the Panth is now one and indivisible—the Khalsa Panth—and knows no distinctions. Can it, however, be that like so many historic epithets, owing their origin to rival camps, the term 'Tat Khalsa' also has come to stay. If so, Sardar Jogendra Singh's acceptance and recognition of it will have gone a long way in bringing about that result. However, whether the term stays, or once more disappears into the roll of the past, we trust we have made it clear once for all that there is absolutely nothing in the term or in its historic associations to which any one can take the slightest exception or of which the Sikhs of the present day have any reason to feel ashamed. On the other hand we have made it abundantly manifest that the tradition of the Tat Khalsas in the past are such as every Sikh can justly and legitimately feel proud of. And if even in these degenerate times, there are Sikhs in large numbers, who really deserve, by their principles and practices, by their services and achievements, the appellation of the Tat Khalsa, the Panth has every reason to thank the Akal Purkh and to congratulate itself.

VI.—Legislation.

26. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 16th July 1912 :—

"* * * * At present the local Legislative Council consists of 26 members (excluding the President) out of the maximum strength of 30 fixed by the statute. Of the 26 members 19 are nominated, 2 nominated experts and 5 elected members. It is obvious that the number of elected members is too small and ought to be increased. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has, in a way, promised to increase this number. But the manner in which it is proposed to be increased is not likely to give any satisfaction to the Hindus. Supposing that as suggested by His Honour the District Boards will be allowed to elect a member for each of the three groups into which the Province is divided for elections by the Municipalities, we may predict that at least two seats if not all the three will be carried by Muhammadans. At this rate we are frankly of opinion that the Government might postpone the enfranchisement of District Boards indefinitely rather than unwittingly accentuate the existing differences. If the Government proposes to redress the admitted grievances of the Hindus it should do so gracefully and generously, and not in a grudging and halting manner. In Madras at present 40 per cent. of the members are elected; and we understand the Government proposes to give away at least two more seats to be competed for by the people's representative. This will probably raise the parentage of elected members to the total strength to 45. In Bombay nearly 44 per cent. of the seats are even now occupied by elected representatives while in Bengal the percentage reaches to 50. In the United Provinces at present 42 per cent. of the seats are held by elected representatives. Sir John Hewett is said to be willing to raise this to 45. This being so, we do not see any reason why in the Punjab less than 12 seats out of a total of 26 should be allotted for election. Since the recommendations of the Punjab Government have already been forwarded to the Government of India, since it is not likely that the Punjab Government has been liberal enough to assign 12 seats for election, the people of the Punjab have to appeal direct to the Government of India.

"Out of these twelve seats a fair number should be assigned for the Hindus who represent the intelligence, wealth and enterprise of the Province. Lord Morley has given the assurance in his reform despatch that 'minorities would be protected against exclusion by majorities and all large important sections of the population would have the opportunity of returning members in proportion to their ratio to the total population.' Taking our stand on this assurance we ask the Government to consider what exactly is the position now assigned to the Hindus of the Punjab. Out of the 14 non-official members 7 are Muhammadans, 2 Europeans, 3 Hindus and 2 Sikhs. Lord Morley's despatch says that all large and important sections will be allowed to return members 'in proportion to their ratio to the total population.' But what do we find in practice? The six-and-a-half millions of Muhammadan males (of whom 166,937 are literate and only 22,473 are literate in English) have seven members to represent them, 3 elected and 4 nominated. The infinitesimal section of Europeans have two members, one elected and one nominated. The Sikhs, whose male population is 1·651 million, whose literate population number 132,362 (the literate in English being only 8,240) have two members, both nominated. But the Hindus, who number 3,686,900, and of whom 380,096 are literate and 41,942 are literate in English, have only 3 members to represent them, one elected and 2 nominated. The utter want of proportion in representation to the intelligence and wealth of the Province is manifest. The literate and vocal section of the population is among Hindus more than twice as large as among Muhammadans. But it has been granted less than half of the number of members given to the Muhammadans. If we consider the distribution of elected seats, we find that all the three Municipal seats have been captured by Muhammadans. By a fortuitous circumstance the University happened to return a Hindu member instead of a European; and therefore the presence of a Hindu member is due to mere chance which may or may not occur again.

"The Hindus to whom the Province owes its trade and commerce, and its industrial and financial activities at present depend on the nominated members to voice their opinions. It seems to us that to remedy the existing inequalities in representation and to give effect to the original intention of the Government about proportionate representation the number of seats to be thrown open to election should be increased from 5 to 12. And considering that the prosperity of Municipal towns and Cantonments is due almost entirely to the industrial activities and business enterprise of the Hindus, it is essential to provide for the adequate representation of their interests on the Council. This can be done by increasing the present number of seats from one to two in each of the three groups with cumulative vote in order that the Hindus or at any rate non-Muhammadans might secure one of the two seats in each group. Then, if, as proposed by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, three seats are allotted to District Boards, one at least may be secured by a non-Muhammadan who may not necessarily be a Hindu. The remaining additional seat may be granted either to the Sikhs whose claims certainly deserve recognition quite as much as those of Muhammadans in other provinces, or to landholders who will elect by turns a Muhammadan and a non-Muhammadan alternately as fixed in the Regulation. Under such an arrangement the necessity for nominating as many as four Muhammadans is entirely obviated and the Hindus and Sikhs will be given a fair chance of securing adequate representation through their chosen representative. Our proposal, it may be conceded, has one merit. It does not intrench on anybody's preserve. All it asks for is that the just claims of a people who contribute more than most others to the prosperity of the Province should be recognised. The allotment of two seats to each of the three Municipal groups assures three seats for Muhammadans under all circumstances, whereas at present they may lose one of the three. Their three seats being secure they will have no cause for dissatisfaction. The non-Muhammadans will have between them three seats and further inequalities in representation can be removed by Government by nominating Hindus or Sikhs as the case may be. We hope this view of the matter will be considered by the Government of India and the injustice now done to the Hindus removed.

"There now remains one more point to be considered, viz, the representation of the Punjab in the Supreme Legislative Council. At present there are three members in the Supreme Council and all of them are Muhammadans. How this has come about and what chance there may be for variation, if any, we shall presently see. One of the three members represents the Muhammadans, and that member, we may safely presume, will always be a Muhammadan. The second member is selected by the Government to represent the landholders. The member will be alternately a Muhammadan and a non-Muhammadan. The third member is to be elected by the non-official members of the Local Legislative Council. The majority of the electors being Muhammadans and their sympathisers it is ten to one that they will prefer a Muhammadan. This view finds support from what has already happened. In December last a vacancy occurred in the Supreme Council owing to the lamented death of Sardar Partap Singh. In the by-election that followed notwithstanding the fact there were already two Muhammadans from this Province, the Muhammadan electors and their European supporters voted solid for a Muhammadan candidate and confirmed the fears entertained by the Hindus as to the possibility of securing any support for their candidate from the majority of electors. In order to obviate this anomaly two seats might be allotted for election by the non-official members with cumulative vote thus affording a fair chance for the Hindus to secure one of the seats. Then as regards landholders, there is no reason why the privilege of election should not be granted to them as in other major provinces. If the franchise qualification be fixed lower than in other provinces (for the Punjab is not a land of big Zamindars and Taluqadars) we may expect men of education and knowledge to come forward to contest the seat. His Excellency the Viceroy is full alive to the grievances of the Hindus and we feel assured he will redress them and earn our lasting gratitude."

Sikh representation on Legislative Councils, &c.

27. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 7th July 1912, publishes a note headed "The share of Sikhs in the Councils of Government and other representative circles." After complaining of the inadequacy of Sikh representation on the Imperial and Punjab Legislative Councils, as also on Municipalities and District Boards in this province, the writer says that it is impossible to safeguard Sikh interests under existing circumstances. If Municipal and District Boards, which now consist chiefly of non-Sikhs, were to adopt resolutions, prohibiting Sikhs from decapitating goats, organising religious processions, or performing any other religious rite, there would be no one to prevent them from doing this.

(a)—Judicial.

The Mymensing case.

28. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 13th July 1912 :—

"The text of the judgment delivered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Mymensing case has arrived. A careful study of it suggests that while the principal laid down by that tribunal is unquestioned its applicability to India in the existing conditions with a combination of executive and judicial functions is doubtful and is even detrimental to the interests of the people. In deciding the case as they did Their Lordships do not seem to have taken into consideration the object of the legislature in providing safeguards against the irregular procedures of over-zealous magistrates who are burdened with multifarious duties and responsibilities, who derive information from various non-judicial channels and who therefore cannot in every instance be deemed to bring a strictly judicial frame of mind for the consideration of cases. India is a country where people are subject to a great deal of pressure from executive officials of the several departments of the State whom one writer in a Bombay periodical aptly and justly designated the 'seven tyrants.' The powers vested in these 'seven tyrants' being already too extensive to be wholesome it ought to be the aim of the judiciary to impose restraints against the abuse of such powers in circumstances which are often tempting to executive officials. We regret to find that Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have ignored this aspect of the question and confined themselves to the abstract principle of a judicial officer being always a judicial officer whether or not he holds his courts formally and directs his proceedings from the court house. This decision, we are afraid, will produce a very undesirable effect on the tendency of the average official who exercises both executive and judicial functions.

"The Calcutta High Court took the right view when it held that the defendant District Magistrate was not acting as a court. However, as a consequence of the present decision of the Judicial Committee the separation of the executive and judicial functions has become imperative and the execution of the long pending scheme should now be expedited. Otherwise the decision is bound to be harmful in its practical application to existing conditions."

(b)—Police.

The lawless Kabulis.

29. The Punjab Samachar (Lahore), of the 6th July 1912, has an article headed "Oppression by Kabulis." After remarking that Pathans commit different offences in all parts of India, the paper holds them responsible even for the recent recrudescence of dacoities in the Punjab. The present, momentary decrease in these dacoities is not due to Pathans having turned over a new leaf, but to their having gone back to their homes to harvest crops; on their return to this province, dacoities will again become general. After giving an account of the recent Kabuli riot in Beadon Square, Calcutta, the writer says that the incident shows how fearless they have grown. Government should make a law to protect the lives and property of the people against "these tyrants."

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

The restriction of exports of food grain.

30. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 13th July 1912:—

"It is difficult to deny that one reason for the increase in criminality in any district is not the prevailing high prices. Where prices fluctuate a great deal owing either to the failure of the monsoon or to large and unrestricted exports thefts and dacoities as a rule increase. The gambling mania in Calcutta is apprehended to lead to the increase of crime. Ever since the large exportation of rice from Burma began the Burmans knew that the rice market would rise. A Burma paper says that the price of rice has risen from 2 rupees to 6 rupees a basket within three years. This year again the high prices have already given incentive to crime. In Bhamo and Salin crime has gone out of police control. Serious cases of dacoities are reported and in one case a man and a woman were killed. We hope that the proposal to levy and export duty on rice in Burma will not be rejected by the Government of India. It should be a matter of general application whether export duty should not be levied on any article of food which rises above 25 per cent. in any one year. The proposal of the Burma Government as regards rice will create a precedent which ought to serve other provinces of India in future whenever high prices threaten social disorder or give impetus to crime."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Parkash newspaper.

31. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 9th July 1912, publishes a leader headed "A shower of arrows at the Editor of the Parkash. Is it blasphemous even to speak of politics?" The weapons used of late against it, says the paper, are seldom employed because they are fit for the hands of only mean and degraded persons. It is surprised at their employment by a paper, calling itself a member of the Arya press. No Arya periodical has hitherto worked for the Criminal Investigation Department, a task that has been undertaken by certain Muslim papers alone. The Arya Samaj can, however, no longer pride themselves on having clean hands, continues the writer, seeing that Arya papers are desirous of endangering the very existence of the Parkash by charging it with attempts to create feelings of hatred for the British in the Samaj. The accusation is obviously intended to set both Government and the Arya Samaj against the Parkash, and there are, the Editor declares, three classes of people now engaged in wielding this blackguard's weapon against the paper : those who are personal enemies of the Editor and not enamoured of the Arya Samaj ; those who hate the Arya Samaj and therefore the Editor of the Parkash too ; those who love the Samaj, but bear the Editor enmity and have allowed hatred to overcome loyalty.

The trumpeter of Dharampal, Mr. (Raj Narayan) Arman (Editor of the Arjan) is of the first class. Sometime back he intemperately attacked Lala Munshi Ram, the Gurukula, and its alumni in the columns of the Rajput Gazette, with the result that he lost the editorial charge of that paper. He now attributes his dismissal to the Gurukula people, and has consequently been attacking the Arya Samaj, and along with it the Parkash, in the columns of the Arjun. His present plight is pitiable and the only way for him to better it is to induce Government to subsidise his paper. It is, perhaps, with the object of proving himself deserving of a subsidy that he has been publishing the sort of articles which have of late been appearing in the Arjun.

In the second class are the Vakil and other Muslim papers, which have wrongly considered (certain) writings in the Parkash to be prejudicial to the Arya Samaj. They argue that, because some graduates of the Gurukula attended the Calcutta Congress as spectators, therefore the Samaj is a political body. They draw the same inference from the suggestion by the Parkash that two political papers owned by Arya Samajists should be issued from Delhi. But, if their reasoning is correct, the fact that the Vakil was owned by the late Sheikh Ghulam Muhammad and that the Observer belongs to Khwaja Ahad Shah should show Islam to be far more political in character (than the Samaj). Let the Vakil, says the Editor, know that Aryas do not confound politics with "blasphemy ;" and that the Arya Samaj has nothing to do with present-day politics. Sir Agha Khan openly participates in politics, but does this prove that the Shamsis are a political body? It is, therefore, ridiculous to say that, because Aryas evince interest in their country's affairs, therefore the Arya Samaj is a political society.

Land acquisition in Delhi.

32. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 13th July 1912 :—

"Now that the land acquisition process in Delhi will be applied, it is worth while considering whether the displacement of many thousands of agricultural families could not be effected with as little hardship as possible. A correspondent in the last issue of the Panjabee pointed out that a feeling of absolute destitution would be felt by the bulk of the landowners who have to part with the dear old food-giver for generations. They would, of course, have the market value of the land paid to them by Government, but what would Rs. 100 or 150 buy to an ignorant agriculturist to support his life which he is to start afresh possibly in his fifty-fifth year of age ? It would certainly be more advantageous to him to have an equal share of land in another part of the country, in the Canal Colonies, if available. According to the estimates of Government the cost of acquiring the area notified for new Delhi would not be more than £200,000 or £233,000. The notified area, we know is just about 115,000 acres and at the highest rate each acre would have to be parted by the agriculturist for £2. Supposing the requirements of the Governments being less than 115,000 acres, the average price of an acre cannot exceed £3. If we suppose that on an average an Indian agriculturist has 4 to 5 acres of land on which he is maintaining himself and his family we have about 25,000 to 28,000 families to be turned out of their lands with Rs. 180 to Rs. 250 a piece and it is certainly a very anxious situation which requires a man to start his life once again with Rs. 180 to Rs. 225 lying loosely in his pocket. For aught we know, it may be reduced by 50 per cent. in his wanderings to find another piece of land and most of the deficieney reach the Punjab excise treasury ! That is, if the woful ryot is fortunate enough to escape the attentions of a Pathan dacoit or some hungry middle man. We appeal to the Government to consider this side of the question."

I.—Politics.

The Trans-Persian Railway.

1. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 20th July 1912 :—

"It is hard to pursue the line of reasoning adopted by Lord Morley in regard to the Trans-Persian Railway. His contention that the British would neither construct the railway themselves nor allow Persia to grant concessions to another power virtually amounts to a dog-in-the-manager policy. We do not see much difference between this sort of opposition of British military experts and the reiterated opposition of the late Amir Abdur Rahman of Afghanistan against railway connection with a foreign country. Amir Abdur Rahman, like Lords Lamington, Inchcape, Crewe and Curzon, had no objection for constructing railways in the interior. But he was vehemently opposed to any connection with the outer world and sought his safety in the alpine seclusion created for him by Allah. In his autobiography he counselled his sons to remember that it was might that ruled the world and not right and that, therefore, until they had a great army strong enough to oppose foreigners they should never think of weakening the strength of isolation by constructing railways. But British statemanship and British prowess which have been the admiration of the civilized world now seek refuge in isolation and refuse to link India and Europe with railway. This is a position which is thoroughly incomprehensible and is bound to expose England to the charge of unreasonable obstinacy.

"The attitude of the Radical Government towards this question is likewise incomprehensible. It is especially so in view of the sympathetic, though not uncritical, support accorded to it both by Sir Valentine Chirol and the Times. Sir Valentine Chirol had approached this question ten years ago from a purely strategical point of view. He had then consequently entertained doubts of the wisdom of establishing a link between India and Europe. To-day he says he regards those arguments 'for the most part inapplicable to the present case.' Ten years ago Russia was believed to be contemplating the construction of a railway of a purely strategical character distinctly menacing to Afghanistan. But the present scheme is designed to provide 'primarily, at least, for pacific purposes, a rapid and easy means of communication between Europe and India and constructed ex hypothesi by the friendly co-operation of two European powers.' Whatever may be the altered circumstances and conditions which have induced a change in the opinions of accepted authorities, it is both pleasant and encouraging to be told by Sir Valentine Chirol that with the growth of railway communications all over the world it is not possible for Great Britain to maintain indefinitely 'an attitude of mere negation in regard to railway communication between India and Europe.' That as an aspect of the question which cannot fail to arrest the attention of far-seeing statesmen, not merely on this railway question, but at every turn in the progress of this country. India is eager to participate with other members of the empire in its duties and responsibilities, and the example and influence of its neighbours in China and Japan cannot be lost upon it.

"We are, however, glad to find that the sane and sensible view taken by Sir Valentine Chirol has been expressed more fully, and with greater force and better effect by the Times in a leading article in which it accords its approval to the railway project.

"While the Times has striven to maintain the noblest and the best traditions of British statesmanship, it seems strange that none of its arguments should have convinced either Lord Curzon and his supporters or the Radical Government which holds fast to the out-of-date strategical view of expert military officers, even as Amir Abdur Rahman, and declines to go 'beyond the negative encouragement of refusing to prohibit operations so far as could be done.' However, Lord Morley's assurance that the Government desire to have 'the option of making such railways ourselves' gives a reasonable hope that ultimately considerations of world's progress will prevail over the opinions of military experts. If neither philanthropy nor justice to the backward races succeeds in inducing a change of policy in the military experts, we may be sure that the time will soon come when they will be forced to advocate the construction of railway in their own interests. As Sir Valentine Chirol rightly foresees, Great Britain would not be in a position to prevent the construction of a railway from Russia to the southern limits of the Russian sphere in Persia; and when Russia accomplishes this the British 'could hardly contemplate with satisfaction the purposes for which that railway controlled in a hostile spirit might be used.' It seems clear, therefore, that the present opposition of a few noble Lords and the indifference of the Radical Government are not formidable obstacles in the way of linking India with Europe.

"As regards the advantages which may result to India from this linking there can be but one opinion. It will be the means of promoting a steady, constant and ever increasing stream of inter-communication between peoples and races. It will create fresh openings for enterprising Indians, Hindus as well as Muhammadans, and afford them opportunities of distinction in commercial and industrial pursuits. It will afford means of employment not only to British Indians but to the backward races in the tribal country at present engaged in pursuits of doubtful benefit. It will help the Hindus in the cis-Indus tract to supplement the deficiencies of the Muhammadans in the trans-Indus tract vice versâ and establish between them a community of interest. By that means it may also operate as a powerful force in softening racial acerbities now visible in this Province and across the Jumna. In short it will result not only in the numerous incidental benefits of inter-communication, travel and commerce but also in conscious efforts made for the uplift for the backward races and nations. As the Times rightly points out there are numerous questions of detail requiring scrutiny. Not the least important of them is the financial responsibilities which may devolve on the Indian Government in the shape of guarantees. Nevertheless the blessings of the link can hardly be doubted. We fervently hope that the Trans-Persian Railway might soon become an accomplished fact."

The British Government and the Islamic world.

2. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 17th July 1912, publishes an article headed "Man proposes but God disposes." The paper refers to the debate in the Commons on the subject of the British foreign policy, and says that, in his reply to the attacks of Mr. Dillon and Earl Ronaldshay on the Anglo-Russian convention, Sir Edward Grey, declared that, but for the convention, Russia would have made the boundaries of Persia and India conterminous by building a railway, while Mr. Lloyd George, in his recent speech at the Mansion House, remarked that England's international relations could never be more satisfactory than they were at present. These utterances, adds the paper, have caused among Muhammadans (lit. the people) the fear that the British Government will do nothing to end the high-handed action on the part of Russia, even if she again bombards Meshed, insults the local mosques and shrines, and kills "the great men of Islam" in Persia. They are under the impression that the British Government will bestir itself only when Russia takes permanent possession of the Shah's Dominions. It was after the Anglo-Russian convention that the Muscovites assailed the independence of Persia, and caused mischief and bloodshed in the different parts of that country. In the opinion of Great Britain, however, that convention has proved a veritable blessing for Persia. The Editor then goes on to say that, according to the Moroccan paper Al Saada, the French beseiged the Jumma Masjid (where he does not say) and desecrated the shrine of Sidi Idris. They have, moreover, destroyed the independence of the country, have killed thousands of innocent Muhammadans, including children and widows, and still continue to massacre them. Nevertheless, the British Government regards the situation (in Morocco) as satisfactory. But while this is the case (with England) a great commotion is on foot in the Muslim world. Even the Persians, who used to be regarded as an inert and lifeless people, have begun to rouse themselves. The Shaikh-ul-Sharait at Isphahan, who is a great religious leader of the Persians, has issued a circular letter, in which he says that most of the European nations have employed different artifices to humiliate Islamic countries; that their cruel deeds have resulted in the universal cry that Muhammadans throughout the world should join forces; but that this can be possible only if Ulemas (in different lands) meet in one place to exchange views. With this end in view the writer held a meeting of the renowned Ulemas of Najafs Karbela, Samra, and Kazwin at the last named place. It was openly announced by the assembly after careful consideration that "we have not united with any worldly object or gain; we aim at asking all Islamic countries to obey the commandants of God and Muhammad; we desire all Muhammadans to end their internal differences for ever; the important question of Islam and heathenism (? Christianity) is now to the fore; and all Muhammadans should unite to-day to support and defend our holy religion and allow no further opportunity to foreign nations to ruin Muslim countries." Commenting on this the Vakil remarks that British statesmen should not overlook these things and should take proper steps to avert all danger; for, otherwise, it is difficult to say what unpleasant consequences may result.

3. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 16th (received on the 23rd) July 1912, publishes an article headed "World's political stage: Islam and England in danger"? The world's political horizon, it says, has been dreadfully overcast of late, the least significant result of this is the fact that rivers of blood have been shed in Tripoli, Persia, and Morocco. The tyranny and aggression, it adds, to which the Islamic world is being subjected have thrown into the shade even the oppression practised by Halaku and Changez Khan. It would appear that, with the exception only of Great Britain, all other Christian powers of Europe are determined to extirpate Islam. Continuing, the paper remarks that, in view of the fact of Russia, Italy and France having openly imputed a religious colour to "the sanguinary wars now being waged," it is impossible that the fire of religious indignation should not be kindled among the followers of Islam. It has affected all Muhammadans alike from China to Morocco. Although Muhammadans appear to be very weak as compared with the enemies of their religion, nevertheless, when their excitement "developes" into madness (? fanaticism), Europe's Dreadnoughts and destructive guns will avail her naught. The fact that Italy and France have invaded distant Islamic possessions and have left alone the small (Christian) states of Belgium, &c., which lie close to them, proves clearly enough that their present doings in Tripoli and Morocco, respectively, are religious and not political in character. Russia, who is an old enemy of Islam, is at the bottom of all the oppression which is now being practised on the Islamic world. The paper can say for certain that Russia and most of the other Christian powers of Europe, excluding Great Britain, are about to descend on Muhammadan countries in order completely to sweep Islam off the earth's surface.

Christendom and the Islamic world.

4. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 24th July 1912:—

Mr. Montagu and the Anglo-Indian Press.

"Anglo-Indian papers do not lose any opportunity they get of having a fling at Mr. Montagu, the Under-Secretary of State for India. The reason for their attitude is the sympathetic and liberal attitude adopted by him with reference to Indian questions. We are aware that in the matter of the interpretation of the passages relating to Provincial autonomy in India contained in the Government of India Despatch Mr. Montagu acted far more liberally than Lord Crewe and this is sufficient to make the Anglo-Indian Press sneer at him. Now the announcement regarding Mr. Montagu's intended visit to this country has afforded a further opportunity to papers like the Pioneer and the Statesman to speak of Mr. Montagu in contemptuous terms. The people of India of all classes will unite in according Mr. Montagu a warm and a respectful welcome. We hope he will try to meet the leaders of the people and learn from them the aspirations of the people."

5. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 23rd July 1912.

Racial feeling in England.

"An Indian student writing to the Times of India of his experiences in study in England, deplores that racial feeling and antipathy to Indians already prevails in the Universities of Great Britain. He says it is widespread and is making the lives of Indian students uncomfortable.

"He therefore suggests that Indian students should in future go to France, Germany and America, where special facilities are given."

(b)—Home.

6. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 16th (received on the 24th) July 1912, publishes a communication headed "India's future advancement." The writer—Tahl Ram Ganga Ram, of Dera Ismail Khan—says that India cannot get back its past civilisation, wealth, and greatness unless education is made free and compulsory in the country. If Government does not do so, the leaders and (other) well-wishers of India should open libraries and reading-rooms in all dharamsalas and temples; start night schools in every village; and publish small tracts on social, religious and economic questions for the benefit of literate persons, who consist chiefly of Brahmans and Sadhus and have a great deal of influence with the masses. After remarking that the necessary funds could be found by diverting charity into the right channels, the writer urges the "educated people, especially Hindus," to try to make Sadhus useful for "our national advancement."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

The Amir and the Khost rising.

7. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 16th July 1912, publishes an article headed "The political sagacity of the ruler of Afghanistan." After praising the Amir as a wide-awake, far-sighted, and enlightened ruler, the paper refers to the comments of its English contemporaries on the Khost rising. These journals, it adds, desired that rivers of blood should be shed in Afghanistan, but the ruler of Kabul has quelled the rising in such a way as to make both friends and foes acknowledge his sagacity and statesmanship. After quoting from the Times in support of this assertion, it says that, if a European ruler had displayed the qualities which the Amir has done in crushing the rebellion at Khost, English papers would have lauded him to the skies, but that they have written not a single word in praise of Habibulla Khan.

Hindus in Kabul.

8. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 20th July 1912 :—

"From a show of defence, which we publish elsewhere, made by a Kabul paper about the impartiality of protection afforded to Hindus in Afghanistan, we can plainly see elements of bitterness and aggression. The charge that Hindus are 'cowards' and do not bring cases against Muhammadans to courts does not prove a brotherly attitude but betrays intense prejudice. No man who suffers a wrong and is injured by aggression would hesitate to complain if he knows that such complaint has a chance of impartial enquiry. Hindus are known in India to be litigious and for the most trifling matters they go to courts. It is because British Courts of Justice have infused confidence as to their impartiality. The Hindus are not cowards in British India. Even humble women and girls lodge suits and can invoke the aid of law. How, then, do the suffering Hindus living under the Amir's sway become 'cowards' and make no complaints of wrongs inflicted on them? Even if such were so, how can the justice-loving Kabulee allow injustice or aggressive conduct on the part of his countrymen go by default of complaint? Is that conducive to good Government, just society and impartial rule? We are afraid that the defence is not convincing and there is something that needs the interference of the British authorities."

III.—Native States.

Change of Minister in Hyderabad.

9. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 16th July 1912, says that, there being a world of difference between the habits and ideas of the late Nizam and his successor, it was very difficult for Maharaja Sir Kishen Parshad to do justice to the duties of the Wazir's post under the present ruler of Hyderabad. Those in the know, it adds, have high hopes from the new Prime Minister in regard to the welfare of the Nizam's dominions.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 18th July 1912, praises the Nizam's sagacity and statesmanship in making the appointment, and in having the post of Wazir vacated (by its former incumbent). Some incidents, it adds, of the time of Maharaja Sir Kishen Parshad, e. g., the permanent severance of Berar's connection with Hyderabad and the loss of the political influence which the State used to enjoy when Salar Jang I, Salar Jang II, Asman Jah, and Vicar-ul-Mulk held the post of Prime Minister, may be spoken of as "the dirge of justice and far-sight."

"When Maharaja Sir Kishen Pershad was appointed Minister, Hyderabad State, grave fears were openly expressed in certain well-informed quarters that his term of office would prove as disastrous to the State as that of his ancestor Maharaja Chandu Lal. The Hindu Press severely animadverted on the attitude of the section of the Muslim Press which was full of the 'superstitious' apprehensions that Maharaja Kishen Pershad's Ministry would witness a completion of the work of cession of Berar from Hyderabad begun during the Ministry of Maharaja Chandu Lal. Those fears have been realised only too well, though there is reason to think that the outgoing Minister was not wholly responsible for the matter. Maharaja Sir Kishen Pershad is an adept in the art of winning the favour of Englishmen. He knows how to ingratiate himself with Musalmans of the old-world fashion, and was the favourite Minister of the late Nizam. But the prominent characteristic of his Ministry has been the expulsion of many North India Muhammadans from Hyderabad, while the educational backwardness ef the premier Native State in India is due in great measure to his paralysing policy. We trust the new Ministry will pursue a vigorous educational policy and re-open avenues for the employment of Indian talent."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Hindus and jhatka meat.

10. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 17th July 1912, has a note headed "Should all Hindus eat jhatka meat"? Several Hindu newspapers of Lahore, it says, have of late been vigorously agitating that all Hindus should abjure the use of halal in favour of jhatka meat. It publishes a letter from "Akmal, of Qadian," saying that the agitation is intended to injure Muslim meat-sellers and urging Muhammadans to open shops (to supply all their own requirements); adding that if jhatka shops are started in bazars, Hindus should not object to the opening even of beef shops. Commenting on the letter the paper says that the agitation will suggest to Musalmans the idea of abstaining from eating things touched by Hindus, and that there would then be a fear of the relations between the two communities being again strained.

The Hindus and Shamsi Hindus of Amritsar.

11. The Indar (Lahore), of the 12th (received on the 19th) July 1912, publishes a note headed "A riot between Shamsi Hindus and Hindus at Amritsar." It says that Dina Nath has, by starting a fund in aid of the Agha Khan Hindus, raised a storm in the Punjab. Considerable unpleasantness has been caused in many places between Hindus and Sir Agha Khan's Hindu followers. The latter had hitherto been freely mixing with the former, but have now, through mischief-making by Dina Nath, severed their connection with Hindus and begun to call themselves "Ismailis." The aforesaid riot at Amritsar displays the gravity of the situation, and, but for the said fund, matters would never have assumed their present aspect.

Complaint against Peshawar Hindus.

12. The Panjab Advocate (Mianwali), of the 18th July 1912, publishes a poem headed "Addressed to the flattering Hindu of Peshawar." The poet "Mujrim" writes as follows :—

"O unworthy son of thy community, what is this that thou hast done?

"Having been carried away by incense-burning, thou hast practised oppression on us.

"O shameless (man), thou hast, without pausing to think,

"Defamed someone from fear of another.

"Thou hast misled the Hindu Press :

"O evil (man), thou hast done evil to good men.

* * * * *

"Thou shouldst * * feel shame * * for the mischief thou hast done,

"Or all * * will expose thee.

* * * * *

"God alone will punish thee for

"The temerity thou hast displayed in trampling

"On the rights of the weak by siding with the powerful."

13. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 16th July 1912, has an article headed "Shower of arrows on the Editor of the Parkash."

The Parkash newspaper.

In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 31 of Selections No. 29), the paper says that it does not wish to lie under the charge of seeking to injure the Arya Samaj by prejudicing Government against that society. It undoubtedly loves the Samaj better than Government, but as the objects and interests of the two do not clash in any way why should it publish writings likely to lay the former open to the above charge? Continuing, it states that the Bharat of Jullundur has accused it of being desirous of introducing politics into the Arya Samaj, with a view to injuring that body and breeding feelings of hatred between it and the powers that be. The accusation is based on the recent suggestion in the Parkash that two political papers, owned and edited by "Arya Samajists," should be issued from Delhi to lay the bright side of the work of the Samaj before the public (vide paragraph 17 of Selections No. 25). The Bharat has, however, changed the words given within inverted commas in the preceding sentence into "the Arya Samaj." It is undoubtedly reprehensible in any Arya Samaj to start a political paper, but the same conduct in an Arya can by no means be called objectionable, unless it can be shown that the views preached by him are of a dangerous character. After remarking that even those most loyal to Government cannot have the courage to say that an interest in politics is in itself a bad thing, the Editor observes that, if the Arya Samaj can remain a political society in spite of one or more members engaging in trade, how can the starting of a political paper by any Arya convert the Samaj into a political body? It is equally absurd to argue that, although there is nothing objectionable in starting a political paper, it is reprehensible to use such a journal to serve the Arya Samaj. If politics are not inherently bad, why should it be harmful to make any political paper the means of furthering the work of the Samaj? If, moreover, there can be no objection to using trade to serve the Arya Samaj, how is it bad to lay the bright side of the work of the Samaj before the public through a political paper? Political papers reach the hands (even) of those persons who hate the very sight of the Samajic organs, and there can be no harm in converting these people into sympathisers of the Arya Samaj by first acquainting them with its work, after which they could bring themselves to reflect over its doctrines also. "Most people accept religion, not through the mind, but through the heart," and it is, therefore, necessary that the Samaj should have papers to secure converts, not only "through the intellect," but also "through the heart." It is not, however, necessary that only political papers should be started to gain this object: social and moral journals also could be published to secure the end. The Editor then goes on to say that the writing of novels and of books on history, science, and philosophy—in short, every legitimate means—should be, and has been, taken advantage of to propagate religion. After remarking that those who have been upset at the suggestion referred to are ignorant of the history of the world, he observes that it was from the above consideration that he welcomed Brahmchari Indar's Life of Napoleon. No person can keep his religious ideas out of a book written by himself, and the publication named also shows that it is the work of a follower of the Vedic religion. Samajic ideas will travel wherever this book may find its way; and it is for the same reason that the Editor regards Professor Ram Dev's History of Ancient India as being highly useful for the Arya Samaj. The ability with which the History defends the doctrines of the Vedic faith and replies to attacks on them is really praiseworthy, and the book has, therefore, rendered a service to the Arya Samaj. Proceeding, the Parkash remarks that, although ideals remain the same, the means of reaching them change with the times. There was a time, it adds, when Sanyasis alone used to preach religion in India, but now papers constitute a powerful means of disseminating ideas. After remarking that the Arya Samaj also wishes to make use of this means, the Editor says that he has seen with his own eyes what service political papers can render to the Samaj. When, in 1907, the Arya Samaj was charged with sedition, the leading papers in the country unanimously repudiated the same, while they wrote "in our favour" in connection with the Patiala sedition case also. When, therefore, "we" need the services of a political paper, is it not wise that "we" should start such a journal "under us," which would (also) spare "us," the entreaties which we have now to address to political journals? Again, could any one have dared to suggest during the trial of the Patiala case that "we" should not profit by the services of the political press? Since "we" need a political paper at every step, what harm has been wrought by the remark of the Parkash that some Aryas should unite to publish one or two political papers at Delni? Besides, do not those very persons, who have been opposing this suggestion, admit the necessity for such papers? Did Lala Badri Das, M A., who is one of the Bharat's proprietors, prevent the Arya Patrika, of which also he is part proprietor, from being converted into a political journal? The latest issue of the Patrika shows what character that paper is to assume in future. With the exception of half a column of Samajic news, the entire number is filled with political matter.

Swami Dayanand Saraswati.

14. The Indar (Lahore), of the 12th July 1912, has a paragraph headed "A search after Swami Dayanand." The Editor, who says that he writes from Himalayan jungles, remarks that last year he was told by some Sanyasis that Swami Dayanand had been re-born in Kashmir, and that he had taken up his abode in a certain place in a deep forest. In the Life of Dayanand Saraswati published by the Arya Pratinidhi Sabha, Punjab, it is mentioned that he would be born again. After remarking that a Sadhu on the bank of the Ravi near Lahore also gave him a similar assurance, the Editor says that, being anxious to find out the Swami, he left Lahore some time ago, and, staying for a day at Jammu on his way, he is now wandering in the jungles of Kashmir with as much ardour as a true lover feels in finding out his beloved. His love, however, is not as deep as it should be, but he is anxious to find out the Swami in order to have his doubts about the Vedas removed; because nobody but Dayanand can remove those doubts which have obliged the Editor to renounce his belief in the infallibility of the Vedas and that the scriptures named are revealed books.

How to raise the depressed classes.

15. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 20th July 1912:—

"The problem is not so difficult in this province as it is in other parts of India. In Madras, for instance, a Brahman cannot bear the near presence of an outcaste, and he has prescribed fixed distances beyond which particular outcastes cannot penetrate into his presence. The prejudice was never so great in this province, and the recent developments in social life have weakened it still further. The Railway train, the water works, the introduction of aerated waters, the neutral policy of the Government and absence of caste prejudice among Englishmen who command the respect of even the most bigoted Pandit—all these circumstances have wrought a great change for the better, so far as the attitude of the so-called higher classes to the lower classes is concerned. Still, however, the lot of the low classes is extremely pitiable.

"Our first aim should be to take out the sting from the despicable position to which most of them are condemned. Though deadened by centuries of ill usage, their feelings still revolt at the treatment meted out to them. A spade is no doubt a spade, but it is not the acme of good manners to call a spade a spade, though at times it may be the height of courage. If we are not prepared to mix freely with the low castes we can at least behave towards them in such a manner that even they should feel that we respect them and love them at heart, and it is only under the restrictions of caste that we observe the distinction between them and ourselves.

"The next stage in the amelioration of the depressed classes is their free admission to religious privileges. This is a work which should be entirely left to the good sense and resources of the religious societies. The various Sabhas and Samajes are already doing good work in this direction and if the heads of the orthodox community once set the seal of approval on this work the whole difficulty will be removed.

* * * * * * *

"The last stage in the movement will be the raising of the status of the depressed classes so that they may become a part and parcel of the Hindu nation. In connection with this two problems were sometime ago put forward by a learned writer in the Hindustan Review. The first of those problems was what status could be given to the depressed classes in the social organisation of the Hindus. The writer had shown a sort of despair at being confronted by the bogey of caste. Hinduism cannot absorb any accretion which would not fall under some earmarked group called caste. As these depressed classes could not fall under any recognised caste they could not enter into the fold of Hinduism so long as the impenetrable wall of caste stood in their way. With due deference to the learned writer in the abovementioned review we must say that he has exaggerated the difficulty too much. If he means that the depressed classes should be so raised as to have intermarriage with the higher castes promiscuously, this is an ambition which, howsoever laudable it may be, can never be realised. Hindus are divided into so many groups on the lines of intermarrying qualifications that they cannot for many centuries to come allow any foreign element even from the highest castes to enter into the reserved compartments. But the question is whether the principle of whole-hoggism and neck or nothing can be applied here. In our opinion Hindus can take into their fold any group of people who are sufficiently large in themselves to form a caste within pale of Hinduism. Even at the present time there are very important sections of Hindu community who, so far as intermarriage goes, are strictly circumscribed in their choice. The Mohyals and the Ahluwalias are instances in point.

"Yet they are as good Hindus as any other castes, and better than many. In the same way if, e.g., Meghs are admitted to a position of social equality in other respects they can be a separate caste, as they are now, so far as the taking and giving of brides is concerned. The only problem, therefore, is how to raise them to a status of equality with other Hindus in other respects, e.g., their free intercourse with the other Hindus in taking part in the social gatherings and eating and drinking."

VI.—Legislation.

Sikh representation on Legislative Councils.

16. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 14th July 1912, has a note headed "The Sikh minority should not be ignored." After remarking that Sikhs form $\frac{1}{6}$th of the population of the Punjab and that no other community in the province can compare with them in the matter of political importance, the paper complains that they are not adequately represented on Legislative Councils and local bodies. The result, it adds, is that their interests are being everywhere trampled on by other classes of the people. Their demand for adequate representation is supported by all communities except a few bigoted Muhammadans. Can Government, asks the paper, have any objection to granting special concessions to Sikhs, just as has been done in the case of Musalmans ?

Muhammadan members of the Viceroy's Legislative Council.

17. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 19th July 1912, publishes a communication headed "Muhammadan members of the Viceroy's Council." The writer says that, according to the general opinion of Muhammadans, they have derived no benefit from the presence of Messrs. Jinnah and Mazhar-ul-Haque in the Supreme Legislative Council. After remarking that these gentlemen have been anxious to win the goodwill of Hindus in preference to that of Muhammadans, he expresses satisfaction at the prospect of His Highness the Agha Khan representing Bombay this time in the Council. Next he suggests that men like Nawab Abdul Majid, Raja of Mahmudabad, Mian Muhammad Shafi, Malik Umar Hayat Khan, Nawab Syed Muhammad, the Nawab of Dacca, Syed Nawab Ali Chowdhry and Maulvi Rafi-ud-Din Ahmad should be elected to the Council ; the Wakf Bill introduced by Mr. Jinnah being piloted by Mian Muhammad Shafi or Nawab Abdul Majid. Continuing, he appeals to Muhammadan Councillors to safeguard the rights of their community in the Supreme Council, saying that it is wrong to think that Government attaches great weight to those Muhammadans who see eye to eye with Hindus.

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

Libel case against the Editor of the Burma Critic.

18 The Muin (Amritsar), of the 16th (received on the 23rd) July 1912, publishes an article headed "A noble Englishman in trouble owing to his sympathising with Muhammadans." Referring to the prosecution for libel of the Burma Critic's Editor, Mr. Arnold, by the Deputy Commissioner of Mergri, the paper says that, not only has the tyrannical white ravisher of the Muhammadan girl in question escaped scot-free, but a noble Englishman has also been involved in trouble for the offence of having sympathised with the friendless girl and her relations. After deprecating the shamelessness of Indian Musalmans in not having moved in the matter and after expressing surprise at the silence of the Muslim Press and of the League, he observes that from the political stand-point, the incident is a most important one for Muhammadans and likely to exercise a powerful effect on their political future. It, therefore, invites their attention to it, and suggests that a fund should be started to collect the money needed by Mr. Arnold to defend himself. It makes the further suggestion that Muhammadans should hold meetings in all towns to sympathise with, and thank, the Editor of the Burma Critic, and to urge the Government of India and the Secretary of State to order fresh enquiries to be made into the original rape case through a Commission consisting of such independent and able Europeans and Indians as would not allow themselves to be influenced by Europeans in authority in Burma. In conclusion, it asks the Muslim League to cast off its indifference and cowardice, and to take the trouble of looking into the matter.

Conditional release of prisoners.

19. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 23rd July 1912.

"Elsewhere we publish the Punjab Government Resolution on the inauguration of a scheme of conditional release of prisoners from jails. It is a very important and bold scheme prompted by humanitarian impulses. No such institution exists anywhere in India. Punjab sets a liberal example now which other provinces may well copy. The Salvation Army which is given the superintendence of released prisoners, has branches in Madras and Bombay and they may induce the Madras Government to adopt a similar scheme. Prisoners will be entitled to a remission of 2 to 6 months under certain conditions and these will, with their own consent, be handed over to the Salvation Army Settlement, established near the Lahore Jail. Proper steps will be taken to see that nothing unfair or unjust to the released prisoner takes place, and to see that he is given proper and even humane treatment. We are glad that any other community may similarly establish settlements for this purpose and Government will be prepared to consider their claims. If the Punjab Hindus and Muhammadans are public spirited and possess the organising capacity and social cohesion requisite they ought to come forward and start similar settlements. We believe that the Salvation Army is paid for this work by Government and we dare say that a similar aid will not be denied to others. The Punjab Government have adopted a commendable plan of prisoners' reform and we hope it will become successful. Both the Government and the Salvation Army are entitled to public gratitude for this liberal scheme."

Reformation of prisoners.

20. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 25th July 1912:—

"The important Resolution published in the last Punjab Government Gazette about the reformation of the class of prisoners known as juvenile adults is a further indication of the liberal policy of the Punjab Government in the treatment of prisoners of this description. All convicts of this class are now collected in the Lahore District Jail which is administered on the Borstal system. The Government recognises that attempts to reform prisoners come under two categories—the first being made while the prisoner is undergoing his sentence and the other after his release. The first duty can be undertaken by Government, the second is dependent on private enterprise. The Salvation Army, which has worked successfully among the criminal tribes in India and has experience outside India, made an offer to take charge of released prisoners and this has been accepted by the Punjab Government. The Government will avail itself of the power conferred by section 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to suspend or remit sentences and prisoners will be placed in charge of the Salvation Army before they have served out their term. Officers of the Salvation Army of the rank of Lieutenant and upwards will be permitted freely to visit the Borstal Central Jail and to converse with the prisoners and to explain to them the conditions and advantages of residence in the Settlement of the Salvation Army close to the jail. Such prisoners as are chosen to go and live in the Settlement will be given work and will be looked after, but they will not be allowed to leave the Settlement or stay out at night. There is every reason to hope that this experiment will be followed by the best results."

(b)—Police.

Alleged assault by a European.

21. The Panjab Advocate (Mianwali), of the 18th July 1912, publishes a note headed "A salaam-loving Englishman." Referring to a complaint about a Mr. Hay having recently abused and beaten Chaudhri Lok Nath, Nazir, Divisional Judge's Court (Dera Ismaîl Khan), the paper says that the responsible authorities in the Frontier Province seem to have taken no notice of the matter, and fears that the doings of such short-sighted Englishmen will one day lead to unpleasant results. Continuing, it states that it has received several complaints (lit. general complaint) to the effect that Mr. Hay suffers from Salaamo-phobia, and that he is in the habit of forcing every Indian crossing his path to Salaam him. (Sometime back) he happened to pass by the house at Sheikh Budin of Rai Sahib Beli Ram, Public Prosecutor. Mr. Abdul Rahim Khan, a Barrister-at-Law, and two of his clients were in the house at the time. Mr. Hay made a sign to them from a distance to stand up and Salaam him. The clients did so, but Mr. Abdul Rahim Khan, who had his back to the road, could not see the sahib. Upon this, the last named went and enquired from the Barrister whether his name was Abdul Rahim, adding that he would write about the latter to Deputy Commissioner. After remarking that Mr. Abdur Rahim Khan told Mr. Hay to please himself, the paper reports that, half an hour later, the latter discontinued the supply of water to the former. Next it regrets that short-sighted Englishmen like the one in question should treat Indians worse than even dogs. The Barrister named, it adds, is a son of Khan Bahadur Azim Khan, while one of his brothers is a District Judge. He himself is a big Zamindar and could afford to employ several men of Mr. Hay's position as his servants. In conclusion, it reports that Mr. Hay is said to be desirous of instituting a libel case against it. It would challenge him to do so: it may perhaps be able to prove that he has been insulting Indians.

(d)—Education.

The proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities.

22. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 19th July 1912, publishes an article headed "Limited circle of influence of the Muslim and Hindu Universities." Adverting to the recent Communiqué on the above subject, the paper remarks that the Government of India's decision in the matter is calculated to engender feelings of intense disappointment among educated Indians, especially in the general public (sic !). Next it refers to the expectations which Muhammadans have from the University proposed to be established at Aligarh, and goes on to say that the Communiqué has come as a shock to them. It would, however, be a cowardly and short-sighted policy on their part not to bear the shock manfully and try to make the most of the present opportunity. There is, besides, no reason why Hindus and Muhammadans should regard Government's decision as irrevocable, seeing that nothing can be unchangeable under a constitutional Government, and experience has shown that even "settled facts" are liable to unsettlement. If they succeed in impressing their wishes on Government by respectful and constitutional means, the authorities will assuredly listen to them and extend the jurisdiction of the Muslim and Hindu Universities to all parts of the country.

Continuing its remarks in its issue, dated the 22nd July 1912, the paper says that some highly educated and influential Muhammadans, although few in number, not only consider the decision harmless, but also necessary in the beginning. These gentlemen, it adds, should no longer keep silent and should tell their co-religionists how it is not injurious for the proposed Muslim University to have its jurisdiction limited to Aligarh in its earlier years. Next it enumerates the reasons for holding this view.

The following on the same subject is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 20th July 1912 :—

"The decision will cause universal disappointment in India. It is stated that the Government of India raised at first no objection to the affiliation of Mufussil Colleges to the Muslim University, and that it was the Secretary of State who demurred to the proposal. Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk, however, repeatedly held out the hope that Government would ultimately prove amenable to reason. But an unsympathetic attitude towards the proposed Universities which began with the issuing of orders forbidding Government servants from taking part in meetings held in support of either scheme, is now followed by the announcement that the Universities are to be purely teaching and residential institutions on the lines of Oxford and Cambridge, their benefits to be restricted to only those students who can manage to reside in Aligarh or Benares. Most of the subscriptions, we need hardly point out, were given on the understanding that the denominational Universities would affiliate outside colleges and schools. The Musalmans were prepared to accept the most stringent, though not unreasonable, conditions for such, and so we think were the Hindus. The decision of the Government will place the promoters of the schemes in a curious fix, from which they will find it very hard to extricate themselves. And if they are able to overcome the difficulty, no thanks will be due to the Secretary of State and the India Council."

A complaint.

23. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 14th July 1912, publishes a communication headed "Boycott of Muslim newspapers." The writer—Shamas-ul-Hasan, Vakil, Agra—says that recently a written notice has been pasted on the Notice Board of the Agra Medical School directing all students to discontinue subscribing to the Zamindar, Paisa Akhbar, Vakil, Muslim Gazette, Comrade, Review of Religions, Badr, Hakim, Haq, &c., &c., and to subscribe only to the Leader, Hindustan, Tribune, Indian Review, Khalsa Samachar and the Saraswati. Besides this, he adds, the students have been verbally informed that any student subscribing to the Muslim papers named will be expelled from the School. The writer also alleges that very few Muslim students are admitted in the School, about 90 per cent. of Muslim candidates being rejected on one excuse or the other. All this, he adds, is due to the fact that Hindus have undue influence in the school, and that the two Muhammadan Professors there can do nothing against the Hindus.

Commenting on the above, the writer draws the attention of the wide-awake Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces to this matter, and says that it is to be hoped that His Honour will enquire from the authorities of the Agra Medical School, why, on what principle, and under what rules they have prohibited these Muslim papers from being brought into the school, while they have allowed the Hindu papers free access.

A newly-created appointment in England.

24. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 25th July 1912.

"Some time ago it was announced that Mr. Mallet had been appointed Secretary for Indian students in England. It appears now that the appointment is a permanent one and carries a pension and is an addition to the establishment of the India Office. It will carry a salary of £1,000 a year. Mr. Mallet, it is stated, will be responsible for correspondence with advisory Committees in India and with University and professional authorities in England generally and such work of benefit to students as the Secretary of State might determine. It is stated at the same time that the agency in Cromwell Road would remain under the direction of Mr. Arnold. This means that whilst the duties which have hitherto been discharged by Mr. Arnold will in future be entrusted to Mr. Mallet, Mr. Arnold will also continue to hold his appointment which carries a salary of £ 500 a year. In the House of Lords the members of the Opposition raised a debate on the subject of the appointment of Mr. Mallet. Lord Ampthill asked for information which was furnished and which we have already summarised in the first part of this note. Viscount Middleton asked whether Mr. Mallet had had any Indian experience. There were, he said, a large number of ex-Indian officials whose services had been most valuable. The opposition, he added, were afraid that a more competent man might have been found. Earl Beauchamp replied on behalf of Government that he was not aware that Mr. Mallet had any special knowledge of Indian affairs, but that anybody acquainted with him must know that he was admirably qualified for the post, apart from any special knowledge of India. Without endorsing in the least the objections put forward by Viscount Middleton—who was Secretary of State of India in 1905, when Lord Kitchener overthrew Lord Curzon in the struggle for supremacy—we strongly object to the appointment on principle. It is sheer waste of money. The appointment of Mr. Arnold has brought no good to the Indian students and the advisory Committees in India have proved worse than useless. Of course these arrangements have enabled Mr. Arnold to draw a comfortable salary and a few lucky individuals in India to draw allowances varying from Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 per mensem for practically doing nothing. Mr. Mallet's appointment is not likely to prove any better. We wish to enter our most emphatic protest against this waste of money. The new appointment while retaining the old one is without the least justification. Both the new and the old posts should be abolished forthwith."

Education in the Punjab and the United Provinces.

25. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 23rd July 1912 :—

"The Punjab Government has issued a press note comparing the progress of education in the Punjab with that of the United Provinces. It is gratifying that the Punjab Government sees nothing odious at least in this comparison. The percentage of male scholars in public institutions (secondary) of all classes to the male population of the school age is 15·6 in the Punjab and only 14·4 in the United Provinces. The percentage of female scholars to the female population of the school age is 2·4 in the Punjab and 1·3 in the United Provinces. As regards secondary education including Anglo-Vernacular education the Punjab is much in advance of the Province with which it can most suitably be compared. So far comparison is both favourable and satisfactory. But to be just the share of the Government in this activity should be separated from the share of private agencies. It is common knowledge that in this Province private agencies have been more active than in the neighbouring Province. Across the Jumna, we do not find the magnificent institutions of the Arya Samaj. Will the Punjab Government be pleased to make necessary deductions in the figures and let us know how much of the progress we owe entirely to the exertions of the Government agency? The press note is misleading in another respect. The criticism which it endeavours to meet refers to the rate of progress in literacy whereas the Government presents for consideration the results as they stood on a certain date. We venture to doubt the value of this statistical mode. To be accurate the rate of advance in the Punjab should be compared with the rate of advance in the United Provinces. For these among other reasons the present comparison is inconclusive and even misleading."

Deficiency of the female population in the Punjab.

26. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 23rd July 1912 :—

* * * * * * *

"The Sanitary Commissioner has given us a few interesting and useful details of the variations of population in the Punjab during the past decade as seen by the census figures. Excluding the military population in the cantonments and that in the Native States, the civil population consists of 19,721,722 persons of whom 10,827,375 are males and 8,904,347 females. In every civilised and progressive country there is a slight excess of the female over the male population. But in the Punjab we have a serious deficiency in the female population whose consequences have been, as we have pointed out before, certain abnormal social and economic factors. Roughly, we want a little over two million females to be imported into this country to give it a normal start and in this case we may expect our annual birth-rate to go over 50 and our death-rate considerably less than at present. We will then have probably more healthy children born and consequently a higher rate of increase in the population. But the difficulty is how to introduce into the country two millions of female population which is its present deficiency. Secondly, even if we do so, will the birth-rate show a normal proportion of males and females? For at present, the female life has very few favourable environments in the Punjab. It is largely due to the peculiar social atmosphere of the Province. Unless this is improved side by side of sanitation, we fail to see how a normal rate of increase in the population and civil conditions can be restored. For instance, we find that during the past decade the Hindu population decreased, while the Muhammadan population increased. The following figures show the disparity :—

| | Totals. | Males. | Females. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Muhammadans ... ... | 10,854,495 | 5,901,460 | 4,953,035 |
| Hindus ... ... ... | 8,700,122 | 4,828,674 | 3,817,448 |
| Native Christians ... ... | 161,714 | 89,384 | 72,330 |
| Other classes ... ... | 15,391 | 7,857 | 7,534 |

"This shows that no community in the Punjab has a normal proportion of male and female populations. If we suppose that purdah restrictions and other social hardships imposed on Hindus and Muhammadans account for the serious reduction of females, we have to account for the same reduction of Christian women. Let us take the Hindus first. There was a reduction of 624,354 or 6·70 per cent. Of this reduction, that among the males was 4·83 per cent. and among females 8·92 per cent.

"Therefore for every male Hindu lost we have a loss of two females, which is terrible enough to contemplate. But let us see how the Muhammadans stand. They were doubtless lucky and their racial and geographical position gave them an increase of 121,915 or

1·14 per cent. Males show an increase of 205,534 or 3·61 per cent., but females a decrease of 83,619 or 1·66 per cent. Thus when tabulated, we have:

| | Total. | Males. | Females. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Hindus ... ... ... | —6·70 | —4·83 | —8·92 |
| Muhammadans ... ... ... | +1·14 | +3·61 | —1·66 |

"These figures are eloquent enough to those who can read them. They disclose a not creditable state of affairs. While the Muhammadans have a distinctly advantageous start over the Hindus in point of population and protective stamina against diseases, they have lost in female population and evidently make up the deficiency by various methods as importation, conversion or abduction. The situation is serious enough to call for further enquiry. The Hindus are also suffering from the general effects of female subjection. No nation can be happy which is killing off its female population so rapidly as in the Punjab and the causes must be largely in the hands of the people themselves.

"The Sanitary Commissioner says that it is beyond his scope to enter into a detailed examination of the changes that have occurred in the population of the Province and its component districts. We do not think so. The sanitarian has no more pressing duty than to examine the causes that populate and depopulate districts and, so far they have a bearing on the sanitation, to suggest means of steady and ceaseless improvement. So far as they refer to the economic and social causes, it is still his duty to examine the same and invite the attention of those who can best deal with economic and social factors. In the present case, it is clear that partly sanitary defects and partly social restraints account for the abnormal variations. First, he must account for the extraordinary reduction in the Hindu population as in direct contrast with the Muhammadan population, while both of them live and move under the same Government and under the same conditions of life. Why should there be a reduction of 6·70 per cent. in the Hindu and an increase of 1·66 per cent. in the Muhammadan population? Are these causes sanitary, social or religious or a combination of all? If the Sanitary Commissioner considers it is not his duty to find this out, we fail to see who else can do it and whether it is no body's business to point out these glaringly abnormal variations. Secondly, he must undertake an extended enquiry in regard to the variations in the female population. Apparently at birth, nature makes no invidious distinction and an equal number of male and female children are born. And it is during their growth in life that we see the abnormal killing off of the female to the extent of effecting a reduction of 2,000,000. Again we must ask, whether the causes are sanitary, economic, social or religious—or a combination of all. Contrasting the Hindu with the Muhammadan variations we have pointed out the heavy decrease of female life in the latter. This seems to show that social factors are at work to a large extent. There may be other factors also. But these must be examined and the attention of the public be drawn in a prominent manner to them. * * * * All these are matters that require the attention of the Punjab sanitarians, and we hope that Government will either appoint a special committee of enquiry or adopt such other steps as are necessary to restore normal and progressive conditions of healthy life in the Province."

Proposed Eurasian regiments.

27. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 14th July 1912, publishes a note headed "Proposal to enlist Eurasian forces." Writing on the above subject, the writer asks whether Eurasian soldiers will be paid and housed like the members of the British garrison. If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, how will the exchequer be able to bear the necessary heavy expenditure? If, however, Eurasian soldiers are to be treated like sepoys, how will they be able to support themselves? Under these circumstances, moreover, how will it be possible to secure (good) recruits? Again, asks the writer will the proposed regiments be officered by Eurasians? If so, Government will have to extend the concession to native regiments also. In conclusion, the paper expresses a hope that Government will move carefully in the matter.

The Parkash newspaper.

28. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 16th (received on the 24th) July 1912, publishes an article headed "Dissemination of dangerous ideas in the Arya Samaj. Worthy-of-being-put-down policy of the Parkash. Unholy efforts to promote feelings of hatred against the British Government" The Editor recapitulates the charges which it has brought against the Parkash since May last, in which it represented that paper as being engaged in disseminating political ideas in the Samaj, and in making Aryas regard the British nation with feeling of hatred. Instead, he adds, of admitting its mistakes, the paper has been speaking of him as an enemy of the Samaj and as a dangerous man. After remarking that it has also been causing divers misunderstandings about him, he strongly urges the responsible authorities to interfere with the Parkash, so that the scenes witnessed in the Punjab, especially in Lahore, during 1907 may not be re-enacted. Continuing, he tells them that it was chiefly impulsive and short-sighted Arya young men that were identified with political agitation carried on in the above year. He then goes on to say that in its issue, dated the 9th July, the Parkash writes that, although Aryas do not confound politics with blasphemy, the Arya Samaj as a body has no concern with present-day politics, and that the Samaj is one thing and an Arya Samajist another. Next he contends that there is not much difference between the two, and adds that his articles about the Parkash have set the Hindu, the Hindustan, and others against him. As regards the editor of the Parkash, the only way by which he can manage to escape being dealt with under the Press Act is to represent the critics of his dangerous and inflammatory writings as his enemies.

The Parkash and the Hindu.

29. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 16th (received on the 24th) July 1912, publishes an article headed "Perplexity of the Hindustan's Editor." After stating that the Editor of the Hindustan has taken exception to the Arjun's remarks against the Parkash and the Hindu, the Arjun enquires whether the Editor of the Hindustan can say that the seditious and dangerous ideas published by the Parkash do not deserve immediate notice of the Government, or that the circulation of that paper in Native States is not fraught with danger. The Hindu remarked in the course of a note in its issue, dated the 13th June last, that the claims of Hindus to employment in certain departments were being disregarded owing simply to their being Hindus. Can Dina Nath declare that this is so, i.e., that Government hates Hindus and is prejudiced against them? Is not such a remark, which is likely to excite hatred and distrust between Government and Hindus, objectionable in his opinion and worthy of the notice of the responsible authorities? Again, asks the Arjun, is not a paper favouring such dangerous ideas likely to set the loyal Hindu subjects of Native States against the British Government?

The Hindu Press and Banka Dyal.

30. The Panjab Advocate (Mianwali) of the 18th July 1912, publishes an article headed "The Hindu Press and Banka Dyal." After remarking that Dina Nath and Banka Dyal seem determined to fight to bitter end, the paper takes the Punjab Hindu Press to task for having sided with Dina Nath and having unjustly attacked Banka Dyal over the article on Panjabi women, which recently appeared in the Jhang Sial (vide paragraph 18 of Selections No. 27). Before condemning the Editor of the paper named, it adds, the said Press ought to have made enquiries into the dark side of the Panjabi woman laid bare in the writing referred to. Next it speaks of the conduct of Hindu women in bathing in a state of nudity in rivers, &c., in going to Muhammadan fakirs to have their "faces spat on" in forsaking their religion and suffering disgrace for the sake of getting children, and in courting insults by visiting the tombs (of Muslim saints). After asking the Hindu Press to try to have matters mended, it enquires why Dina Nath, who is responsible for the attacks recently made by the Hindustan on Lalas Lajpat Rai and Shadi Lal, has not been expelled from the Hindu Press Association, and why an obscure journal of Amritsar has now recommended the expulsion of Banka Dyal from that Association.

Dina Nath.

31. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 16th (received on the 24th) July 1912, has a note headed "Lala Dina Nath and the history of anarchists." Adverting to the letter which "Akhtar" of Lucknow recently contributed to the Jhang Sial against Lala Dina Nath (vide paragraph 40 of Selections No 26), the Arjun states that the Lala used to interest himself in extremist ideas even before he started the Hindustan. In 1902, it adds, he began to issue a history of the anarchists of Europe, and he was perhaps the first person to place such a book in the hands of the Urdu-knowing public. The Press Act and his principles prevent the Editor from quoting passages from the history in question.

What it costs to change the Capital.

32. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 19th July 1912 :—

"We have been much occupied of late with discussions of the new capital but one of the most important matters that has not yet been fully reviewed is the question of the cost of building the new capital and the method of financing it. It will be remembered that in their Despatch the Government of India stated that it was roughly estimated that a sum of £4,000,000 would be necessary, including three years' interest on capital until the works were completed. Although the Secretary of State, in his reply, did not endorse that estimate, he 'enjoined thoughtful preparation and continuous vigilance.' It was quite clear in the Despatch of the Government of India that the structures, roads, railways, electric light and water supply made in connection with the Durbar would be utilised as permanent works when the transfer was made and there can be no mistake in assuming that the rough estimate of £4,000,000 sterling was arrived at taking into consideration the existing advantages in the Durbar area. But the condemnation of the Durbar area and the selection of the new site have rendered the former calculations totally void and in all likelihood a new estimate will have to be made. The original estimate of £4,000,000 has been the subject of much controversy and Lord Curzon took a leading part in throwing a doubt upon this estimate and said that in the opinion of those most competent to judge the estimate of the cost varied from £8,000,000 to £12,000,000. Obviously, there is great difference between the estimate of the Government of India as embodied in the Despatch and the likely one as advanced by Lord Curzon. Had there been a difference of only a few thousand pounds sterling we might have overlooked it taking into consideration the magnitude of the work for which no close and correct estimate can be possibly made. But the difference between the two estimates is too great to be lightly passed over. Now the question is how does such a vast difference arise? We are not inclined to think that the estimate of the Government of India was mere guess-work, nor can we believe that Lord Curzon's declaration in the House of Lords is a haphazard statement. In both cases the estimates must have been made after careful but generalised calculations, and yet the fact remains that there is a difference of four to eight millions sterling between them. Evidently both of these calculations cannot be correct and one of them must be wrong. But who has erred? The Government of India or Lord Curzon? We must wait and see.

"There is a class of men who have a passionate craze for citing analogies and parallels in order to stand by their own assertions, reasonable or unreasonable. The Allahabad Anglo-Indian paper has taken to this course to justify the estimate of £4,000,000 for the building of the new capital of India. The Australian Commonwealth is about to build a capital of its own. The Australians have taken ten years to select the most suitable site for their capital. No buildings have yet been begun, but it is understood that the completion of the primary works will take at least eight years. The total expenditure on the entire works as outlined is placed at £3,000,000 sterling. The Allahabad paper is at a loss to conceive why the lowest estimate of the Indian capital (i.e., £4,000,000) should be larger than the estimate of the Australian capital (i.e., £3,000,000) by one million pounds sterling. Labour is undoubtedly cheaper in India than in Australia, but it is not labour only that makes a capital. We do not know what points of analogy has the Allahabad paper seen between the Indian Empire and the Australian Commonwealth, but we should like to know whether the two schemes are quite identical. So far as we can judge from the description of the Canberra site for the Australian capital there is hardly anything common to it and the new Delhi site. The modus operandi too is quite different in the two cases. May we venture to enquire from the analogist of Allahabad whether the Australian Commonwealth will make two capitals, one temporary and the other permanent, or recruit in England experts drawing princely salaries, or make a new extensive cantonment 'in order to guard the new capital,' or build a country retreat for the Governor-General six miles away from the new capital 'in order that he may escape from the torrid and malarial climate of the new city'?

"The full text of the debate on the Government of India Bill in the House of Lords throws considerable light on the actual state of affairs and the estimate of the probable cost of the new capital. Lord Curzon in his lenghty but well-reasoned speech observed that no estimate of the cost of the new city has been made. The question was discussed in the Budget debate in Calcutta at the end of March, i.e., seven months after the policy had been approved, and yet the Finance Minister of the Indian Government was not in a position to make any estimate of the cost. It is a curious revelation. This position said Lord Curzon, was unprecedented in the financial history of England, India or any civilised country, and he added 'the Government of India have not the least idea what this experiment is going to cost; His Majesty's Government have no idea either. It seems to me, therefore, that this is the most gigantic leap that the financiers of India, of this country (England) have ever taken.' These indictments are serious and if it is true that both the Government of India and the British Government are in the dark as to what the actual expenses in Delhi will be, their position is by no means to be envied. Besides the actual cost of the new capital there will be other expenditure by no means small, which will be 'consequential' upon the transfer of the capital. We summarise the list of extra burdens as enumerated by Lord Curzon which are likely to be borne by the Indian tax-payers in consequence of the change. (1) The extra cost of the new Governor of Bengal and staff will be £13,300 as stated in the House of Commons; (2) the cost of the University of Dacca: (3) the cost of the new capital at Patna, the provisional estimate for which has been stated in the House of Commons as between £333,000 and £400,000; (4) the cost of a summer station for the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Behar and Orissa; (5) the Board of Revenue for the same Province will cost over £13,000 per annum; (6) the Executive Council of the same Province, the approximate cost of which is £13,300 per annum; (7) the cost of the Legislative Council to be created in the new Province; (8) the probable institution of a University at Patna; and 9) the creation of a High Court for the same Province; (10) the cost of the Legislative Council for the Central Provinces. (11) Then there is the cost of the increase which the Government contemplate in the staff of the Commerce and Industry Department. (12) There is the cost of the land at Delhi which has already been taken up for nearly £250,000 as stated by the Viceroy; (13) the cost of the new capital itself which will be at least £4,000,000 as estimated by the Governor-General in Council; (14) the cost of the new cantonment; (15) the cost of the temporary Delhi; (16) the cost of a country retreat for the Viceroy at Okhla as already reported in the papers, which would be something like Barrakpur or Mashobra. Side by side with this long list of heavy expenditure we have to take into account the losses consequent upon the change of the capital. In the first place there will be the loss on the Delhi Durbar roads, railway, electric light, water-supply and other works which were formerly taken into account, and, secondly, the loss on the buildings at Dacca and a number of Government buildings at Calcutta.

"The foregoing list will show that the bill following the transfer of the capital is much longer and heavier than it was formerly anticipated. Besides the items entered in the list there might arise some other unavoidable causes of fresh expenditure and there must be some recurring charges as well. But however heavy the expenditure the money in the words of Lord Cuozon, will have to be found and India will have to pay it. Obviously no approximate estimate has yet been made as to what will be the probable total expenditure on the new capital and other charges and losses involved in the transfer of the seat of the Government. We admit it is not possible to arrive at a definite figure in a work of such magnitude, but something fairly approaching the probable figure might have been calculated before making 'the most gigantic leap in the dark.' Whatever the cost may be it will have to be borne by the Indian taxpayer, but it would have been wise for both the Indian Government and His Majesty's Government to look twice, nay, many times, before taking the leap. From the financial point of view the transfer of the seat of the Government of India will very likely prove a heavy millstone round the neck of the Indian taxpayer for a very long time to come, but its weight might have been sufficiently reduced if prudence and economy were not disregarded to that extent as they have been so far. * * * * *"

Vaccination by coercion.

33. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 20th July 1912 :—

"Our readers are aware of the case of Lala Jetha Nand of Multan. The harsh methods adopted by the authorities in the matter of vaccination against his conscience formed the subject of a question in the House of Commons. He has religious and other objections against vaccination, but it seems the local authorities have got something like contempt for his religious and other feelings. For the last three years he has been very strongly objecting to get his child vaccinated. And he has been repeatedly fined for it. But the most wanton insult to him has come from the least expected quarter—viz., from Dewan Narendra Nath, Deputy Commissioner of Multan, who in sentencing the poor conscientious objector to 15 days' imprisonment, remarks in the course of the judgment as follows :—

"Jethanand is obstinately persistent in his refusal. Even now he goes on talking nonsense, quoting Herbert Spencer on the scientific aspect of the questions, and Chief Court and Sessions Judge on the legal side. Jethanand is obstinate and though I have offered even now to give him time, he won't listen. I sentence him under sections 18 and 22 to 15 days' simple imprisonment. I kept the case with myself as Honorary Magistrates have so far only trifled with these proceedings on former occasions. (14-3-12).

"The Italics are ours. We fail to see why it is nonsense to quote Herbert Spencer and Chief Court even by so humble a man who has an unyielding conscience. In one of our previous issues we suggested to the Honourable Member of the Council representing Multan to bring in an amendment to the Vaccination Act and get a conscience clause inserted in it. But we note that he himself as an Honorary Magistrate has fined Jetha Nand Rs. 5. Men with a conscience who fight and suffer for a principle deserve to be better treated. We must say we are disappointed to see so much impatience and intolerance betrayed by the learned Magistrate who gave 15 days' imprisonment without the option of fine to one who merely objects to vaccination on principle."

I.—Politics.

Britain and Persia.

1. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 30th July 1912 :—

"The situation of affairs in Persia is getting worse, the Government stands accused of inability to maintain peace and order. Life and property are unsafe and for that reason trade has come to a standstill. The British Government is reluctant to interfere, but its reluctance is being misunderstood and misinterpreted into inability to do so. Lord Curzon in the course of the debate which took place in the House of Lords last week said that the situation in Persia was most gloomy and that the Russian attitude must inevitably lead to British military occupation of Southern Persia. Dark clouds were rolling up pregnant with danger not only to British relations with Russia but to the Indian Empire. The British Government should show a little more spirit and courage in its dealings with Russia and a determination to insist upon the maintenance of Persian integrity. But unless the Persian Government shows that it has both capacity and energy to govern it will not command confidence and respect. A Government which stands convicted of incompetency of a hopeless character will not inspire respect. If things go on as they have in these past six months and there is no improvement of a substantial kind, the integrity of Persia as an independent Power will be finally and irrevocably doomed. This is a prospect which those who love Persian literature and admire its past history cannot contemplate without regret."

The Trans-Persian Railway.

2. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 22nd July 1912, publishes a leader headed "Discussion of the Russo-Indian Railway (project)." The opponents of the above Railway in England, it says, contend that it will most injuriously affect the defence of this country. The paper, however, considers it extremely short-sighted (in them) to thus proclaim (their) fears in regard to Great Britain's weakness in comparison with Russia. British rule in India rests on a strong foundation, and it is highly shameful (in the Britons concerned) to be terror-stricken (lit. to purge) by the apprehension of a Muscovite invasion of India. The Editor can never bring himself to believe that this country has any valid reason for feeling afraid of the Russian Bear. The day is, besides, likely to come when the boundaries of British and Russian possessions in Asia will become conterminous : it is beyond the power of England to avert the inevitable. Will the British Government leave India when that event comes to pass ? The opponents of the Trans-Persian Railway are only talking nonsense. Britain's connection with India has proved beneficial for both countries, and the best way (for the former) to (indissolubly) link the destinies of both would be to treat the latter in a considerate and liberal spirit. "If (, however,) the enemies of Government would bind India only in the selfish chains of might and the sword, they are welcome to dash their heads against the colossal rocky mountain (lit. the colossal rock of mountain) of the law of nature." The paper then goes on to say that, if the British Government has consented to have a hand in the construction of the Railway in question, it has done so with the object of benefiting India, and that it is utterly absurd to try to frighten it by relating antediluvian stories of Russia's enmity (for England).

Status of Indians abroad.

3. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 1st August 1912 :—

"A very important memorial is proposed to be submitted to the Government of India touching the humiliating position assigned to British Indians emigrating to British colonies and foreign countries. At a large and representative public meeting held at Bombay yesterday Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Bart., presided and a resolution was passed that a memorial should be submitted by him on behalf of the public asking His Excellency the Governor-General in Council to take such steps as are necessary to remove the hardships and humiliating treatment of Indians abroad and to secure to them equal rights of British citizenship. The question, as our readers are aware, is a very important one and reports of insults and hardships caused to Indians have of late been received from all sides. Only last week the Government of India published a resolution warning the people of India of the risks of emigrating to the Argentine Republic. A few months back in the German Reichstag speeches were openly made that Indian settlers in German East Africa should be subjected to similar indignities and hardships as in British possessions. And we all know how in the British colonies and self-governing dominions our countrymen are suffering. To a question put by Lord Ampthill to the Under-Secretary to the Colonies, protesting against certain inequalities meted out to South African Indians, he gave an angry and impatient reply more evasive than definite. These are truly humiliating and alarming prospects against which it is the duty of all Indians to protest. There is no question on which Indians of all sections and communities are so unanimously agreed as on this. We have more than 6,000 Panjabees who have gone out of our country and in spite of their meritorious services in the army and elsewhere, they are treated as so many undesirables in British Columbia. Year by year these grievances are accumulating instead of lessening as a result of public agitation and appeals to the higher authorities, and public feeling in India is growing more and more bitter. Unless the elementary rights of British citizenship are secured to our fellow-countrymen abroad, we are afraid we can never rest contented and we must insist on the Government that imposes on us Imperial responsibilities to secure to us Imperial rights as well. We ask for no favour or special treatment, but barest justice, an absolute equality of treatment.

"It is unnecessary to explain that Indians have been recognised by Royal decree as equal subjects of the Crown and India has been described by British statesmen as the 'brightest jewel in the British Crown.' But in what way is the jewel preserved in the jewel case and outside it? The Colonies have regarded Indians and their culture with studied contempt and while their services are utilised to develop the economic resources of untrodden settlements, their rights to settle down in peaceful occupations in those lands are questioned and even denied. The amount of racial antipathy and prejudice that is stirred in the Colonies and other British possessions can hardly be compatible with harmonious Imperial relations. Speeches are often made in and outside of England eulogising the glorious expanse and greatness of the British Empire. But little attempt is made either by the Dominions or by the Supreme Government to bring together various races and communities that have come under the Imperial sway on terms of respect and compatible with harmonius citizenship. The rightful claims of the people of India must be admitted in South Africa, Canada and other British possessions where racial antipathy has been rashly fomented. This can be done effectively if the Government of India takes the proper steps. It is perfectly within the power of the Government to insist on giving Indians equal treatment and removing all restrictions. Short of that we have to adopt retaliatory measures against offending countries, whether they form part of the British Empire or not. The spectacle of such relation may not be very edifying to the Home authorities, but when they are either indifferent or powerless as regards Indian rights and are unable to set matter right, we have no alternative left but to urge retaliatory measures. The present memorial does not say so but merely asks that Government may adopt suitable steps, but under the present circumstances we can suggest no other course of conduct as the Colonies and Dominions are obstinate beyond redemption.

"The South African possessions of the British Empire are undoubtedly the worst sinners in this respect. The grievances of Indians from that quarter fill up volume after volume. The memorial just presented in the name of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy recounts the various acts of ill-treatment, injustice and evasion on the part of the Union Government and Provincial authorities. The case of Indians is prepared with the utmost care and presented in a clear, restrained and convincing manner. The new Immigration Bill was intended to give Indians only statutory equality of rights, while leaving to administrative policy the right of differentiation. This was done in the hope of eventually convincing the administrative authorities of the fairness of treating Indians with respect. But even this minimum right has been withheld so far. We hope that the Government of India will address the Union Government on the subject and make it clear to the authorities there that the principle of the new Immigration Bill cannot be evaded and it is the irreducible minimum which Indians can accept consistently with their self respect. And if they cannot bring into play an adequate sense of fairness to appreciate this demand then they must not be surprised if South Africa received a similar treatment from India. We know mere persuation will have no effect and it goes against South African grain to listen to logical persuasions. We hardly know what will be the effect of Mr. Gokhale's visit to that land of Indian suffering. But in any case we hope the Government of India will address a strongly worded letter on the subject and bring about a satisfactory settlement. The ill-treatment of Indians has been reduced to perfection in South Africa and each of the four Provincial Governments has contributed its own labours to this end. Canada has adopted a less complicated though equally offensive and hurtful form of exclusion. It does not admit Indians who do not sail directly from Indian ports, as though sailing from other ports has a terribly bad effect on that loyalest of loyal Dominions. Further, it would not admit the wives and children of the 5,000 Punjab Hindu settlers in Columbia, fully knowing the social consequences of this blind exclusion. The condition of British East Africa, where there are 25,000 Indians who have settled for over 300 years as against 2,600 white settlers who came in later, is worst of all. It is the Indians who made British East Africa what it is; and a number of British statesmen have testified to their services to the Colony. Still a policy of exlusion has been begun by the white minority and Indians are not allowed to purchase Government land, they are not to have the advantage of trial by jury. Disabilities as to locomotion are imposed on them. Municipal regulations prevent them from entering public markets, save as agents of Europeans, and a Bill has been introduced levying a poll-tax on Indians. All this is in return for services rendered in connection with the Uganda Railway and in developing the country. How can these grievous wrongs be removed? The present memorial invites attention to the following opinion of Mr. Winston Churchill while he was the Under-Secretary. On the subject of East Africa, he said:

"'How stands the claim of the British Indian? His right as a human being, his rights as a British subject, are equally engaged. It was the Sikh soldier who bore an honourable part in the conquest and pacification of these East African countries. . . . It is possible for any Government with a scrap of respect for honest dealing between man and man, to embark upon a policy of deliberately squeezing out the native of India from regions in which he has established himself under every security of good faith?'

"Well, the spirit of Mr Churchill does not yet prevail in the Supreme Government and the matter is allowed to drift without any one of the virtuous statesmen raising his finger to uproot the evil. If any had foreign countries like German East Africa, Mozambique, Argentina and others would not have shut their doors summarily against Indians. Portugal is quoted as an instance of a country that allows Indian immigrants to settle on terms of equality with Europeans. The day on which a similar treatment is given in the British Empire to us we may be sure the Empire will have been established on a firm and everlasting basis."

4. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 24th (received on the 30th) July 1912, says that the present Ministry's Policy towards India and Islamic countries goes against the principles of Liberalism. After remarking that the Ministers' store of information is also extremely vast and wonderful (the expression is ironical), the paper quotes Mr. Montagu as saying in a recent speech that Delhi was nearer to Bombay and eastern India than the city of Palaces; that the population of Bengal in Lord Curzon's time was 9,80,00,000 souls; and that Muhammadans had already established a University at Agra. If, it adds, a responsible officer of the Crown like the present Under-Secretary of State for India can have such a wonderfully accurate knowledge of a British dependency, what can the members of the Liberal Ministry be expected to know of the internal affairs of (independent) Muhammadan countries? The East used to feel (lit. feels) surprised at Sir Edward Grey being under the thumb of Russia, but the betrayal of Mr. Montagu's gross ignorance about Indian affairs has solved the puzzle. Russia's deceitful policy, in filling the Foreign Minister's head with false and fictitious stories about Islamic lands, has made him a mere puppet in the hands of the Muscovite Government. It is a matter for regret that the mighty British Government, the foundations of which rest on justice and righteousness, should be composed of men whose information is of a limited character, who conduct themselves in an absurd way in connection with political matters, and who, by listening to their country's enemies, are undermining its power and prestige, weakening its friends and strengthening the hands of its enemies.

The present Liberal Ministry.

5. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 1st August 1912:—

Lord Crewe's Repudiation.

"Somebody has badly bungled. What was the necessity for Lord Inchcape to raise the question over again? However, Lord Crewe has made yet another speech, and this speech is more confusing and more inexplicable than all others. If there was no difference in meaning or intention between the Government of India, Lord Crewe and Mr. Montagu, all that need have been said by the Secretary of State during the debate in the Lords was to affirm the language of the despatch. Mr. Chamberlain would have said—'What I have said I have said. What I have done I have done.' Lord Crewe's speeches and explanations are more confusing and self-contradictory than our Pandits' annotations of mythological expositions in the eighteen Puranas amongst us. Even in this his third and improved edition of official annotation of the famous paragraph, the Secretary of State tries to confuse the issue involved. The only legitimate and rational view of the whole question is that which Lord Courtney takes—that the mystery is better left to solve itself and nobody is competent to pronounce a final word."

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 20th July 1912, has an article under the heading "Gross oppression." If the skin of the whites (lit. the white skin), it says, could be removed with some spiritual knife there would be exposed to view such thick layers of hard-heartedness and villany, the blackness of which would put even the Ethiopians to shame. The civilisation of which Europe, which claims to be the champion of morality and humanity, feels proud is sometimes deserving of being consigned to the lowermost region of hell. When Europeans see even the meanest member of their brotherhood subjected to the slightest high-handedness half the fleets (of Europe) are put into motion and their guns, &c., begin to vomit forth death. And they can know no rest till the black, yellow, and red races of mankind have made offerings of life, property, honour, and territory at the white altar of revenge. Should, however, any oppression be practised on the blacks, should their lives, property, religion and izzat be made the target of tyranny (and) should they be seen rolling in dust and blood, white Europe, civilised Europe, Christian Europe, shows absolutely no signs of life. Continuing, the paper says that the devilish, savage, and shameless doings of Italy, Russia, and France in Tripoli, Persia, and Morocco respectively may perhaps be condoned on the plea of earth-hunger having prompted this satanic brotherhood to oppress innocent Muhammadans. What, however, should one say for those civilised whites who do not hanker after territory, and who still kill, like beasts of prey, members of Eastern races with the object simply of shedding the blood of orientals. The world has not as yet forgotten the heart-rending story of the acts of oppression to which the Negroes of Congo were subjected at the instance, or at least with the knowledge, of the King of Belgium. Next the paper refers to the alleged Peruvian atrocities and cries to God to exterminate "the civilised" in the twinkling of an eye, or to entrust the task to His Majesty George V.

Lord Crewe and paragraph three of the Government of India despatch.

7. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 1st August 1912:—

"While protests are still being heard against the interpretation placed by Lord Crewe on paragraph three of the despatch of the Government of India dated August last year, His Lordship has attempted a further elucidation of his views and has plunged deeper into the mire in reply to Lord Inchcape who called attention to the difference in the statements of members of the Government with reference to the despatch. The Secretary of State for India said that a series of legends had grown up in connection with this subject. The Government of India was supposed to have pointed to Swaraj, self-government, or Home Rule for India as the aim and object of its policy. The next legend, which was absolutely baseless, was that there were differences in meaning or intention between the Government of India, Lord Crewe and Mr. Montagu. His Lordship exclaimed that some misrepresentation of the meaning of Government was due to the use of the word 'autonomy' in the despatch. The view of the Government was that British policy in India should have three objects in view, the devolution on local and provincial Government of as many of the functions of Government as can be safely entrusted to them, the employment of as many Indians in the public service as reasonably can be employed, and the third is to continue the pursuit of these two objects with the maintenance and permanance of British rule in India. The Government of India can have no goal or any permanent position in view. The dream of a complete self-government in India like Canada and South Africa was not even remotely probable. 'I am far from saying,' His Lordship added, 'that the ideal of such an Indian dominion is an ignoble one, or that those holding it ought to be described as disloyal.' But such an India in his opinion was as imaginary as Atlantis. The Government of India cannot look far ahead. Indians may aspire to be the Premier of an Indian Dominion or Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army, but they should set aside this vision altogether. Condensed in a single sentence Lord Crewe's view is that the King's Government in India must be carried on and the people of India should be content to take such chances as come to them. It is the point of view that makes the difference. Unless the people of India have an ideal and a goal in view what incentive have they to endeavour and work?"

The late Emperor of Japan.

8. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 2nd August 1912:—

"The late Emperor of Japan has been called the father of his people, but that hardly gives any idea of what he did for his people and his country. The Czar is called the Little Father by Russians, but no one would think of comparing him to the late Mikado. Besides his enlightenment and solicitude for his people the Mikado was one of the most undemonstrative of monarchs, and this trait of character had a powerful influence on the nation. The wonderful achievements of Japan within the last few years would have made any other nation boastful. The pride of Europe is proverbial and Europeans are never tired of recounting their virtues and other qualities. Victory in war would make a European nation delirious with joy, but the issue of even the Russo-Japanese war left the Japanese nation unmoved. This self-restraint was the characteristic of the Emperor. There were no speeches or messages of exultation, no self-glorification so common in Europe. Of course the people celebrated the victories but not in an aggressive manner. How the Mikado was loved and revered by his people may be judged from the fact that one man committed suicide to give his life for the Emperor. Happy are the people who have such a monarch to rule over them!"

Muhammadans and political agitation.

9. In its issue, dated the 8th and 15th (received on the 30th) July 1912, the Chaudwin Sadi (Rawalpindi), publishes an article headed "Indian Muhammadans and agitation." The Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), of the 3rd idem, says the Editor, has an article entitled "Teaching agitation," from which it appears that in commenting on a certain writing in the Chaudwin Sadi the Aligarh (Institute) Gazette, dated the 26th June last, remarked that opinions always follow the trend of events, and that in his latter days Sir Syed Ahmad Khan abandoned his former opinion against (political) agitation. The latter assertion, however, not only constitutes a grossly false charge against Sir Syed, but also amounts to a permission to Muhammadans to carry on (political) agitation. But the truth is that Sir Syed's only fear used to be lest the Prophet's followers should ruin themselves by engaging in agitation,—a fact which every one of his friends knows. After quoting an extract from a private letter, dated the 8th May last, received by him from Qazi Aziz-ud-din Ahmed, Revenue Minister, Bharatpur State, in support of his assertion, the Editor remarks that the Aligarh (Institute) Gazette is equally wrong in saying that, if Sir Syed Ahmed Khan were alive now, he would undoubtedly have a different opinion (about agitation). As a matter of fact, if Sir Syed Ahmad had lived to this day, he would have considered it suicidal on the part of Indian Muhammadans to agitate against the British Government, nay, he would have said that all Muslim agitators should be excommunicated. Commenting on the Aligarh (Institute) Gazette's remarks the Muslim Gazette states, as its final opinion, that no community living under a constitutional Government like the British Government, can obtain its rights without resorting to agitation. The writer of these words, however, says the Editor of the Chaudwin Sadi, appears to be wholly ignorant of the principles and history of British rule in India. His statement implies that the British Government oppressed and trampled on the rights of the ruled in India, and that Indians could secure no rights until they had recourse to agitation. Again, the Aligarh (Institute) Gazette lays it down as an axiom that agitation has a sure effect on the British Government. This the Government has openly declared to be untrue. The journal also says that the "British Government is a government, in which every child has been brought up in the atmosphere of agitation." But, asks the Editor, can the agitation, carried on by the British in their country, be compared to that set on foot by Indians against the British Government, and can both agitations have the same objects and results? Agitation in this country can mean nothing but sedition and treason, while disappointment on the part of Indian agitators can end only in the desire to drive the British out of the land. It is sometimes said that agitation by Muhammadans will not lead to the results that have ensued in the case of the Bengali or Mahratta Brahmin agitation. After saying that no one assigns any reason for this, the Editor asks how, if Hindu agitation is intended to weaken the British Government in India, it is to the interest of Muhammadans to agitate at the same time, and thereby still further weaken Government. Their existence in India is bound up with that of British rule in the country, and it should, therefore, be their first duty to strive for the permanence of the present regime, and to sacrifice their petty objects in order to gain this end.

Muslim Policy.

10. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated the 31st July 1912 :—

"The critics of the Muslim League would know that the present is a most important juncture in the affairs of our community—one of those decisive moments when the mind of the Muslims is about to take a great step forward and when a right judgment means so much new strength added to the nation and a wrong judgment is fraught with consequences far graver than on other occasions.

"When the Muslims are being called upon to go in for new methods on the ground that they alone would achieve national salvation, it is incumbent on all workers in the cause of the community to examine the claims made for those methods. The critics of the League hold that the system of 'agitation' is the most admirable method and if the League wants to be crowned with success it should adopt that method. Let us calmly examine the propriety or impropriety of the suggestion. It would be better to weigh the pros and cons of the suggestion in the light of the experience gained in India and by tracing out the origin of the system of 'agitation' in the country.

"When the educational enterprise of the early British missionaries was followed up by the famous Government Minute of March 7th, 1835, many members of high family in Bengal responded to the call. They were the first in the field, with the result that in a short time they practically monopolised the public offices, the bar, the press and the teaching profession. It was they who were the moving spirits of the Brahamo Samaj and of the Social Reforms when progressive ideas seemed to be on the point of permeating Hinduism. But when the reaction came which first found public expression in the resistance provoked by the age of Consent Act of 1891 for mitigating the evils of Hindu child marriage, and the spirit of reform was deflected from the social and religious into the political domain, it was they again who showed the greatest aptitude to clothe the new political movement in all the forms of Western political activities. It was Mr. W. C. Bonnerji, an able Bengalee lawyer of very moderate and enlightened views, who presided over the first Indian National Congress at Bombay, and thus for the first time our Bengalee brethern in the history of India claimed to be marching in the van. British rule, owing to its capital being at Calcutta, gave ample opportunities of education to those who lived in the vicinity of the capital and these gentlemen turned to account the opportunities with no mean measure of success. Every year large batches of youths, devoid of religious training and with a mere smattering of knowledge, were turned out into a world that had little or no use for them. Soured on the one hand by their own failure or by the failure of such examinations as they might have succeeded in passing to secure for them the employment to which they aspired and scorning the sort of work for which they would have otherwise been trained, they were ripe for 'agitation.' That was the material upon which the leaders of unrest most successfully worked later on. On the other hand, the batches of able and competent youths engaged themselves in ameliorating the condition of the society and the country.

"For some years past the influence of Mr. Tilak and his irreconciliable school had been projected from the Deccan into Bengal and nowhere did it make itself so rapidly felt as in the press. Among the advance journalists of Bengal, none had fallen so entirely under the spell of Mr. Tilak's magnetic personality as Mr. Bipin Chunder Pal and Mr. Arabindo Ghosh, and the former's New India and the latter's Bande Mataram soon outstripped the Bangalee edited by Mr. Surendro Nath. The school represented by Mr. Surendro Nath confined itself to political agitation and to criticism of British methods of administration. The new school, represented perhaps most conspicuously by Mr. Arabindo Ghosh, scarcely disguised its hostility to British rule itself and to all that the British ascendency stands for. In one form or other the new spirit represented by Mr. Arabindo Ghosh, spread like wild fire not only among the students but among the teachers.

"The first phase of unrest had been mainly political and free from any open exhibition of disloyalty to the British rule. With the Partition of Bengal it passed into a second phase in which new economic issues were superadded to the political issue and the Swadeshi movement and the boycott, the two weapons of political agitation, soon imported methods of violence and lawlessness which had been unknown in India. This phase did not last for much more than a year after the partition, for, when once started on the inclined plain of lawlessness, the agitation rapidly developed into a much wider and deeper agitation in which Swadeshi held its place, but only in a subordinate position. The 'agitation' began rapidly to assume the revolutionary complexion. The ground had already been prepared for this transformation by spade work in the cheap press conducted by irresponsible men. The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, the Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal, put a premium on agitation and was regarded as a triumph for the agitators. This method of agitation was for sometime regarded as a panacea for all the ills. And the list of outrages and deeds of violence grew heavier as 1908 wore on, but none perhaps created such a sensation as the murder of Mrs. and Miss Kennedy of Mozufferpore, who were killed by a bomb on 30th April 1908. The newspaper Yugantar, which belonged to Tilak's school, began to fan the flame of agitation. The conductors of the paper made it very cheap so as keep it within easy reach of every one. And its circulation rose to over 50,000, a figure hardly attained before by any Indian newspapers. This success induced others to follow suit and a few more papers of the type came into existence. But the India Newspaper Act passed in June 1908 suppressed the Yugantar and others of the type.

"As a result of the developed form of 'agitation' secret societies were founded many innocent men fell victims to the bomb, hundreds of political dacoities were committed, many national volunteers were prosecuted, physical training on the models of Mr. Tilak's gymnasia was given, manufacturers of bomb were traced out and more than all an indelible mark on Indian history was left. Did the press, which taught the lesson of agitation to the people, imagine in the beginning that the end would be so mischievous and full of an anarchical movement? Having got an experience of all this in the country, is it fair on the part of some of the Muslim papers to press for political agitation, howsoever much it may be constitutional. Are the masses of the Muslims so well versed in law that they would differentiate between agitation constitutional and agitation revolutionary? Does it not follow that the preaching of agitation in the Muslim atmosphere too, if insisted upon, would be attended with the same sort of dangerous agitation and develop into anarchism?

"The critics of the League maintain that agitation is the life and soul of the whole political, social and industrial history of England. This is quite true. I also say so. No doubt agitation is a very tempting subject. But India is not Europe. Indians have not got the same sort of education and civilization. What is beneficial in Europe cannot necessarily be beneficial in India. The Indian journalists who taught the lessons of agitation were only Matriculates, while the European journalists were Masters of Arts in the University of British agitators. The former are only the pupils of latter and the pupils while imitating the master threw India in confusion and chaos. The newspapers in England which are regarded as mischievous find their correctives in the newspapers of the other party. In India this is not the case. There is no healthy play of public opinion. The classes whose confidence in British rule is still unshaken are practically unrepresented in the press, which is mostly in the hands of the intellectuals, of whom the majority are drifting into increasing estrangement, while the minority are generally too timid to stem the flowing tide. Moreover, England is inhabited by one race, and India is inhabited by different races, having conflicting aims and different aspirations. Our Hindu fellow-countrymen agitate for stopping cow-killing, the Muslims cannot do that. Our Hindu fellow-countrymen agitate for Sawaraj, the Muslims are afraid of Sawaraj, and consequently oppose it. Our Hindu fellow-countrymen agitate against Urdu and separate electorates of the Muslims. The Musalmans cannot do that. In short, our Hindu fellow-countrymen aspire to get Sawaraj. Therefore if they agitate in proportion to the magnitude of the task, they may do it; but the Muslims who oppose Sawaraj cannot even cherish the idea of following the footprints of the sister community in this respect. It seems absurd to advise the Muslims to agitate like the sister community for the acquisition of political rights. Some Muslim papers are in the habit of translating the proceedings of the Congress and its resolutions to directly or indirectly draw the Muslims on the lines of the Congress; but it is a great mistake on their part, because Muslim politics have not very much to do with the politics of the sister community, because the Muslims want the permanence of the British rule in the country; while the sister community wants autonomy on the Colonial lines.

"The recent experiment of the system of agitation has been proved to the hilt to be faulty and it has been found out tnat it was impossible to fix any limit to it or to offer any legal definition. Agitation cannot remain necessarily within a certain limit at all times and in all places. Experience has shown that even highly educated people, forgetting themselves in the lust of indignation, have begun to embark upon the perpetration of improper deeds.

"It is true that in order to acquire political rights efforts are to be made and these are required to be made peacefully, steadily, persistently and constitutionally. But while such efforts are being made, who will guarantee that no person whatever in society will go out of control? And as such a guarantee cannot be given, how would it be reasonable to ask the League which is the representative of the Indian Musalmans to carry on a method of agitation for which there is no limit and no guarantee? That is what I do not understand. One may be tempted to ask that if agitation is such a bad thing, then how would the Muslims acquire political rights? The answer is not far to seek. The All-India Muslim League has a Council of its own in which resolutions are adopted from time to time and sent to Government, and if its prayers be not granted the Counci again and again adopts resolutions till it succeeds. The success of the League in getting separate electorates for the Musalmans is owing to this method. Recently the League by passing resolutions succeeded in getting Mr. Montagu, Under-Secretary of State for India, contradict his own adverse remarks against the unity of the Musalmans. If need be the Council of the League can be made more active. The Provincial Leagues have got their separate Councils, they can be made very active too. Instead of holding meetings of the Council once in a month they can be held four times. This sort of agitation the League has been carrying on and will carry on, if need be, still more vigorously. The present practice is to adopt resolutions and to send them to Government; but much improvement can be made on the existing system by the addition of the system of Deputation in matters of grave importance. These two methods of agitation are such methods that there is no danger of any Muslim, in demanding political rights, passing beyond the control of temperate counsel and sober guidance. What I say is this that the ideal of the Muslims of India is not self-government; therefore they will never adopt the methods of agitation as practised either by the Moderates or the Extremists. Has not this ideal in the Extremist camp of the Congress, from which now it is free, caused impatience on account of its impracticability, and has not the impatience of the Extremists carried off their feet, and has not this loss of equipoise created the worst kind of extremism, and has not extremism given birth to anarchism, bombs, secret societies, assassination, and are not all this the greatest menace to the peaceful progress of the country? In the light of the differences of social, moral and religious standards of England and India, and the diversity of race, character, and creed between the rulers and the ruled, one may be pardoned for thinking that the imitation of the methods of agitation that is carried on in Europe is most dangerous for Indians.

"In every country there are times in the affairs of societies, peoples, and nations, when their feelings are aroused to their innermost depth by some great sentiment or great fear (the sentiments and the fears are the mothers of the greatest revolutions of the world). These sentiments send men into delirious madness, a sort of hallucination, and this is the time of saturnalia with those men who seek for notoriety or power. And on such occasions cheap papers are started to enlist the support and sympathy of the revolutionary agitators. There is not a lie so mendacious and utterly unbelievable that they will write in their newspapers but will be believed. The annulment of the Partition of Bengal, the Tripolitan affairs, the high-handedness of the Russians in Meshed, and the dethronement of three absolute monarchs in three independent Muslim States constitute a novel chapter in the history of Islam and have stirred Muslim sentiments very much. But as the Muslims are loyal to the core and as their own interests, apart from other considerations, demand the permanence of British rule in India, they have not gone out of control; but after all they are human beings and if the lessons of agitation, howsoever constitutional, be again taught and dinned in their ears, they will sooner or later begin to travel on an undesirable road. And as there is no line of demarcation between the agitation constitutional and the agitation revolutionary so the Muslims will be led astray and will put a blot on the fair fame and name of the community. To avoid this contingency, to prevent the growth of this pernicious tree, is altogether in the hands of the leaders and the Muslim League. The All-India Muslim League and all the provincial and District Leagues should prepare a list of those papers which teach the lesson of agitation to the younger generation, and present the list to the Viceroy, the Lieutenant-Governors of all the Provinces and the District Officers with a request to treat such papers not as the organs of the Muslims and to hold them responsible for stirring the calm waters of Muslim life which may, God forbid, give rise to pernicious ideas in the future.

"In the political affairs of the country the Muslims hold a place of unique importance, and it is their duty to realise fully the responsibility attaching to them. Indifference to the political developments of the country and disregard of the phases through which these developments are passing are not possible any more. United expression of views alone can save the younger generation from the quicksands into which a few vernacular papers are leading. The sooner we remedy the growing evil the better it will be.

The 26th July 1912.

YUSUF."

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

Horrible cases in Afghanistan.

11. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), dated 26th July 1912:—

* * * * * *

"(1) A Muhammadan Official of Jallalabad sent one Jamal Singh to Peshawar to sell gold worth Rs. 1,300. Seeing that the money could not be realised in Peshawar, Jaimal Singh had to take the gold back to that officer. In the way a sepoy of the Amir searched him and finding that he had gold, followed him unnoticably and kept a constant watch over him in order to take possession of the gold whenever the opportunity presented itself. When Jaimal Singh left the caravan for a while to pay the call of nature, the sepoy killed Jaimal Singh and took possession of the gold. To escape detection the murderer completely destroyed the identity of the man by burning his beard and the keshas. But in spite of this precaution, his person was recognised. A petition was then sent to His Majesty the Amir, the upshot of which was that no body even enquired as to who the murdered was and who the murderer. The father of the deceased, moreover, had to pay the price of the gold for which his son had paid his life.

"(2) One Mastan Singh was murdered in Bhati Kak, the neighbours were witnesses to the scene, the wife of the murdered was also present at the occasion and beheld the murderer in the very act of committing the crime. She knew the name of the murderer and sent an application to the Amir through the District officer but to no effect.

"(3) A dacoity took place in the house of Mangal Singh of Biswal, in which besides sustaining a heavy loss of property, he lost his life as well. The dacoits while escaping inflicted serious injuries on his body to which he succumbed few days after. He recognised some of the dacoits, even some of the stolen property was recovered from them, but nobody paid any heed to the matter in spite of repeated complaints in his behalf.

"(4) A similar dacoity occurred in the house of a goldsmith in Kachch. Besides a considerable loss of property the owner of the house was murdered in the act of self-defence. But no officer took any notice of the occurrence.

"(5) In the village Charzi a Sikh was selling goods in his shop. A Muhammadan came and asked for some articles. Unfortunately the required things were out of stock. Thereupon the Moslem stabbed the poor Sikh forthwith, but the wonder is that nobody even ventured to ask the Moslem why he had murdered the poor man who had committed no fault and who was quite innocent.

"(6) In the same village one Urjan Singh was having his meals in his house whichy was quite adjacent to his shop. He espied some light in the shop and on entering in behelde a thief ready to make away with the stolen goods.

"Urjan Singh caught him, threw him down and handed him over to the district officer who happened to be staying there that day. A few days after the thief got quite scot free without receiving any punishment. A bitter enmity was supposed to be likely to spring up between the family of the Moslem thief and that of Bhai Urjan Singh, and people feared that Urjan Singh would be murdered sooner or later by the hands of the thief some day.

"Hundreds of such tragedies and horrible offences are committed with impunity and the offenders are not brought to book. But it should be noticed that this unhappy state of affairs and this habitual neglect and indifference on the part of authorities is observable only when non-Moslems are the aggrieved party. If a Muhammadan is wronged or injured in any way, a sifting scrunity is made and a through enquiry and investigation is ordered into the case.

"That it is so will be evident from the following instance which we quote in this connection.

"In a village near Kachh a Muhammadan was murdered. As the authorities failed to discover any trace of the murderer in spite of strenuous enquiries and efforts, the officer in charge of the case gave a queer order to the effect that one rupee should be levied from every Hindu and Sikh in addition to the Jazia money and that the sum thus realized would be paid to the bereaved family of the deceased. The order further added that if a Hindu or Sikh failed to pay the extra fine willingly, it should be taken from him by use of force. Finding themselves in sore trouble and realising their life and person in constant insecurity many non-Moslem subjects of His Majesty are already leaving his territories for the benign and peaceful dominions of the British Empire.

"We may also mention that it is during the reign of the present Amir that a Sikh Dharamsala has been levelled to the ground and a palace erected in place of the famous spring known as "Chashma-i-Baba Nanak." We deem it necessary to bring the aforesaid situation to the kind notice of His Majesty and his Government and beg to remind him with all respect and deference that His father's name was a watchward for mercy, justice and benevolence and that by according equal treatment and justice to his Moslem and non-Moslem subjects he had laid every one under his rule, under a deep debt of gratitude and obligation. We, therefore, fervently hope that this humble appeal of ours will receive due thought and attention at Your Majesty's hand and that you will take speedy and powerful action towards the removal of these complaints which are becoming a matter of serious complaint every day."

III.—Native States.

Desertion of old capitals.

12. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of 26th July 1912:—

"A new mania seems to be taking possession of Indian Chiefs, and that is the desertion of old Capitals from traditional site and the building of new Capitals elsewhere. The Maharaja of Patiala, we learn, finds that his ancestral Capital is malarial and unhealthy and His Highness is thinking of raising another Capital at Bhatinda. His Highness the Maharaja of Bhurtpore has also under contemplation the removal of his Capital from that of his historical city to another locality, and we hear that other chiefs are considering similar proposals. For sometime the question of raising an Anglo-Indian regiment has been under discussion; but it seems desirable that this proposal had better give way to the necessity of organising an army of town planners; because if this wholesale transfer of Capitals from one place to another is to be carried out, very soon town planners of all grades will be in demand in this country."

Cases of murders in the Patiala State.

13. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 1st August 1912 :—

"A Se ies of Murders.—During the last three months a large number of murders have occurred in the Sunam tahsil. In Ghrachon village one Bania Sahukar named Sobha was mercilessly cut into pieces. In another village Balhan, a father and a son were poisoned, and so on. There had been many cases of thefts here, but the Police has been unsuccessful in finding out the real culprits. On the other hand, poor innocent citizens are being oppressed. Will the State authorities pay heed to this matter which is of serious consequence both to the people and the State?"

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Mr. Hardyal and the Vedas.

14. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 23rd (received on the 30th) July 1912, has an article headed "A heart-rending voice from America: Gross insult to the Vedas, the Upanishadas, (other) Shashtras and ancient rishis: contempt for 'Om' the revered name of of God." The paper complains that Lala Hardyal has contributed from America an article to the Modern Review (Calcutta), in which he has made some absurd attacks on the Vedas and (their) God. After remarking that the Lala is wrong in asserting that the Vedas set a premium on ignorance, it endeavours to refute him, and praises the Indians of olden days. In conclusion, it deprecates the conduct of the Hindustan in having published a translation of the above article, and says that it is a matter of shame that no Arya paper has so far written on the subject.

A Baghdad Pir in Lahore.

15. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 25th July 1912, has a note headed "Arrival of the successor of the great saint of Baghdad." It reports that Maulana Pir Syed Ibrahim Sai-ud Din Al Qadri Effendi arrived at Lahore on the morning of the 24th idem. Thousands of the local Muhammadans were present on the platform and outside the Railway station, to receive him, and it was with the greatest difficulty he could make his way through the crowd. Sardar Ayub Khan's carriage was waiting for him outside the station, and, after entering it, he tendered his thanks to the assembled people through his interpreter.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 25th July 1912, says that the Pir arrived at Lahore after paying a visit to Srinagar. Some persons, including Mian Chiragh-ud-din, Maulvi Fazal-ud-din (Pleader), Maulvi Bukhari, Rai Bahadur Ram Saran Das and the Editor, were presented to him in the Railway carriage in which he had travelled. After remarking that thousands of Hindus in Delhi and Agra believe in his progenitor, the Saint of Baghdad, the paper reports that the Editor was presented to him (he had also a talk with him in Arabic) by Haji Mian Muhammad Chotani, a rais of Bombay and Haji Dost Muhammad Khan, a Karachi merchant, who have been travelling with the Pir. The visitor put up at Faridkot house, where Sardar Ayub Khan, who visited Baghdad 25 years ago and met the Pir's father and grandfather, went to see him and was treated to tea and dinner; the Editor, Muhammad Chotani and Khan Muhammad Bashir Ali Khan also partook of the latter. After the dinner was over and the Sardar had left, the Pir had a talk with the Editor, when he deplored the dilapidated condition of the Jumma Mosque in Kashmir (Srinagar), as also the disunion in the ranks of the Muhammadans of the Happy Valley. He also accounted for the present degraded plight of Muhammadans by reciting the verse "God does not change the condition of the people, which will not (exert itself to) change the same." Further, he deplored the indifference of the Prophet's followers to the true Islamic practices.

Juvenile offenders and the Salvation Army.

16. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 24th July 1912 :—

"In another column is published the text of an important resolution on the above subject which appears in the Punjab Gazette. The resolution means that the Local Government have, without consulting public opinion, decided to commit juvenile prisoners, for a portion of their term of imprisonment, to the care of a Christian proselytising association.

For few, very few must be the prisoners who will not prefer residence in a settlement where they will get good food and good clothing, have to work no more than eight hours a day, earn a good wage, and be in a position to live with their wives and children and interview and otherwise communicate with their relatives and friends to being the inmates of a jail. We admit that the Salvation Army has done much for the criminal tribes. We acknowledge that it is doing much for the industrial regeneration of weavers. We are confident that it will do much for the juvenile offenders committed to its charge. But it is after all a missionary body, one of whose objects is to convert people to Christianity. It may, therefore, be affirmed that some of the prisoners whom it will take under its wings will renounce their ancestral faith in favour of the creed in Christ; and as, unfortunately, the Muslim element preponderates in the population of the Punjab jails, the innovation may have undesirable effects on their religious convictions. The Local Government expresses its readiness sympathetically to consider 'any proposals on similar lines put forward by any association of the requisite standing, which is in a position to establish a suitable settlement.' But surely it was the duty of the Government not to enter into any arrangement of this kind with the Salvation Army, without intimating to the public that such an offer had emanated from the Christian association, and without inviting public opinion thereon. Instead of doing that, the resolution dismisses this most grave aspect of the question with the cynical remark that the reclamation of a prisoner after his release, 'though enlightened opinion must strongly approve of the principle, is not of a nature likely to command much practical sympathy.' We assure the powers-that-be that there was no need of hurry in the matter. The haste will only tend to create false impressions among the masses and we feel bound to record our emphatic protest against the secrecy and hurry which have marked the affair, and still hope that, in deference to public opinion, Government will not proceed with the scheme. For we hold that even if no Hindu or Muslim organisations of a similar type could undertake the work of reclamation, that is no reason why Government should favour a proselytising agency and throw its own burden on the shoulders of the latter."

An Optimistic View of Our Sikh Future.

17. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of 26th July 1912 :—

"I dreamt a dream and saw men of Brobdingnagian dimensions, majestic appearances, long venerable beards, whose living was plain, but whose thinking was high. Their physical frames seemed to adorn the earth which they trod. Their relations with each other were cordial, pure thoughts were their constant practice, service of humanity was their ideal, and resignation and patience under suffering were their chief features. The foundations, on which their organisation was to rear, were solid, and the foundation of that organisation was firm and unshakable and that body was one whole and indivisible, and people whispered, with awe, wonder, and respect, 'They are Sikhs.'

"Oh, they vanished from my sight. My eyes, what do I see! The Raj of the Sikhs. I see the 'Lion of the Punjab' majestically seated on his throne. Reader, you surely regard that time as the happiest and the luckiest period in our national history? No, no. It was not an unmixed blessing.

"'Fate wings with every wish the afflictive dart,

"'Each gift of nature, each grace of art.'

"The Puritans of England were the purest and noblest people at the time of their origin. Adversity purified and ennobled them, as gold becomes brighter after passing through the furnace. They were incorruptible so long as adversities and misfortunes confronted them. But when they succeeded in overthrowing the second among the Stuart Kings, and established a Government of their own, it was then that they began to degenerate. Clever and shrewd people, finding that they could derive immeasurable gain by identifying themselves with the governing body, went so far as to change their external form and hypocritically declared themselves Puritans. A mixture of the insincere and the hypocritical, the Puritans produced their inevitable product. The Puritans deteriorated. Their name became a bye-word for hypocrisy. This was exactly the case with the Sikhs in Maharaja Ranjit Singh's time. Finding that men of long, flowing hair and venerable beards were the favourites of the Maharaja, people soon metamorphosed their outer selves. The number of men wearing long hair and majestic beards doubled, trebled, quadrupled and multiplied infinitely within a brief compass of time. The Sikhs were to be found at every foot of ground, but Sikhs of a strange type, who combined the religious beliefs of Hindus and Sikhs in themselves, who bowed before the Guru Granth volubly and musically sang its hymns, but who also were the most earnest devotees of Thakar Ji Maharaj, and regarded the Vedas and Guru Granth not as essentially two different things, teaching widely different doctrines, but as one and the same thing. Reader, it served their purpose to do so. They were like Bunyan's Mr. Facing-Both-Ways; and what was the outcome of such a mixture? We became a community of degraded men. Our reputation for honesty and truthfulness was lost. The word Sikh became a nickname for an illiterate, shabbily dressed and lukewarm being. Above all, we lost our Raj. 'What is to be, will be.'

"But my dream, my dream! What do I behold? I see some wide-awake concientious persons shouting out to their slumbering brethren 'Arise, awake, it is time to be up and doing,' and behold, grand edifices begin to be set up at various places, as if by a touch of Allahdin's lamp. 'Reform' 'reform' is the watchword. But, but—Did we sow sdragon's teeth like an old mythological character? Who are these Fathers of Evil? Surely a hollow vessel makes much noise. The cries of false, peripatetic medicine vendors are the loudest and their shops are set up at the most conspicuous places and simple-minded people are beguiled and led astray. Exactly similar are these glib talkers. But let me proceed. I saw that the Fathers of evil died their own death after a generation or two and truth eventually flourished, for truth is like God eternal, being an attribute of God. I saw that Sikhs had three well equipped colleges at Amritsar, Ferozepore and Gujranwala and several self-supporting High Schools.

"I saw that the Sikhs discarded their old evil customs which resulted from the mixture of hypocritical people.

"I saw that the Sikhs rose up once more in all their glory and the word 'Sikh' became a word of honour, as it has been so.

"I saw that the minds, souls, and bodies of Sikhs were harmoniously developed, and the world again said with wonder and respect 'These are Sikhs.' I rejoiced, my heart beat more rapidly with joy, the blood rushed into my head, and I woke up, and my dream had its end. Good-bye."

The attitude of the Arya Samajists towards the Sikhs.

18. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of 26th July 1912 :—

"Whenever any leader of the Arya Samaj happens to meet and whenever any writing from that body appears in the press, it is emphatically convinced that the Samajists dearly love the Sikhs, that they have great respect and reverence for Sikhism and its principles and that they love the Gurus as the saviours of the Hindus—who saved entire Hinduism from the dire tyranny of religious persecutions in perilous times familiar in history. They also profess to show their altruistic sympathy on principles of social justice and unity. But it is painful to see how far this theoretic assertion is true and what is the soul of reality in these statements. The Editor of the Arya Gazette—a religious organ of the Samaj—who is an M.A. and who often tries to show his wide liberality and broad mindedness on various occasions, urges the claims of the depressed classes in respect of their uplift and improvement. But if the task of their betterment is undertaken by the Sikhs and attempt is made by them at their amalgamation, it invariably gets into ill-humour and grows indignant and outraged at the idea. That this is so may be seen from an instance which we quote in vindication of our remarks. Recently Baba Jaswant Singh Bedi, the eldest son of the late Hon'ble Baba Khem Singh Bedi, baptised and brought to the fold of Sikhism some of the members of a low Hindu tribe in Nurpore—who were held in utter contempt and disdain by the Hindus and whom they had refused total admission in social intercourse. The Editor of the Arya Gazette was very indignant at the incident and remarked that why the Samajists had left these people to go over to Sikhism, that why they had not undertaken their reform and conversion and brought them over to their own faith. To all this, we may refer by the way, that they were not inclined to follow the dogmas and tenets of Hinduism in spite of the persisted efforts and preachings of the Samajists and had refused them assent to the conversion, in obedience to the dictates of their reason and conscience. Now are these the so-called social principles? Is it the professed social justice and religious toleration? We wish that Wah-i-Guru had given our Daya Nandi friends to know better and pray that he should, through his all-pervading mercy purge their restless souls of the ever disturbing elements of continuous bias, envy and prejudice and leave our friend in the same old rotten habit of indulging in ill and false tactics with wonted instincts and insincere motives."

The History of the Sikh Race and Mr. Stevens of Vancouver.

19. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), dated 26th July 1912 :—

"The Sikh race in the world's chronicle of human doings has a unique distinctiveness, as well as interest, all its own. From the time of the predatory crusades of Mahmud in the 11th century, up till the middle of the 18th, the Muhammadan was the master of the situation in the Indian Peninsula. The disunion of castes, the neglect of physical culture, the wranglings of sects and the futile scruples about the place and kind of dining had brought Hindu India to an almost complete prostration. Not content with physical domination, the victors, intoxicated with power, began to assert their absolutism in the spiritual domains too. A short-sighted Emperor with the unlimited resources of the whole continent and with a gigantic army composed of the Moghuls, descended from Taimur and his fierce Tartars, pledged himself to the levelling of the world to Muhammadanism. The Quran and the sword were held forth for choice and millions began to barter away their conscience for life. Nay, if there is a spunk of truth in the eloquent testimony of history, the Hindus themselves, in some cases, began to co-operate with the enemies of their faith in the attempted extinction of the Sikh people, who rose as one living protest against the unwise, unjust and unnatural policy of the rulers.

"Pen cannot certainly, with all its miracles, convey to the reader an idea of the pure romance of the struggle of the Sikh and the Moslem which ushered in the advent of the Briton. A handful of men rose up against the whole Empire. The forests of the Chenab, an idea of which may be formed from the poor remnants still visible from the Railway-line, as the traveller whirls away in his compartment, were the favourite abodes of these 'elect' of India. With sword and their conscience, life after life was dearly sacrificed and that 'which could not be, came to be.' The Empire of the Great Moghul was pulled down to rise no more, and the followers of Him Who placed before the world the highest ideal of love and sacrifice by sacrificing his four dearly loved sons, knocked at the very gates of Kabul and made a name for themselves among the tribes, which set at naught even the modern cannon, so much so that even to-day, you might see a Pathan wife quieting down her boy by the name of one of them (Hari Singh).

"This shows very clearly that before the Sikhs came into conflict with the English, they were the masters of the north-west of India—the most stubborn part indeed and the home of the most fanatic, gallant and unruly Muhammadan population of the whole of India. This also must follow that he who could control these Picts and Scots of the East, could most surely govern and face the rest of the Moslem population of India. At the time of the wars of the Sutlej, therefore, the Sikhs had nothing to fear at the hands of the Moslems or any other nationality of India.

"'Ever since the annexation, the Sikh' in the words of a writer in the 19th Century Review, 'has been the fastest friend of Briton.' When the Indian firmament was overcast with the murky clouds of the Mutiny, Sir John Nicholson, Sir John Lawrence and others enlisted the confidence of the chiefs who in their turn persuaded thousands to fill up the ranks of the mutilated English army in defence of the very honour and lives of English homes in India. If 'books are the spirit breathed from dead men to their kind,' then most surely the hundreds of English Commanders and scores of Rulers have spontaneously attested to the sincere loyalty and unequalled valour of the ex-rulers of the Punjab. The verdict of History culled from the annals from the very hour of the cartridge-flaggration up till the very hour of the Sikh assault on the ramparts of the stronghold of the last Moghul Emperor, has easily been crystallized into the sentence 'Sir John Lawrence and others with their brave Sikh allies rescued Delhi.' It is worse than foolish to attribute the life-devotion of the Khalsa to a motive of self-preservation. A people who could snatch away numerous flags and imprison hundreds from the troops of a dashing Commander like General Gough, could certainly face the shattered and demoralized mobs of a broken power. Even to-day the times will prove that it is the Sikh who will and has stood the severest trials.

"It is quite true, of course, that now when our people are under the frowns of fortunes, practically eliminated from the civil and political circles of the Government, any one can read history like the Bible according to his own mind:—'They make it speak in whatever sense they please!'

"There is, therefore, nothing unnatural in the attitude of Mr. H. H. Stevens, a member of the House of Commons at Vancouver, who, impelled by the base considerations of a war of colours, has uttered an historical blasphemy by imputing the Sikh alliance with the British at the mutiny to a spirit of self-preservation against the Moslems and not a love of the English. In time of peace, as says Shakespeare, every one is brave.

"We have full trust in the fair English conscience and we feel confident that from the heart of every native of the British Isles an emphatic disavowal of the words of Mr. Stevens will rise and a chorus of protests will hail his statement. In support of our contention we are ready to quote chapter and verse, let Mr. Stevens come forward with his history.

"We bring it most prominently but most respectfully to the notice of the Government of India that the words of Mr. Stevens, if left unnoticed and unchallenged by the Government, will deal a sad blow to the hearts of millions of the loyal Sikhs all over the world. This mischief may be incalculable. We, therefore, submit most submissively that the Indian Government may, through the Imperial Government, call upon Mr. Stevens to retract his words. If a Mr. Montagu can be made to swallow his statement which is historically true, a Mr. Stevens may be asked to withdraw an unfounded calumny which seems prompted only by the considerations of lucre against which Christ preached all his life."

VI.—Legislation.

Argentine Sugar and Argentine Immigration Law.

20. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 30th July 1912 :—

"A notification of the Government of India in the Department of Commerce and Industry, dated the 27th instant, says that the Governor-General in Council is pleased to cancel the previous Notifications of the Government of India imposing under sections 8 A and 8 B of the India Tariff Act of 1894, additional and special import duties on sugar produced in or exported from the Argentine Republic. Quite recently the Republic gave us to understand that it would not encourage the immigration of British Indians. There is no connection between the special duties imposed on bounty-fed sugar and the immigration laws of the Republic. Yet the Indian public cannot help thinking that the Government of India have not been anxious to obtain for us the same fair treatment which they accord to foreigners in this country. We do not want our countrymen to exile themselves voluntarily to Argentina or to any other place. Still British citizenship carries with it rights and privileges for which we are bound to fight. If Argentina would not admit us to her shores, it follows that India is free to erect a similar embargo against the subjects of that Republic. May we inquire if the Government of India is prepared to do this? This is not a question between two British possessions, but between a British possession and a foreign country."

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

Pandit Kanhya Lal's appointment as Second Judicial Commissioner, Oudh.

21. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 29th July 1912, has an article headed "Pandit Kanhya Lal's appointment as Judicial Commissioner, Oudh." After remarking that the appointment reminds one of the whims of the despotic rulers of old, the paper expresses its inability to understand what special qualifications are possessed by the Pandit, excepting that he is a brother of Rai Bahadur Pandit Sundar Lal.

(d)—Education.

A new appointment.

22. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), dated 27th July 1912 :—

"One fine morning, some years ago, a brilliant idea occurred to the India Office, namely, that the Indian students in England were in dire need of sympathy at his hands. An English gentleman was procured who disinterestedly agreed to act as agent extraordinary of the said sympathy on its behalf at a salary of seven hundred pounds a year to be paid by the Indian tax-payer. In due course the stock of sympathy in the India Office grew too large for a single individual to properly control, and the services of two more gentlemen were requisitioned at handsome salaries to be paid by the Indian tax-payer. Those who thought at the time that a limit had been reached may be interested to learn that a fourth appointment has just been announced at a salary of one thousand pounds a year to be paid by the Indian tax-payer. It would be interesting to watch the further development of this unique Department of sympathy under the encouraging auspices of other people's money.

The new Universities.

23. The following is from the Punjabee (Lahore), dated 30th July 1912 :—

* * * * * * * *

"Although the disappointment of the public will at the outset be great, we hope that both the Muhammadans and the Hindus will remember that the question of affiliation does not properly arise now, especially when the ideal aimed at is a purely residential teaching University, and when the Government of India have also to consider the somewhat strong criticism of those who fear that these are likely to promote sectarian rivalries and anguralities. We have strongly protested against the charge of narrowness or sectarianism and the Government of India also believe that neither the Aligarh nor the Benares University need be sectarian and narrow. But the truth can only be established by actual results and it is best to demonstrate the soundness and advantages of the new ideal of learning by concentrating our resources in one centre, rather than by any ambitious diffusion and scattering of our resources. Although no reasons are given why the Government of India have declined to accept affiliation of mofussil colleges, it is easy to see that they must have been led to it by the fact that at best the new scheme is only experimental. Why they are hopeful of success, they are also anxious to minimise the chances of failure arising from Affiliation. Affiliation would involve effective supervision and constant attention to several outlying centres of education especially when the starting centre has not been perfected. The new Universities are yet a budding growth and it is not desirable to hamper them with the responsibilites of supervising mofussil colleges. We have already said that the principle of affiliation was adopted by the Hindus because the Muhammadans had already had it in their scheme. Now that the Government of India have on mature consideration decided to withhold the right, we think we had better allow the University to be born decently and to gain strength by natural process before we ask for the affiliation of mofussal colleges. We however, think that affiliation will be found necessary in a poor country like India where we cannot think of establishing many University centres. The demand for higher education will certainly grow and the older Universities will become crowded. If the ideals of Aligarh and Benares gain popularity and stand the test of time it will be impossible to restrict their natural expansion. India is a country of vast distances, but the ideals of the nation are the same in Kashmir as in Comorin. Territorial, social and climatic reasons point to this necessity."

"It is quite clear that the promoters of the Hindu and Muhammadan Universities are not going to accept without protest the announcement recently made in a Press communiqué issued by the Government of India that the scope of the proposed Hindu and Muhammadan Universities will be limited to the town of their location and the further announcement that this decision comes from the Secretary of State and is final. They would, in our opinion, be untrue to the patriotic duty that they have undertaken if they failed to do so. It is evident from the comments that have appeared in the Hindu and Muhammadan newspapers throughout the country that the announcement has caused deep and widespread disappointment among both Hindus and Muhammadans. The general feeling is that a strong and concerted effort should be made on behalf of both communities to ask the Government to reconsider their decision. Nothing can be taken as a settled fact and when strong reasons are urged against their decision the Government may feel called upon to change it. We feel doubtful whether the Government will move from the position they have taken up, but that is no reason why attempts should not be made to have the matter reconsidered. United action is more likely to have effect than single efforts made in a half-hearted manner. The comments in the Muhammadan papers show that whatever view might ultimately be adopted by the leading men among the promoters of the Muhammadan University scheme, the general and almost unanimous opinion of the community is that the proposed University would be worse than useless if its scope is limited to Aligarh. The feeling is quite strong amonge the Muhammadans that it is better to drop the scheme and utilise the funds collected so far otherwise, than to accept a University on the lines laid down by the Government. The decision of the Government places the promoters of the Universities in a very awkward position."

The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 31st July 1912 :—

"We emphatically endorse the suggestion of the Lahore Tribune that the Hindus and the Muhammadans of India should jointly protest against the decision of the Secretary of State to confine the scope of the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities to Benares and Aligarh. Since we wrote last on the subject, public opinion has declared itself with unmistakeable emphasis in favour of our view, and the feeling is both strong and widespread among the Musalmans that an emasculated University, deprived of the power of affiliating outside colleges, will be worse than useless and that such an institution cannot and will not solve the educational problem of Muslim India. Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk has spoken with no uncertain voice, the Muhammadan press has also given proof of rare unanimity in taking serious exception to the Government announcement, and there are manifest indications of the general and profound disappointment to which the communiqué has given rise all over the country, a disappointment which has not been allayed by the subsequent announcement that the responsibility for the decision rests not with the Government of India but with the Secretary of State. The Anjuman-i-Himayat-i-Islam, Lahore, as the body that maintains the only other first grade Muslim College in India outside Aligarh, has resolved to take the initiative in the matter, so far as the Punjab is concerned, and to press the Government of India and the Secretary of State for a reconsideration of the decision and for the Aligarh University being permitted to affiliate colleges situated beyond the limits of its town.

"Similar has been the experience of Hindu community, and there is reason to believe that the contents of the communiqué have greatly perturbed the leaders of the Benares University movement, damping their enthusiasm and creating serious dissatisfaction throughout the country. Each community will doubtless launch its protests. But we think the chances of success will be much greater if united action were taken and a joint representation submitted to Government. We repeat that the issues at stake are enormous that the bulk of the people, both Hindus and Musalmans, will have nothing to do with local Universities of the proposed type, that some of the money collected will have to be refunded if the promises of all-India Universities cannot be kept and that, in the event of the Secretary of State refusing to modify his orders, some other means, like the one suggested by us last week, may have to be resorted to with the object of carrying out a large educational programme for the Indian Musalmans. Meanwhile, it is essential to ask the powers that be for a reconsideration of the matter and we are positive united Hindu-Muhammadan action will prove one of the most effective means for ensuring success."

The proposed Muslim University.

24. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 28th July 1912, publishes a leader headed "The Himalayas in labour and the birth of a mouse." The recent communiqué from the Department of Education about the limited scope of the proposed Hindu and Muhammadan Universities has, says the paper, dashed to the ground the hopes which the country had long entertained about taking education into its own hands and centralising all the arrangements. The announcement, it adds, has brought home to Muhammadans the painful truth that the hopes raised in their minds at Delhi by Sir Harcourt Butler in the Government of India's name were intended solely to make them collect 30 or 35 lakhs of rupees, after which their fond expectations were to be scattered to the winds by telling them from Lord Crewe that the University proposed to be established at Aligarh could not be an All-India institution. When the Member for Education assured them, on behalf of the Government of India, at the meeting of the Muhammadan Educational Conference, held at Delhi on the occasion of the Coronation Durbar, that they would assuredly be granted a charter if they succeeded in collecting sufficient funds, he knew full well that they wanted a University having jurisdiction all over the country, and that this was why the Musalmans of all provinces had shown great liberality in giving money for the University. It is, therefore, clear that he made the above promise on the understanding,—or at least tried to make Muhammadans believe that he was under the impression—that the University for which they would receive a charter would belong to all of them. Consequently, they regarded Sir Hercourt Butler's promise as unalterable, and resolved to pour out gold and silver in order to secure the promised charter. And when the Partition of Bengal was reversed they consoled themselves with the thought that Government "would at least apply the ointment of the Muslim University on the wound" thereby inflicted on them. Continuing, the paper states that when Mr. Montagu declared (sometime back) that Indian Muhammadans were not a homogeneous people and had not common aims and objects, Muhammadans were seized with the dread that the remark was the precursor of some intercommunal injury that was to be done to them. And does this announcement about the scope of the Muhammadan University mean, it asks, that Musalmans will never have a centre (to rally round); never be fashioned in the same educational mould; never have common communal traditions; never have that intellectual unity which is the source of strength; that they will continue separated from one another; and that, even if their hearts cannot be separated, they will be made to differ in mental constitution, so that some successor of Mr. Montagu may be placed in a position to say at some future time that the present Under-Secretary's words were true after all? The Editor feels constrained to say, without fear of contradiction, that the announcement has made the majority of Muhammadans lose faith in the promises of Government, and that they have begun to say openly, "we do not want such a University."

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 31st July 1912, has an article headed "The limited jurisdiction of the Muslim University—III." In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 22 of Selections No. 30), the paper refers to an article in the Aligarh Institute Gazette which advises Muhammadans not to give way to despair, saying that the British Government is a constitutional one and that its decisions are not, therefore, unalterable. The paper approves of the advice and observes that, in face of the modification of the Partition of Bengal, the Prophet's followers need not feel greatly disappointed at the decision to limit the scope of the Muslim University to Aligarh. It, however, regrets that, according to a general rumour, the Secretary of States should have come to the above decision, in spite of the Government of India not having objected to the affiliation of outside Colleges to the University.

"The following press communiqué was issued at Simla last week: 'It has been finally decided that the educational scope of a University at Aligarh or Benares should be limited to the locality in which it may be established.' All our pleasant dreams thus receive a severe knock on the head and the communiqué dissipates the idea of a central Muslim University diffusing the light of knowledge and learning all over Muhammadan India and serving as the pivot round which the entire intellectual life of the community might turn. The Aligarh University, if one is to be established at all, is to be a strictly residential University, whose operations will be confined to Aligarh, which will not possess the power of affiliating outside institutions and which will therefore perform no better functions than those of the M. A.-O. College in its existing form. This in brief is the sum and substance of the Government announcement; and if the decision be irrevocable, all that would remain for us would be to adapt ourselves to the wishes of Government or to forego the pleasure of possessing a University of our own. In either case, the community will experience the profoundest disappointment; though we refuse to accept the decision as final and must strenuously press our claims for the grant of a living and fully equipped University, which alone can fit in with our traditions of the past, duly fulfill our present national requirements and materially influence the future of Islam in India as a whole. We have repeatedly explained our views on the subject in language at once clear and emphatic and pointed out that a denominational University, run on strictly residential lines and restricted in its working to colleges situated in a particular town or district, forms and should form no part of the educational programme of the Indian Musalmans and that such an emasculated institution can serve little useful purpose and can be of no substantial help in uplifting a fallen and backward people. We have also ere now urged on Government the desirability of its conceding to the Muslims permission to found and work a University which, while being a denominational one in its character, would be extensive in its scope and be able to affiliate to itself denominational colleges situated in various parts of the country. This and nothing less than this could satisfy us ; reviving the glories of Baghdad and Cordova, refusing new vigour in the decaying body-politic of Islam in India and revitalizing the social and intellectual organism of the Muslim community. Now that Government has refused to give us such a University, the Musalmans have on their part to decide whether they will accept the arrangements proposed and spend 35 lakhs and more in raising the Aligarh College not to the status of a central University but to that of a local University. We think the Government announcement will give rise to very strong feeling and there will be many Muhammadans of light and leading, who are in a position to formulate correct opinion in the matter, who will advise the community to abandon all thought of indulging in a luxury at such an enormous cost and utilise the money collected for other and better objects. We readily recognise that matters have gone too far and that the promoters of the Muslim University scheme cannot withdraw from the position they have taken up without exposing themselves to adverse public criticism. In spite of all this, however, we think there is still time to consider and reconsider the whole question and that the organisers of the movement, we make bold to say, have no right to save their faces by sacrificing national interests or by agreeing to an arrangement, which is not acceptable to the community and which will inflict heavy financial burdens on the Indian Musalmans without bringing to them any corresponding advantage. The objection is quite obvious and no lengthy process of elaborate reasoning should be necessary to bring it home to His Highness the Agha Khan and his co-workers.

"The main point to be considered is the best way to spend the 30 lakhs which we have in hand or the 35 lakhs, to which figure we may hope to bring up the total collections at no distant date. Shall we pay this heavy price merely for the name of a University, for an institution which may follow the models of the great Universities of England but which cannot benefit the seven crores of the Indian Musalmans as British Universities benefit the English, for the simple reason that India is much bigger than England, that the average Indian Musalman is much poorer than the average Britisher and that it is impossible for a residential University of the proposed type to be of much help to a community that lives scattered all over a big continent ? The answer to this we are persuaded to give in the negative. We do not want such a University ; we never asked for it ; and we can do without it. The only course, then, open to us is to represent all this, emphatically but respectfully, to Government and to pray for the boon of an All-India institution. If our prayers are not still granted, we shall have to seriously consider whether our better interests do not demand that we should divert the money collected to the establishment of three or four first grade Arts Colleges in different Provinces and thereby multiply three or four-fold the benefits which the Aligarh College is already conferring on our people. We invite the opinion of the community on this momentous point, and have no hesitation in urging that further representations should be quickly made to Government; but if the Musulmans should still fail to gain their desire, we should be inclined to favour the alternative of establishing a few Colleges affiliated to existing Universities rather than a stunted University of our own without the powers of affiliation. Unless very congent and convincing reasons are given to the contrary, we would then advice our co-religionists to forego the idea of the shadow of a University and instead of that to strive for the possession of the substance by the establishment of a number of new colleges. Meanwhile, we hasten to observe that so enormous are the issues at stake and so radically has the entire situation been changed by the announcement made by Government that the University Constitution Committee should not be in a hurry to come to any understanding with Government and that it should defer its decision till the community has had time to fully grasp the significance of the recent announcement in all its bearings and pronounce its judgment in the matter.

A complaint in connection with the Medical School, Agra.

25. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 25th July 1912, publishes an article headed "The boycott of Muslim newspapers in Agra." In continuation of its previous remarks about the students of the Medical School, Agra, having been ordered by their teachers not to subscribe to the Comrade, the Zamindar, and certain other Muhammadan journals, the paper quotes extracts from an article published by the Agra Akhbar on the subject. Next it finds fault with its Hindu contemporaries for their silence over the illegal proceeding in question, which it ascribes to bigotry on the part of the Hindu Professors of the Agra School. In conclusion, it requests Sir John Hewett to call for an explanation from the Principal, and to inflict severe punishment on the party to blame, so as to prevent a recurrence of such incidents, which are calculated to cause ill-feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans.

The Observer (Lahore), of July 31st also publishes similar remarks.

The education of the domiciled community.

26. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 27th July 1912 :—

"At the Conference on education promoted by the domiciled community Sir Harcourt Butler presided and made a very informing and suggestive speech. He effectively met the charge of the community that the Government had been indifferent to the interests of the domiciled community. He mentioned the various sums of money specially expended on their education since Lord Curzon took up their cause, but he failed to show that the grants made from time to time were far in excess of their rightful share on the basis of population or revenue contributed. Referring to their demand that their education should be specially centralised under the direct control of the Government of India, Sir Harcourt pointed out that the needs of the community varied from province to province and that centralisation was altogether uudesirable. The present movement of the domiciled community resembles in some respects the Pan-Islamic movement of the Muslim League and blindly ignores the great differences between communities in the several parts of the country. Take, for instance, the demand for free and compulsory education which the domiciled community has put forward. It has not had the good sense of the Muhammadans who strive to propose to tax themselves specially for the purpose. The privileged class of the domiciled community wants to tax Hindus and Muhammadans and Indian Christians in order that it may prosper! Sir Harcourt Butler made it quite clear to the meeting that he was not prepared to treat its resolution as anything more than a counsel of perfection. The rest of the resolutions also ask for privileges and prerogatives which in effect mean disadvantage to others. The Government has been spending on their schools much more than their actual share of educational allotment. It is now the duty of the wealthy sections of the community to come forward to support their humble brethren."

"Sir Robert Laidlaw, M. P., placed at the disposal of the leading Protestant Educational Institutions in Calcutta a sum of £50,000 to be devoted in furthering the cause of education among Europeans and Eurasians in this country, on the understanding that he would donate another £50,000 when a formal scheme designed to carry out the objects specified by him was ready. This munificent gift led to the organisation of a Fund for the education of the domiciled community in India and it was resolved to make an appeal for funds in England. A Committee was soon appointed the representatives of which visited England and were able to secure support in influential quarters. Several retired Viceroys of India, notable Lords Lansdowne, Curzon and Minto, joined the Committee. The movement was vigorously supported by the newspapers. Subscriptions were raised, but not to the extent the promoters of the Fund had hoped. On the whole the response to the appeal for funds was fair, though the very high expectations formed by the supporters of the scheme were not realised. It was not wholly a case of veni, vidi, vici. The deputation returned from England last cold weather and made a tour of the whole of India. The response here too was not very liberal. The Committee finally appears to have come to the conclusion that it is only with the substantial aid of Government that the question of the education of the Europeans and Eurasians in the country can be fully and satisfactorily solved. These hopes are therefore all centred on Government and the members have both jointly and individually talked eloquently about the duties and responsibilities of Government, forgetting at the same time that so far Government has paid much more attention to and spent much more money on the education of the domiciled community than could be demanded with due regard to justice and fair play. They forget further that both in the question of their education and the provision of employment for them in the public service the Europeans and Eurasians of India have received a preferential and differential treatment. There is no cause whatever for complaint. Sir Harcourt explained in his speech that out of the total outlay of 62½ lakhs on the education of Europeans and Eurasians in India the Government of India or the Local Governments contributed annually Rs. 20½ lakhs. It would be difficult to conceive a more generous treatment. But our European and Eurasian friends are evidently not satisfied. The attitude assumed by them is such as cannot be encouraged consistently with a policy of justice and fair play which is what Government should adopt. The claim for specially favoured treatment is based on the ground that the people in whose behalf it is made are the kith and kin of those who are the supreme rulers in India. It was Lord Curzon who initiated the policy of heaping favours upon the Europeans and Eurasians and during the regime of Lord Minto it was fully kept up. Special favours have so far resulted in making the advocates of the Europeans and Eurasians in this country only more unreasonable in their demands and the Europeans and Eurasians themselves less self-reliant and self-helping. Special favours are fatal to the growth and development of initiative and self-reliance recipients and nations that do not learn self-help and self-reliance are bound ultimately to go to the wall.

The new Secretary of the Aligarh College.

27. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of 27th July 1912 :—

"While a discussion was going on in the Muslim Press as to who was best fitted for the office, the Trustees of the M. A.-O. College, Aligarh, have elected Nawab Muhammad Ishaq Khan as their Secretary in succession to Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk. Some people still contend that it would have been better if, in deference to public opinion, the date of election had been postponed. But an article by Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk shows that almost all the gentlemen whose names have been suggested in the papers as fit for the office were offered the honour, but declined to serve in that capacity. There was nothing left for it, therefore, but to request Nawab Haji Muhammad Ishaq Khan to become Secretary. The request was acceded to by the Nawab and he has been unanimously elected for the next three years. Let us hope he will carry on the traditions established by the late Sir Syed and Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk."

Corruption of Railway Clerks.

28. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 30th July 1912 :—

"A correspondent whose letter we publish in another column complains against the present tendency of accusing goods clerks in a body. No one can say that all clerks without exceptions are accused and indeed we are aware of several exceptions. But no railway man can deny the existence of corrupt practices. We lately quoted the opinion of the special commissioner of the Desi Beopar Mandal, Lahore, on this point. The special pleading on behalf of railway men induces us to reproduce the passage for the edification of those who may be disposed to belittle the extent of the evil :—

"'During my visits to Gujranwala, Hafizabad, Sangla, Lyallpur, Amritsar, Jullundur, Ludhiana, Ambala and Saharanpore for the collection of railway complaints I found that grain merchants in almost all the above stations give bribes to the railway clerks every time they have to send off or take delivery of their consignments. I asked the merchants whether they give bribery (sic) to railway clerks, if so, why. They all admitted that they do (?) so but they said that they can't do without it. He who does not pay is put to much trouble, so much so that those who come after him and put something in the pocket of the Babu get their work done very soon and go home earlier and those who do not pay have to wait for all day long and may not get their work done even up to evening.—Page 32, Report for 1911.'

"If the railway magnates and there satellites have any grievance they should first explain the above matter before they object to newspaper correspondents making a much milder complaint. The railway does not certainly enhance its own reputation by treating the complaint of such a representative body as the Desi Beopar Mandal with indifference. Yet the fact remains that the Report of the Mandal which was published in March last has remained unchallanged. The North-Western Railway is under Government management. It is, therefore, the duty of the Railway Board to enquire into the allegations made by the Mandal."

Jail administration in the Punjab.

29. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 23rd July 1912, publishes a communication headed " A picture of Jails in the Punjab." The writer reviews the report on the administration of jails in the Punjab for the year 1911. In the course of his remarks he complains that a Jail Superintendent, who is usually a Civil Surgeon, exercises unlimited powers; that there is no appeal from his orders; and that he can, if he so wills, punish a prisoner with 30 stripes. Not only are convicts entirely at his mercy, but he enjoys extensive powers over all jail officials also. He can suspend (even) a jailor, whereas he can inflict no punishment (with the exception of stopping allowances) on Hospital Assistants under him without the previous sanction of the higher authorities. To make matters worse, he is (generally) ignorant of jail regulations. Two years back the permanent Superintendent of the Multan Central Jail went on leave, and his locum tenens caused a commotion in the jail in the short period of two weeks. He punished 18 prisoners with 30 stripes each, and practised several other severities also, which led to one prisoner making his escape. After remarking that several other evil consequences also ensued, the writer suggests that only those persons should be appointed Superintendents who are well versed in jail regulations and know the real condition of the people and the country. Next he refers and takes exception to the invidious distinctions made in jails between European and native prisoners in the matter of diet, &c. Continuing, he observes that, as the number ot European prisoners, who are lodged in the Lahore Central Jail, does not usually exceed half a dozen, there is no reason why the services of a European Warder, who draws Rs. 100 and is given free quarters, should be employed to look after them, which work can satisfactorily be performed by a native constable. He makes the further suggestion that the prisoners in India also should be divided into different classes of misdemeanants as is the case in England.

The Pindi Das Defence Fund.

30. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 25th July 1912, publishes a letter from Pindi Das, Editor of the defunct India, Gujranwala. The writer says that it was in his absence (in jail) and against his wishes that Banka Dayal started a fund in his aid. He sent word to the latter from jail to close the fund, but this was not done, after which he desired the collections to be subscribed towards the Arabindo Defence Fund. He also once gave the Editor to understand that, as he (Banka Dyal), was the more in need of money of the two, he (Banka Dayal) could put the money to his own use. After remarking that Banka Dyal did not agree to this, he expresses the hope that the money will now be paid to him (Pindi Das), together with interest, to enable him to hand over the same to suitable men to be put to the best use.

Commenting on the above the paper says that the fund was started and closed at the instance of the relations and friends of Pindi Das. The collections amounted to Rs. 293-12-0 and were deposited in the bank, having subsequently been withdrawn to enable the Editor to pay a fine of Rs. 600 imposed on him. He wishes, however, to refund the money and has already paid the following amounts :—

| | Rs. | A. | P. |
|---|---|---|---|
| (1) In aid of the Arabindo Defence Fund ... | 100 | 2 | 0 |
| (2) To Pindi Das ... ... ... | 70 | 6 | 0 |
| (3) On account of printing charges ... ... | 22 | 6 | 0 |
| Total ... | 192 | 6 | 0 |

A sum of Rs. 100 is now due from him, and it is owing only to his straitened circumstances that he has not as yet paid the balance.

Land Acquisition in Delhi.

31. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 30th July 1912 :—

"Replying to Mr. McCallum Scott's question on this subject Mr. Montagu said: 'The owner, if dissatisfied with the amount of compensation offered to him by the revenue officer, can require the latter to refer the case for determination to the civil court, which will take evidence and hear counsel as in a regular civil suit.' Indians are said to be proverbially litigious. They need not be told that they have their remedy in a court of law. But the question is whether it is wise or prudent to good landowners to seek legal remedy and incur a deal of preventible expenditure. At the same time is it desirable that the Government should elect to contest suits rather than effect a reasonable compromise with landowners? For every case in which a landowner is in a position to spend money on protracted litigation there will be ten others in which sufferers will have no remedy. It is therefore necessary that the revenue officer should be instructed to take into consideration in arriving at his valuation every circumstance which is likely to be adduced by landowners in a court of law. His Excellency the Viceroy has hitherto treated the people of Delhi justly and even generously. In deference to their wishes His Excellency has abandoned the acquisition of buildings in the Civil Station. For the same reason His Excellency has abandoned the proposal of acquiring the environs of Delhi which are studded with gardens containing fruit-bearing trees. Revenue Officers of the Punjab Government have not been known to err on the side of leniency and the heckling of the Secretary of State in Parliament as to the cost of the new capital does not encourage them to be over liberal to landowners. This being so the Government of India should expressly lay down for the guidance of the Revenue Officers the circumstances which enter into codsideration in arriving at a fair valuation. We sincerely trust that the Government of India will reconsider the matter and issue fresh instructions on the subject to the officers concerned."

Eurasian regiments.

32. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 27th July 1912 :—

"We are opposed to the proposed formation of a regiment of Europeans and Eurasians on the ground that it would serve no useful purpose and would be an utter waste of money. The salaries proposed for the soldiers of this regiment, viz., Rs. 30 to Rs. 40 per mensem and everything—food, clothing, accommodation, fans, lights, &c., found—are extravagant. We hope that the Government of India will nip in the bud such a preposterous proposal. In these days when every one who has the least sense of responsibility is convinced that the expenditure on the army in India should be retrenched and when a Committee appointed by the Secretary of State is sitting at Simla to see how this retrenchment can be effected, it is absurd to put forward such a proposal. A Calcutta Anglo-Indian paper is so cocksure that the Government of India will order the formation of the regiment on the terms proposed that it has invited young men of the community to volunteer names. Of course several hundred young Eurasians will be forthcoming if they are given Rs. 30 to Rs. 40 per mensem with everything found. But we hope the Government of India in the interests of economy will put their foot down. There is no reason why Eurasians should not join the Indian branch of the army if they wish to adopt soldiering as a profession. It is absurd to demand that they should be treated like the European soldiers. A lot of money is already wasted on volunteering in this country and we do not think the volunteers can serve any useful purpose. As fighting men the volunteers are of little value."

The alleged Egyptian conspiracy.

1. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 31st July (received on the 7th August) 1912, has a paragraph headed "Fresh commotion in Egypt." Writing about the conspiracy reported to have been hatched in Egypt to kill the Khedive, his Prime Minister and Lord Kitchener, the paper says that, if these allegations are well-founded, no Muhammadan can have any sympathy with the seditious persons concerned. If, however, the Egyptian police are the counterpart of their Indian confrères, their evidence alone cannot be regarded as sufficient proof of the alleged offence. And even if the offence is brought home to the culprits, all the Muhammadans of Egypt cannot be blamed for the doings of some mad men among them. Besides, the Khedive is dearly loved by his subjects, and it is difficult to see why they should conspire to murder him in their resentment at the harsh policy of Lord Kitchener. No Arms Act is in force in Egypt, and the possession of a pistol by some of the alleged conspirators cannot, therefore, be considered as legal proof (of guilt).

The late Mikado.

2. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), dated the 3rd August 1912 :—

* * * * * * * *

"A Japanese historian has traced the origin of the Japanese royal families to some descendants of Raghu, who, in the dim distance of Time's perspective, crossed the Himalayas to China with a large following and carried their triumphant arms to Japan through Korea Raghu, as all readers of Sanskrit know, was the name of famous King of the Solar dynasty among whose progeny was Raja Ram Chandra, and the Sun is still the royal emblem of Japan as it was of the Suryavansiya Kings of India. Whether this is a fact on which any relations of affinity can be established between the two countries is more than we can say. But if ever a modern monarch approached the virtues of a race which produced a Sri Ram Chandra, it was Emperor Mutsuhito, whose death his loving subjects are mourning with the passionate intensity of the citizens of Ajodhya when Sri Ram Chandra departed from this world."

* * * * * * * *

The late Mr. Hume.

3. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 6th August 1912 :—

* * * * * * * *

"Though an official and a Mutiny veteran he was known to the millions of Indians only as the originator of the sentiment of Indian nationality. To him did the idea occur first of bringing together on a common platform representatives of the different provinces to discuss subjects of common 'social' welfare as he had originally conceived. Fancy this ex-Secretary to the Government of India gathering up the scattered forces of Indians and promoting a national movement among them at a time when the echoes of the Ilbert Bill controversy had hardly died in the Himalayan fastness. As a veteran official Mr. Hume had analysed the causes of Indian helplessness; and when he saw the collapse of an excellent measure brought forward by a most benevolent Viceroy, he felt no hesitation to come forward to show the way of unity and nationality to a people contemptuously referred to as an agglomeration of races and creeds and sects.

* * * * * * * *

"He had innumerable difficulties to contend against. The sunshine of Viceregal sympathy was not to last long in the cloudy atmosphere of Simla. Indeed, the Services and their satellites soon ranged themselves against his grand idea of nation-building, but he struggled and urged the people on and on through all the varying fortunes from the active sympathy of Lord Dufferin and Lord Connemara to the professed neutrality of Lord Lansdowne. When he retired from active work he watched from a distance the growing volume of opposition in the days of Elgin and Curzon. But he happily lived to see Lord Morley formally recognise the good work done by his pet organisation.

* * * * * * * *

"Mr. Hume was something of a prophet. He was gifted with a keen political vision. He knew the right method and he knew the pitfalls as well. As an instance in point may be mentioned the question of the Congress constitution. This was taken up so far back as 1886. In the very next year Mr. Hume interfered and prevailed upon the Congress to abandon the idea for a time. He knew more than most others that a hard and fast code of rules in the period of its growth would be its doom. Thus it was that the constitution remained practically undefined till 1900 when the Congress was held in Lahore. But at this session the attempt at definition created the split which Mr. Hume had always apprehended. It is now matter of common knowledge that as a consequence both Bengal and the Punjab became dissatisfied with those who persisted in the new policy. Attempts were made again in 1903 and 1904 to do something but in vain. At last in 1906 a committee met at Bombay and adopted certain rules. But before they could be submitted to the Congress came the Surat split. To this day the code of rules dreaded by Mr. Hume has remained the apple of discord between different schools of thought. India can never be sufficiently grateful to the late Mr. Hume for his lasting services."

(b)—Home.

Transported political prisoners.

4. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 9th August 1912 :—

"The remarkable communiqué from the Goverernment of India that we published yesterday shows that even the most secret things can come to light. A prisoner transported to the Andamans is shut out from the public view. Nothing can be known about him except what the authorities choose to let his people or the public know. Still in this particular instance there can be no question that independent information reached the Bengalee of certain facts connected with the political prisoners in the Andamans. One of them committed suiside. This was communicated by some one to the Bengalee and was afterwards borne out by the Governor of the Settlement. Detailed accounts were published as to the harsh treatment of the prisoners and the excessively difficult labour they had to perform. Several of these allegations are now officially denied. Of course the denial must be accepted but it must be remembered at the same time that what we really have before us are two statements, the first presumably of the prisoners and the second of the officials concerned. There was no independent inquiry and no one was deputed from India to record the statements of the prisoners and the officials. The enquiry that the Government of India made must have been made from the officials and their version has now been published. But it cannot be said that it is quite convincing. It is stated, for example, that Indu Bhushan Roy, the prisoner who committed suiside, arrived in the Andamans in the end of 1909 and his conduct there was on the whole good. In 1910 he wrote a letter which found its way into the Press in which he stated that he was well, his work was easy and he was kindly treated by the jail authorities. Is there anything to be astonished at in this letter? Every letter sent out is carefully read by the jail authorities and they have absolute authority to send or suppress any letter. Had Indo Bhushan Roy complained that he was being ill-treated would his letter have been forwarded or found its way to the Press? The wonder is how the complaints found their way to a newspaper in spite of the rigorous censorship exercised over all communications going out from a place so isolated as the Andamans. True or untrue these complaints are not fabrications or mere inventions. How they leaked out must remain a mystery. The allegation that Indu Bhushan was ill-treated was made by another prisoner, Hoti Lal, who adhered to it although he was warned and afterwards punished for it. The Government have done well in publishing a contradiction, but people will not cease to wonder how anything that happened at Port Blair could have come to the knowlege of the public."

Lord Crewe on excise policy.

5. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 8th August 1912 :—

"Those who have been watching the progress of excise revenue in India for some years past, are convinced that the drink habit is spreading in the country in alarming proportions both among the well-to-do and the poorer classes. It is equally clear that the Government do not see anything very alarming in the situation; and although strong criticisms have been made on the present excise policy in the various Legislative Councils, the Government have expressed their desire to stick to the present policy. The fact is that, judged from European standards, as our rulers invariably do, drunkenness in India is certainly not alarming. Our rulers frequently tell us that comparisons with European society and European standards are unjustifiable. But we have several times pointed out how, when it suits their own purpose, the rulers do compare Indian standards with European standards. The excise policy is one of this nature and though they may deny it, it is impossible to say that an average Englishman in India, moving amidst the people and knowing their sobriety, gets the impression that the agitation against excise policy is a fictitious one. He comes to this decision by a mental comparsion of the state in England with the state in India. Lord Crewe, we are inclined to think, has done the same; and he has therefore received the deputation that waited on him on July 18, in no reforming spirit.

"* * * * * * In a previous article we pointed out how in Punjab and Madras the excise revenue between 1900 and 1912 had increased by 120 per cent.; in Bombay it increased by 90 per cent; in the Central Provinces by 80 per cent.; in the United Provinces by 51 per cent., and so on. During the last quinquennium, the Indian excise revenue increased from £6,389,627 to £7,762,000. To a question put in the House of Commons recently, Mr. Montagu quoted the following figures as the gross excise revenue of India :—

| | | Rs. |
|---|---|---|
| 1874-75 | ... ... ... ... | 2,34,72,740 |
| 1884-85 | ... ... ... ... | 4,01,18,670 |
| 1894-95 | ... ... ... ... | 5,52,76,760 |
| 1904-05 | ... ... ... ... | 8,03,01,370 |
| 1908-09 | ... ... ... ... | 9,58,44,410 |
| 1909-10 | ... ... ... ... | 9,80,67,800 |
| 1910-11 | ... ... ... ... | 10,54,54,710 |
| 1911-12 | (Revised Estimate) | 11,47,03,000 |
| 1912-13 | (Budget Estimate) | 11,86,18,000 |

"The one explanation that the officials give to these rapid rises is that the people are becoming more prosperous and can afford to pay for more and costly drink. But the question is why in spite of the so-called prosperity theory of drink famines recur frequently and why the poorer classes are unable to resist plague and malaria even as the richer classes. Are we to suppose that when the ignorant people of India earn more money, they forget to eat well and live well but spend more on taverns? If so, is that situation to be viewed with perfect equanimity by the Government? Apparently not. But why has Lord Crewe repeated the argument of prosperity by way of explaining and also justifying the heavy increase of revenue?"

Lord Crewe and self-government for India.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 1st August 1912, has an article headed "The future of India." The paper says that, although the recent unrest in India was due chiefly to the Partition of Bengal, it was also partly ascribable to the desire of Indians to receive a larger share in the administration of the country. This desire on their part has been steadily gaining in intensity and solidity, and it is but natural that the same should (one day) be fully realised. Lords Crewe and Hardinge felt it necessary to accede to the legitimate demands of the people in order to (re-)establish peace and order in the land. The Government of India's despatch of August last laid the foundation of self-government in India; while the announcement by the King Emperor himself of the administrative changes mentioned therein led Indians to hope that the Colonial form of self-government might one day fall to the lot of their country also But now when peace has been restored in the land by the revocation of the Partition, the removal of the Government of India's seat to Delhi, and through the inborn loyalty and traditional silence of Muhammadans, which have always been treated with indifference, Lord Crewe has revived that (invidious) distinction between whites and blacks which was removed by three British Sovereigns and scores of statesmen after a great deal of difficulty; and has felt it necessary to voice the offensive and short-sighted idea that Indians, not being a white people, can never acquire the fitness to govern themselves. Next the paper publishes a translation of His Lordship's recent speech in the Upper Chamber about the impossibility of self-government for this country.

Continuing in its issue, dated the 2nd August 1912, it says that Lord Crewe's speech is a collection of short-sighted, false and contradictory statements. The present British Ministers consist of childish persons, who are ignorant even of the A B C of Statesmanship. The Foreign Minister is so short-sighted and self-willed that he has been turning a deaf ear to the cries of His Majesty's ten crore Muslim subjects for help to their co-religionists in Tripoli and Persia. As regards the head of the India Office, he has trampled on the political expectations of 350 millions of Indians by making the declaration that, as Indians are blacks, they cannot get self-government to the end of time. The political mistake made by him cannot be deplored too much:

had he been a statesman he would have continued throwing to Indians the sop that they would assuredly be granted self-government as soon as they were fit for it. As it is, he has inflicted a mortal wound on them by alleging self-government to be beyond their reach, while he has sprinkled salt into the wound by saying, "as you are blacks, while we are whites, you are not fit for self-government." He bas also mixed some chillies in the salt by making the remark that God has dowered Indians with extraordinary intelligence and wonderful abilities, which means that, although they possess these qualifications, still as they cannot—unlike the Boers and French, who have, in spite of their not being Britons, been made self-governing in South Africa and Canada respectively—boast of a white skin they cannot be considered a component part of the Empire. The Dutch rebel against and fight with England, shed rivers of English blood in the Transvaal, and bear no comparison with the English in the matter of intelligence, but they receive self-government, nevertheless. Why? Because they have white complexions. Indians are loyal and devoted subjects, have sacrificed their lives to maintain British superiority in Asia, and possess remarkable qualities of intellect. They cannot, however, get self-government to the end of time. Why? Because they are not whites and Europeans. This being so, can Lord Crewe honestly believe that they can love, and be loyal to, England for ever? He has done his utmost to snap asunder the tie which binds together India and England.

Mr. Montagu's Budget Speech.

7. The following is from the Panjalee (Lahore), dated the 3rd August 1912 :—

"The Indian Budget was presented to the House of Commons on the 30th ultimo. As usual a lengthy speech was made by the Under-Secretary of State reviewing the principal events. From the fairly full summary of the speech that has been received it appears that Mr. Montagu has maintained his ground in spite of his Chief's reference to him in the Lords on the occasion of the third reading of the Government of India Bill. The inference is irresistible that while Lord Crewe allowed himself to be influenced by the atmosphere of the Upper House, his lieutenant in the Lower House could not go against the traditions of his party. Although in his speech there are few points which are new in any sense, yet Mr. Montagu has managed to give an attractive setting to his facts. He has endeavoured to re-assure the Indian public of the continuance of the Radical policy in this country. At the very commencement, after referring to his own unwillingness to risk the anger of critics he gives expression to his belief "that there is a growing spirit of nationality in India, the direct product of British rule." This must be a rude shock to Anglo-Indian administrators belonging to the Strachey school who deny that there can be, not to say that there is, an Indian nationality. His reference to the growing caste of educated Indians who see in the King Emperor the representative of national unity has been conceived in the happiest vein and is in accord with the highest teachings of British Liberalism.

"* * * * * We are not very much encouraged by Mr. Montagu's prospect of increasing schools by 75 per cent., and scholars by 100 per cent., especially in the absence of all reference to the period with which this improvement is desired to be effected. Another ten years may elapse before some Local Goverements are convinced that the need for extending education is really great and pressing. Until the day on which the announcement about the extension of Primary education was made at the Durbar the Punjab Government was wedded to the policy of quality in preference to quantity. Even now it is disposed to congratulate itself on the past results rather than endeavour to grapple with the problem of reducing the extent of illiteracy in the province. Unless the Government of India fixes a period within which to reach the results now anticipated, we have no reason to feel elated at the proposed expansion of the educational programme. Mr. Montagu also refers to the proposed residential system of Indian Universities and to the Technological Institute at Cawnpore. He says as to the future of the educational policy in general:—'The Government might be proud of their record, and if their educational ideals were realised they would have laid the foundation of the national system of education by a net-work of really valuable Schools, Colleges and Universities so that Indian students would be able to qualify themselves in India for the highest positions in every walk of life.' This is an interesting and important statement. Speaking from his place in Parliament the Under-Secretary of State tells us that educational institutions should be nationalised and that the training given to the students in such institutions ought to be high enough to qualify them to the highest positions. We hope that this is an earnest of what the Radical Government desires the Public Service Commission to do. In conclusion we have to congratulate Mr. Montagu on the excellent spirit that runs throughout the speech, albeit in purely official matters he is constrained to take a view less liberal than we desire him to do. His concluding warning that the British Government cannot embark on a policy of reaction even if they want and that it will never do to rely on out of date advice are bound to strengthen the hopes of Indians which Lord Crewe tried to weaken. He echoed Lord Courtney's sentiments by affirming that nobody can possibly foretell what will be the eventual characteristic of the population of India."

The Royal Commission on the Civil Services of India.

8. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 3rd August 1912 :—

* * * * * * *

"As regards the personnel of the Commission there will be a widespread feeling of disappointment throughout India. The only representative of advanced Indian thought is Mr. Gokhale. Mr. Chaubal, Member of the Bombay Executive Council, is practically unknown outside the profession to which he belonged and has taken no part in public affairs. The appointment of Sir Valentine Chirol is absolutely inexplicable. He is no friend of Indian aspirations and holds educated Indians in open contempt. It is for the Muhammadans to say whether they are satisfied with the appointment of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim, though, to judge from his public utterances, he seems to be a man of liberal ideas. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald is a staunch friend of India and his appointment will meet with general approval. Out of twelve members only three are Indians. Mr. Sly is a Commissioner in Berar and this is the first time that we hear his name. Mr. Madge is of course the representative of the domiciled community. The general expectation was that the Commission would be a larger and more representative body and would command public confidence. That expectation has not been fulfilled."

The Public Service Commission.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated the 3rd August 1912 :—

"In his Budget speech Mr. Montagu has announced the appointment of a Royal Commission on the Indian Public Services. Three points have been selected for inquiry and report. These are (i) the methods of recruitment and system of training and probation; (ii) the conditions of service in regard to salary, leave and pension; and (iii) the existing limitations to the employment of non-Europeans and the existing system of the division of the services into Imperial and Provincial. The scope of the inquiry is wide enough. It should comprise inquiry into the present practice of permitting Australians and Africanders to enter Indian Civil Service. There ought to be no open door to all comers in India when we do not enjoy similar rights in the colonies. The composition of the Commission should be deemed fairly satisfactory. We note that it is arranged to co-opt two members in each province—a suggestion which we made a fortnight ago—and we hope that one of the two will be Indians. The President's Unionist predilections and the influence of Sir Valentine Chirol are factors which cannot be ignored when we form our expectations of the Commission. But we recognise the effort of the Home Government to elicit the views of all the different authorities. In particular the views of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, the leader of the Labour Party, and Mr. Laurens Fisher, the Oxford Don, should go some way to influence the views of the majority. However, two things are incomprehensible—the over representation of Bombay and the attempt to separate the interests of the Eurasians and Anglo-Indians from the rest of the Indian communities. As regards the first, we doubt the wisdom of taking two men, Messrs. Sly and Chaubal, from the Western Presidency. There are certainly men better qualified than these to represent the interest now entrusted to them. As regards the second, while every European member represents the domiciled community, we certainly fail to see the logic of giving special representation to this microscopic community a representation equal to that of the Muhammadans who number over seventy millions. They should throw in their lot finally either with Europeans or with Indians. There can be no half way house in such matters. However, the appointments are useful only to examine questions from all points of view. In making recommendations the opinions of the members should be weighted according to the numerical strength and importance of the communities they represent. For instance, if Mr. Madge is given one vote, Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim should have 30 votes and so the rest of the members also in proportion to the population they represent. It is unjust to permit Mr. Madge to disturb the balance of opinion by the superfluous weight of his reflected opinion."

Government servants and politics.

10. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 7th August 1912 :—

"It is stated in a local paper that the Hon'ble Mr. Justice H. A. B. Rattigan, Judge, Punjab Chief Court, has accepted the office of President of the newly-formed Anglo-Indian Association in the Punjab. The association is a political body formed with the object of promoting the political and general advancement of the members of the domiciled community and we doubt if Government servants can become its members and hold office without infringing the standing orders of Government. The Anglo-Indian Association is designed to be to Europeans and Eurasians what the Moslem League is to the Muhammadans. We are anxious to bring this matter to the notice of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in the hope that it will be decided whether or not Government servants can join movements such as the Anglo-Indian Assoication. The case of the President will be quoted as a precedent and it will be argued that when a Judge of the Chief Court can be its President there is no objection to other employés of Government becoming its members."

Ultimate responsibility for raids and dacoities.

11. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 6th August 1912 :—

"In the House of Commons on the 16th ultimo Sir Alfred Cripps moved to reduce the Home Secretary's salary by £500, being dissatisfied with the view which Mr. McKenna took of his duty in cases of riot and disorder.

"* * * * We cannot say if Indian members of the Provincial or Supreme Legislative Council are prepared to move for a reduction of anybody's salary on the ground that raids and dacoities in the Punjab and Frontier Provinces have not been prevented. But it is certainly open to them to ask the Supreme Government to explain why adequate measures have not been adopted to put a stop to these recurring outrages on the Hindu population. The Hon'ble Mr. S. Sinha did great service in the past in this connection and we trust he will not hesitate to call attention to it now."

IV.—Kine-killing.

Cow-killing in India.

12. The Kam Dhenu (Lahore), of the 1st August 1912, publishes a communication headed "Cruelty for the sake of the hide." The writer—(Sardarni) Sada Kaur, Rasulpur, Bharaich (district), Oudh—refers to the cruelties practised on oxen in Laghar-khanas, before killing them, with a view to thickening their hides. This state of affairs is due, she says, to Hindus having taken to the use of leather in articles to a very much larger extent ; and so, as barren cows are generally slaughtered for the sake only of their hides, the only way to save them from the knife is for both Hindus and Muhammadans to use less leather and employ such cows for ploughing land, carrying burdens, and working wells. She concludes by appealing to her brothers (men), to devote their all to saving sterile cows from cruelty and to vow to put them to the above uses.

Commenting on the above the Editor praises the writer for her devotion to the cause of cow-protection and expresses his willingness to publish every communication received from her, as also to reprint her letters in the form of tracts and to do everything possible to help forward her work.

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Hindu-Muhammadan relations.

13. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th August 1912, reprints from the Arorbans Gazette a report of the speech, made by the Editor on the 28th ultimo at the anniversary celebrations of the Minerva Lodge, Amritsar, on "The future of the relation between Hindus and Muhammadans." The speaker urged the two communities to make up their differences, saying in the course of his speech that they should make every effort to unite, in order to obtain self-government. He deprecated the conduct of the press in often following a course likely to affect injuriously the question of Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

Commenting on the speech the Arorbans Gazette (Amritsar), of the 1st August 1912, observes that, according to Maulvi Zafar Ali, Islam does not inculcate hatred of non-Muslims, and the allegation that Muhammadan kings subjected Hindus to religious persecution is, according to the Maulvi, untrue ; there would not be 22 crores of Hindus in India to-day, if the story were true. There is, however, absolutely no truth in the Maulvi's statement. Mahmud of Ghazni carried away lakhs of Hindus and sold them (into slavery) at Rs. 2 each, and he not only insulted but even destroyed Hindu temples and (the images of) Hindu gods. Again Jaziya was imposed on Hindus under the Mughal (rule) and it is owing to such acts of oppression that 60 millions of Mussalmans are now to be seen in this country; otherwise Islam is not such a true religion, as compared with the Vedic faith, that "Hindus would have abjured their religion, which is based on the principle 'Not killing is the best of faith,' to embrace one, which sacrifices (animals) in the name of God, for the sake of the stomach." The speaker also remarked that the very fact of Muhammadans being followers of Islam constituted a guarantee of their according Hindus a just treatment. But is it just, that Muslim butchers should sell halal meat without let or hindrance, but that a hue and cry should be raised over Sikhs selling jhatka flesh? If this is a specimen of Islamic justice, "May God save us from" that justice! As to the statement that Muhammadans treat non-Muslim places of worship with feelings of respect, Christian Churches in Constantinople were converted into mosques, while Mahmud of Ghazni played havoc with the Hindu temples of Somnath, &c. Again, the mosque which Aurangzeb built in the compound of the Vishwanath temple at Benares still bears testimony to Islamic oppression. Nor is this all; Muhammadans cut off the noses and ears of Buddhist statues in the Ellora and Ajanta Caves, and now the Amir of Kabul has built himself a palace on (? the site of) Chashma-i-Guru Nanak, a Hindu and Sikh place of pilgrimage.

Lala Har Dayal and Vedas.

14. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), dated the 2nd August 1912 :—

"We have but to mention the name of Lala Har Dayal, M.A., and every Arya Samajist and Hindu knows at once what a rare patriot from amongst them and what a peerless scholar to boot we are going to speak of. He is a young man of unquestioned erudition and a patriot of the first water from the Dayanandi point of view. When he was last in Lahore that is, before he betook himself to the Californian fastnesses to practise a mysterious sort of yoga, he was doted upon by Arya young men as the ideal Rishi of the twentieth century, the veriest paragon of Aryan culture, and was idolised by them with the reverence and fervour of a Radha Kishan for a Dayanand. Aye, several students who were studying for their degree examinations were said to have given up the idea of graduating and taken to the elevating company and tutelage of Swami Har Dayal, M.A. We are not aware as to what he then thought of the Vedas, for as far as we know, he never had occasion to express himself on the subject. But now that he has made his appraisement of those much-talked-of but little understood books, we hope his estimate will be read by young men of the D. A.-V. College and the Brahmcharis of the Gurukula, Kangri, with both interest and profit. Says Swami Har Dayal in the July 1912 number of the Modern Review :—

"Indian Pundits and graduates seem to suffer from a kind of mania for what is effete and antiquated. Thus an institution, established by progressive men, aims at leading our youth through Sanskrit grammar to the Vedas via the Six Darshanas! What a false move in the quest for wisdom! It is if as a caravan should travel across the desert to the shores of the Dead Sea in the search of fresh water! Young men of India! look not for wisdom in the musty parchments of your metaphysical treatises. There is nothing but an endless round of verbal jugglery there. (Italics ours).

"The situation has been so characteristically hit off by Lala Har Dayal that even the freshly-shaved Brahmchari who has gone but a few lessons of the Ashtadhyai can fully appreciate it. We hope that the compliment paid in these pithy remarks to the genuinely patriotic endeavour of the Dayanand College and the Gurukula authorities will also be enjoyed by them and that they will yet pause and see if they cannot with advantage revise the programme on which they are precipitating the youth of Arya Varta to an undeserved intellectual grave. Has any Arya Samajist produced a better translation or commentary of the Vedas than some of the European servants have? Do they ever hope to prepare them before doomsday? Even if they think the occasional mention and an unserviceable smattering of these 'musty parchments' so very indispensable to the spread of their politico-religious propaganda, pray why not put the English commentaries into the hands of their young men and save them 'an endless round of verbal jugglery'? By so doing they would be enabling their Brahmcharis to devote proportionately more time to the compilation in Arya Bhasha of an account of the French Revolution which may be free from the defects and shortcomings with which the life of Napoleon Bonaparte, published by Lala Munshi Ram, bristles.

"But Swami Har Dayal's view of the study of the Upanishads is by no means less instructive. He looks upon it as the sheerest waste of time and moral energy of the Indian youth and says :—

"I know of a very learned graduate who took a vow of renunciation and then spent three years in the Himalayas in the study of the Upanishads, as if all the wisdom of the world were contained in them! And he thought he had received full enlightenment from this course and had become a wise man fit to guide others to Brahman.

"Concluding Swami Har Dayal, M.A., exhorts Arya young men in the following unequivocal words :—

"Young men of India, . . . . . do not skulk in your corner of Bharatavarsha munching stale bread baked by your great-grand-parents and swearing from false pride that it is delicious. . . . . You are not living in the tenth century before Christ. You don't travel in village-carts (gaddas). You do not read manuscript rolls. Then why be so backward in your studies as to move round and round the old track discovered by your sages long ago ? They were wise men at that time, but we have other wise men now for our age. No generation has a monopoly of wisdom. Why should you prepare yourself for the future by looking back to very remote past ! (Italics ours).

"And yet what our Munshi Rams and Diwan Chands take the greatest pride in is the "monopoly of wisdom" which the mythical authors of the Vedas possessed to the exclusion of the whole mankind and utilized to their hearts' content in the manufacture of their precious productions which, moreover, they seem to have got patented, because, for sooth, we see that a modern edition of the Yajur Veda by Swami Dharmapal has been unanimously dubbed as spurious and arraignable.

Salvation Army and prisoners.

15. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated the 3rd August 1912 :—

"Whatever may be the apprehensions of some people I welcome the scheme of the Salvation Army for reclaiming prisoners. There is no half-measure in 'salvation.' It is a complete blessing, both on earth and a prospective one in heaven. May be that neither the Hindus nor Muhammadans of the Punjab can organise a scheme of similar reclamation to prevent their co-religionist convicts from having to embrace another faith. The only question is whether it is fair and decent to protest against the noble work of the Salvation Army simply because while reclaiming prisoners to civil life they also convert them to Christianity. The Government have made it plain that no one will be compelled to go to the Salvation Settlement. The prison gates are kept open to receive them, if they wish to come back ! But we may rely on human nature that it will prefer Christianism and confort to jail life. It is unfair to ask the Salvation Army not to convert. Those who are very keen about religion should start similar works of reclamation."

The jhatka-halal question.

16. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 30th July 1912, has a note headed "An easy solution of the jhatka question." It says that this solution consists in ordering shops for the sale of both jhatka and halal meat to be located outside towns.

The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 28th July (received on the 7th August) 1912, publishes an article headed "Opposition to jhatka is an improper thing." It says that the object of those Muhammadans who seem determined to stop (the sale of) jhatka meat is simply to deprive Sikhs and Hindus of their religious liberty. The followers of Islam do not object to, or raise disturbances over, the holding of nautches, which also are condemned by the Muhammadan Law. There also exist liquor shops in Hoshiarpur, Jhelum, Batala, &c., but Musalmans have never petitioned Government to close these. Nor is this all ; Muslim Khansamas in the employ of Europeans cook not only game killed by their masters, but also pig's flesh, but they are not outcasted by those who obey the Quran. It is merely a blind on the part of Muhammadans to speak of their religious laws (in connection with jhatka meat) ; their conduct is meant only to deprive Sikhs of their religious freedom and to keep them in subjection even though both are under British rule. Their efforts are being crowned with success through some (Government) Officers, whom they manage to mislead. It would not, therefore, be a matter for surprise, if the results proved highly deplorable. Continuing, the paper states that the prohibition to sell jhatka meat is regarded as a gross insult and menace to their religious liberty not only by Sikhs but also by Rajputs,—an important part of the British Army in India,—and it quotes an extract from the Rajput Gazette in support of its assertion. The editor enquires, therefore, whether Government will not lay its Sikh and Rajput subjects under obligation by making a suitable declaration in regard to a matter (the jhatka question) which does not in any way offend the feelings of Muhammadans or of any other community.

Elsewhere the paper says that Muhammadans justify their opposition to jhatka meat on the ground that the use of that flesh is prohibited by their religion. But Shamas-ul-Ulama Shibli N'umani writes in his Travels in Turkey, Syria and Egypt (page 16) that, according to a certain Muhammadan Imam, it is lawful to eat the flesh of an animal killed in any way. Musalmans should not, therefore, oppose the use of jhatka meat ; such opposition on their part being wholly improper and unjust.

Racial feelings in the Punjab.

17. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 6th August 1912 :—

"The prevalence of racial feeling is really the bane of this province. It is a menace to its well ordered progress. It is a source of endless puzzle to the well meaning administrator. It is also the despair of the Indian nationlist. How to get over this racial animosity is the great problem that confronts both the Government and the people. Some of its roots are no doubt deep-seated, but others are not so. Why not pluck out the latter before they stick fast to the soil ? The tradition of antagonism is no doubt stronger than elsewhere in the land of five rivers, which has for a thousand years and more been the theatre of conflict between the aggressive hordes of Islam and the defensive forces of Hinduism and later on of Sikhism. Tradition may yet take time to forget, but why accentuate that tradition by creating new sources of friction ? One such cause is the grant of the system of separate electorates which now prevails in some twelve municipalities of the province. This system, as has been recognised by the Lieutenant-Governor in his review of the municipal administration, has been responsible for the election of men of extreme views to municipal committees and consequently their ascendency in local politics. The result is constant friction and consequent acerbity of racial feeling. A stranger coming over to the Punjab would be astonished at the extent to which racial capital is made of such simple questions as the opening of a jhatka shop. There are jhatka shops in other provinces also, but nowhere accept here are they objected to by the Muhammadans, and nowhere else have the authorities to pass anxious time in devising means for the peaceful solution of such silly questions. We are aware that the separate electorate system was introduced in this province to prevent frictions in the working of local self-government. But the remedy has proved worse than the disease. It is time, therefore, to knock the system on the head and restore the normal conditions. Deficiencies in the representation of communities may be supplied by nomination. Certainly Muhammadans in the Punjab are strong enough to do without it."

A complaint.

18. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 1st August 1912, publishes a communication headed "Alas" ! The writer—one Hafiz-ud-din, of Lahore—condemns Muhammadans' indifference to Europeans entering the compound of the Juma Mosque, Delhi, with their shoes on, and walking in front of people engaged in prayers. He also expresses surprise at the rule permitting Europeans to go shod over the compound, and remarks that it is difficult to divine the reasons on which a distinction has been made between the compound and the roofed parts of the mosque. The members of the Managing Committee should have raised an outcry over the rule and told the authorities (concerned) that it was highly offensive for Muhammadans that the place where they prostrate themselves before God should be walked over by others in shoes. The Committee should lose no time in taking the necessary steps to have the offensive rule in question amended.

VI.—Legislation.

A Bill to prevent the importation of European women of ill-fame into India.

19. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 31st (received on the 7th August) 1912, publishes a note headed "Immoral women of Europe (Vilayat)." After deploring the increase of prostitution in India and the influx into the country of European and Japanese women of ill-fame, the paper approves of the Bill which the Hon'ble Mr. Madge is about to introduce in the Viceregal Council to remedy the latter evil. Next it asks whether Indians do not feel the necessity of a similar measure for preventing native women from adopting a prostitute's profession. Mr. Madge is of opinion that an increase in the number of European women of ill-fame in India is likely to deal an irreparable blow to British prestige and superiority in the country. It is a matter for surprise that Indians should have failed to look at the question (of prostitution in India) from such a point of view.

VII.—General Administration.

(b)—Police.

The Punjab Hindus and the Police service.

20. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 3rd August 1912 :—

"In commenting upon the prevalence of crimes against women in the Punjab, the Modern Review recently said that it would be worth knowing, if possible, to what communities or sects the majority of the offenders belonged and whether the majority of policemen belonged to those communities or sects. We are not in a position just now to give detailed statistics, but the fact is undeniable that the overwhelming majority of the convict population as well as of policemen are Muhammadans by religion. One reason of this numerical majority is no doubt the superiority in numbers of the Muhammadans in the total population of the province. But this does not satisfactorily explain the situation, for the proportion of Muhammadan convicts is much higher than their proportion in the total population. Nor is the argument that a good many of these convicts come from the North-West Frontier Province an adequate explanation, for the disparity in numbers remains even after making due allowance for this fact. In our opinion, the reason for this predilection to crime is to be found in the ignorance and backwardness of the mass of the Muhammadan population of the province. A general diffusion of the rudiments of knowledge among them is one fruitful remedy but unfortunately the most distinguished representative of the Punjab Muslim League has been against such diffusion. There are, it is true, other members in the League holding more liberal views, but it cannot be said that they have given any practical proof of their views. Coming to the constitution of the police force, we find ourselves on much stronger ground as to details. The facts were well stated in the memorial submitted by the Punjab Hindu Sabha to Lord Minto in June 1909.

"In reply, the Government of India took exception to the figures of the Deputy Superintendents stated in the memorial to be employed in the Department on the ground that they included the figures for the North-West Frontier Province and British Beluchistan. But this was, at any rate immaterial, for the figures included the total number of Indian Deputy Superintendents employed in the three provinces, and so the standard of comparison was not unfair. In the lower ranks of the Punjab Police Force, the Government reply said that the cause of the Muhammadan preponderance over Sikhs and Hindus was to be found not in the policy of the Government but rather in the greater readiness of the Punjab Muhammadans to adopt a military or a quasi-military calling. The Government further said that in an armed and disciplined body of men like the police, it is important that the relative distribution of the different classes in the lower ranks should be approximately reproduced in the higher, and that the composition of the force as a whole could not be left entirely out of consideration in filling the higher grades above that of constable. As regards the composition of the force, the Government said that on 1st January 1909, there were in the Punjab 15,529 constables, of whom 65 per cent. were Muhammadans, 28 per cent. Hindus and 7 per cent. Sikhs, and the Government of India's contention was that the Hindus were not proved to be losers, if these ratios were adopted as the standard of distribution of appointment.

"But have these ratios been followed in making subsequent appointments to the higher ranks of the Police? At present, there are in a total list of 30 Deputy Superintendents of Police for the Punjab, Frontier Province and British Beluchistan, no less than 16 Muhammadan Deputy Superintendents as against 2 Hindu and 3 Sikh officers of that rank. Taking the figures for the Punjab proper, we find that there are no less than 12 Muhammadan Deputy Superintendents as against one Hindu and three Sikh officers. It is clear, therefore, that the Hindus have got far less than their proper share in appointments to the higher grades of the Police service. Nay, we are definitely of opinion that the overwhelming preponderance of Muhammadan officers in the Police service acts as a check or discouragement on the sturdy Hindu or Sikh Jats, who are always ready to follow a military or quasi-military calling. In fact, the question requires careful looking into. How is it that the Hindu and Sikh Jats, who are ever hankering after a military and quasi-military career, are found in such small proportion in the Police service? The desire to be officered by their co-religonists is, as the Government of India observes, natural in a force composed as the police is and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the comparative paucity of Hindu and Sikh officers affects the admission of Hindu and Sikh Jats to the Police service. We trust that the Government will carefully consider the question and at least ensure that a just ratio is maintained in the distribution of higher appointments in the service. As the memorial of the Hindu Sabha said, Muhammadans have no monopoly of the qualities which go to make honest and efficient police officers and it is certainly incumbent on the Government to see that, subject to the primary condition of fitness, the legitimate claims of any community is not left out of consideration."

21. The Watan (Lahore), of the 2nd August 1912, has a letter headed "The Muslim University and the expression of public opinion." The writer—(the Hon'ble Captain) Malik Mubaraz Khan—says that Government's decision limiting the scope of the above University requires careful consideration from the entire (Muhammadan) community. They should hold meetings in all provincial capitals, and the opinion come to at them should be regarded as that of the community. The local Muslim League or the Anjuman-i-Himayat-i-Islam should be moved to convene such a meeting at Lahore.

The Muslim University.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 5th August 1912, publishes an article headed "The proposed Muslim University and the question of affiliation." It reprints the letter contributed by the Nawab Vicar-ul-Mulk to the Aligarh (Institute) Gazette on the subject of the scope of the proposed Muhammadan University. Commenting on it, the paper says that the leaders of the (Muslim) community should respectfully represent to Government, that a University without the powers of affiliation cannot meet their requirements. Should, however, Government be unable to grant their prayer, they should abandon the idea of establishing the University in comtemplation, giving a part of the funds collected to the Aligarh College and utilising the balance for awarding scholarships for education abroad.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 31st July 1912, has an article headed "Lord Crewe's double-edged sword." It states that the Department of Education has issued another communiqué to say that the decision limiting the scope of the proposed Hindu and Muhammadan Universities emanates from Lord Crewe's profound wisdom, and that it is final and should, therefore, be regarded as "A settled fact." The words within inverted commas should strike terror into the people's hearts and lead them to look upon "A settled fact" as an unalterable decree of fate. But the difficulty is that many "A settled fact" has been unsettled before this and the people now attach very little importance to the expression. Why should, besides, the India Office (try to) overawe the King Emperor's devoted (Indian) subjects by speaking of "Settled facts" every now and then? Moreover, what does it gain by exciting hopes in them by making deceitful promises? A hope is held out to them, but when the time for the redemption of the promise arrives they are treated to a blank refusal. This disagreeable conduct in the Secretary of State has landed the Government of India also in a strange fix. The latter being a puppet in the former's hands has to dance, nolens volens, to any tune the head of the India Office may choose to play. And in doing so its members have to do such undignified and ludicrous things as to make Indians ask in surprise whether "It is a Government or a puppet show." The paper then goes on to say that Muhammadans should display no excitement over the communiqué referred to, and should declare in plain words that they do not want a University with a limited jurisdiction. A graduate costs several thousands of rupees and, after obtaining his degree, hankers after Government service, in which he loses his independence of opinion and liberty of speech and writing and sells himself body and soul for a pay ranging from Rs. 30 to Rs. 400. The sum of Rs. 35 lakhs collected for a Muslim University can yield income of at least Rs. 10,000 a month. One-half of it should be spent on Primary and Secondary education, the other half being utilized for sending (Muhammadan) youths to foreign countries to receive technical and industrial education.

The Muin (Amritsar), of the 1st August 1912, publishes an article, in black borders, headed "The desires for the Muslim University have been dashed to the ground." In the course of its remarks, the paper complains that since the reversal of the partition of Bengal the times have been hostile to the communal interests of Muhammadans. Not only has the body-politic of Musalmans been wounded through that measure, but now the responsible authorities seem to have begun to regard even the Muslim University with feelings of distrust. The decision of Government to limit the jurisdiction of the University to Aligarh has caused uneasiness among the Prophet's followers, and has plunged them into deep mourning. They should not, however, abandon the scheme but should agitate for a reconsideration of the decision, taking up the matter to Parliament and petitioning even the King Emperor. The agitation should not be given up, till they have gained their end. They should display courage and afford evidence of their being a strong and living community. Meetings should be held in cities, towns and villages, to protest against the proposed University being made a local affair. Muhammadans should also submit a memorial bearing at least one crore signatures. Further, a respectable deputation should be sent to England to move the Parliament and to appeal to the British public. The 16th of July (the day on which the above decision was announced) should be observed as a day of mourning, till Government "grants us a charter." Muhammadans asked for an elephant from Government, but the latter has given them a lame ass instead. They should not accept this animal and should appeal to the King Emperor to give them the elephant demanded by them.

"It is clear from the writings in the Muhammadan Press that the announcement made by the Government of India confining the scope of the proposed University at Aligarh to that town has given rise to keen disappointment among all classes of Muhammadans. Indeed we may go a little further and describe the prevalent feeling as one of very bitter resentment. From the signed articles and editorial notes and comments that have appeared in the various Muhammadan newspapers in the country it is clear that the Muhammadans are against a University to which no Colleges situated outside Aligarh could be affiliated. They would sooner abandon the idea of a University than accept one on the lines laid down by the Government. What Muhammadan public opinion is afraid of is the timidity of the opportunist leaders who might counsel them to accept what Government is prepared to give. The Committee of the proposed University will meet at Aligarh on the 12th instant when steps will be taken 'to organise a deputation which will wait upon Sir Harcourt Butler.' A good deal will depend on what is decided at this meeting. What is noticeable and what is calculated to gratify all sensible and impartial people is the growth and development of independent public opinion among Muhammadans—opinion which such papers as the Comrade and the Moslim Gazette so powerfully voice—and this opinion is strongly opposed to such a University. The birth of this opinion augurs well not only for the Muslim cause but also for that Indian unity which has suffered so much since Mussalman leaders gave way to separatist counsels and adopted a separatist propaganda. When Muhammadans come to realise that they are Indians first and Muhammadans afterwards the way will open to the restoration of unity and good feeling among Muhammadans and Hindus which was a marked feature of the intercommunal relation in India twenty years ago. Sensible persons among both Hindus and Muhammadans have fully realised the extent of the harm which their mutual bickerings have done. Let them translate their thoughts into action and their present difficulties will disappear to a very large extent."

"The refusal of the Government of India to permit the Aligarh University to affiliate mofussil colleges has, as we anticipated, created bitter disappointment. The Comrade discusses the situation in a four-column article and regards the Government of India communiqué as the 'Ukase of the Czardom' which takes long 'to cure the loyalists of their belief in the Government's kindly consideration.' It is suggested this decision is due to the evil advice of Sir Theodore Morison, who in 1898 was favourable to the idea of affiliation. Our contemporary is surprised why Sir Theodore has changed his opinion in 1912 about the Muslims of India whom he knows pretty well. The Comrade says:

"Not a single argument has been brought forward by the Secretary of State or the Government of India against the phalanx of reasons, and yet a 'final' decision has been arrived at. Are we not then justified in suspecting that the Government does not desire the spread of Aligarh Movement? If so, may we not ask what Aligarh has done to deserve this suspicion? It has not turned out Khudiram Boses and Kanhaialal Dutts. It has produced no Dhingra and no Savarkars. . . . Its teaching has been a byeword for loyalty and the conduct of some of its Governors has even savoured of subservience. More than a generation of India's 'patriots' has taunted it on the score of trying the sweet uses of flattery. Yet the Government honours patriots and humiliates the subject of their jibes. Such is the statesmanship of to-day, and we shudder to think of the destination to which, in certain contingencies, it may lead the Mussalmans of India.

"The last reference is a mysterious threat which, taken along with the repetition of certain forgotten names may mean anything. But surely there is no room for so much bitterness and bad feeling merely because the power of affiliation is denied to Aligarh. It does not mean that the Benares University will be given what has been denied to Aligarh. And, moreover, between 1898 and 1912, even the loyal Muslims in India have changed a little. Sir Theodore Morison who knows them ought to have reasons for considering that affiliation of mofussil colleges is now needless. In 1898 there was no Pan-Islamic movement in India and Mr. Amir Ali had not established the patent text: 'Mussalman first, Indian afterwards.' When an Arab was wounded in Tripoli the Dacca Muslim's body did not bleed. The cry of 'down with Italy' did not produce distant reverberation in the plains of the Himalayas. All these have doubtless conjured up visions of political possibilities of Islam which even Sir Theodore Morison could not safely ignore. The Muhammadans must thank their London leader, Mr. Amir Ali, for all this. The Hindus also suffer for this, but we are astonished that the Comrade does not see through it. It is apparent that the Indian Muhammadans must renounce Pan-Islamism before they can get all they want from the Indian Government."

The proposed Hindu University.

22. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 30th July 1912, publishes an article headed "The Hindu University's dark future." The Editor says that Government's decision limiting the scope of the Hindu and Muhammadan Universities to Benares and Aligarh, respectively, has sealed the fate of both these institutions and has dashed the hopes of their promoters to the ground. After asking Hindus to consider whether the proposed Hindu University is likely to prove of any use to their community, he opines that it had better not be established at all, if it is to take the form which such a decision gives it. Students outside Benares can derive no benefit from it; while there can now be no hope of its promoting union among Hindus, seeing that it will have no attraction for people not residing in the town of its location. It is, besides, an admitted fact that the cost of educating a country's boys and girls should be borne by its Government. All civilised Governments bear this burden and "our" Government also does so to a large extent, which, indeed, it ought to do, because "we" pay taxes, and a Government realises taxes from its subjects in order to supply the latter's educational and other wants. It is, therefore, by no means advisable to lighten Government's burden in this respect, nay, it should be urged, and compelled to budget for amounts more commensurate with the (educational) needs of the people. Next the paper expresses the opinion that it would be grossly unfair to, and like betraying the confidence of, the (Hindu community) to waste Rs. 50,00,000, in converting the Hindu College, Benares, into a University, as the ideas of Mrs. Besant have of late been assuming a most objectionable character. It also advances these further reasons for not establishing a Hindu University with a limited jurisdiction :—

(1) That even the students of the Hindu College, Benares, will prove losers, seeing that the examinations of the proposed Hindu University will be far stiffer than those of the Allahabad University.

(2) That Government will have greater control over the University than it has over the College.

(3) That the University will practically be a Government College founded with the (Hindu) community's money.

(4) That it will be unable to supply any communal wants (of Hindus).

Continuing, the paper says that the promoters of the Hindu University scheme have not as yet made any declaration as to their views in regard to Government's decision. The Punjab Committee should, therefore, tell them in plain language that they should not expect to receive even a single farthing from it, till it has the constitution of the University before it.

The Jhang Sial (Jhang), of the 1st August 1912, publishes similar remarks and regrets that Mr. Butler should have first made a deceitful promise to the promoters of the Hindu University movement. If he had to disappoint them in the end, he ought to have declared his intentions at the very outset. As it is, both Hindus and Muhammadans have been placed on the horns of a dilemma : they now neither wish to have their own Universities, nor are they willing to give up the idea.

A complaint in connection with the Medical School, Agra.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 2nd August 1912, has an article headed "Boycott of Muslim newspapers in Agra." Adverting to its previous remarks under the above heading, the paper reports that on the 16th ultimo Dr. Modi, a Professor in the Medical School, Agra, remarked in the course of a lecture that rape was more greatly prevalent among Muhammadans than in any other race, and that this was due to their being flesh-eaters. According to the Agra Akhbar, moreover, the Principal has, instead of enquiring into Dr. Modi's conduct in using the above offensive words towards Muhammadans, visited his wrath on two Muslim students on the suspicion of their having written to the Zamindar and the Agra Akhbar (on the subject). The head of the College is a mere puppet in the hands of his Hindu subordinates, and the paper again strongly urges on the Government of the United Provinces that the treatment which has of late been accorded to the Musalman students of the above school constitutes a foul blot on British justice.

24. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated the 4th August 1912 :—

Military officers in India.

"* * * * * We think it is very desirable that officers in military employ should be placed on the same footing as the civil officers of Government with regard to their liability to pay their debts. Even as it is they have a great advantage over civil officers for salaries of military officers up to Rs. 500 a month are exempt from income tax. Military officers in all parts of India have financial dealings with the people and very few among the latter are aware that the law as at present stands practically exempts these officers from liability of attachment of salary. If they come to know of this they will refuse to have any dealings with those officers which will, we fear, cause the latter much inconvenience. Besides there is no reason whatsoever why officers in military employ should be exempt from a liability which attaches to all the employés of Government. If the opinions sent by Local Governments are in favour of bringing military officers within the scope of the liability referred to above and the Government of India endorse them, steps will be taken to secure an amendation of the law to that effect."

(a)—Foreign.

Sir Edward Grey and the Anglo-Russian relations.

1. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th August 1912, publishes an article headed "A Russian eye-opener for Sir Edward Grey." Peter the Great, says the paper, laid an injunction on his descendants to conquer the whole of the Asiatic Continent. Everyone of his successors has acted up to his wishes and reduced one or another neighbouring Kingdoms to subjection by means of deceit or cunning, tyranny or aggression. His progeny have also inherited from him the political advice to make fools of the English in order to gain their object; and to get money out of the latter's pockets by making friends with them and to use the money to work their ruin. Peter's worthy descendants have been obeying him in this respect also, and this dreadful truth is not unknown to thoughtful Englishmen. Unfortunately, however, the foreign affairs of England have, for some years past, been in the hands of a statesman, who has not been gifted with foresight by God. Sir Edward Grey still labours under the idle thought that Russia, whose naval expansion is possible only towards the South through Persia, can be a friend of England and can forget the traditions of centuries of rivalry. It was this mistaken impression that led to the Anglo-Russian agreement of 1907, which had the effect of lowering British prestige in the eyes of Asiatic races and has enabled Russia to work her will in Northern Persia. Sir Edward Grey, however, and those short-sighted people who think with him are persistent in saying that the agreement is a guarantee of friendship between England and Russia, and that it has proved of great use in satisfactorily solving the Central Asian question. Those public men, who do not share the Foreign Minister's views and are thoroughly acquainted with the deceitful ways of Russians, have repeatedly raised their voice against the unnatural convention, and Sir Edward Grey turns a deaf ear to them. But that semi-official Muscovite organ, the Novoe Vremya, has now openly declared that Russia is heartily desirous of seeing the pride of England shattered, and thanks God for having appointed a power like Germany to render that pleasant service. The Zamindar therefore prays that God may have pity on the intellectual condition of Sir Edward Grey and of those who think with him, and that He may place such Englishmen in power as may thoroughly understand England's foreign policy and realise the need of establishing friendly relations with the Muslim world.

The Turco-Italian war.

2. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th August 1912, publishes some verses under the heading "The Tripolitan War," from the pen of Maulana Ghulam Hazrat Khan, Haziq, Professor, Ramsay College, Almora. The Professor exhorts the Turks and Arabs to give a good account of themselves and to make things hot for the heathen invaders of Tripoli. He also appeals to Muhammadans in all quarters of the globe to unsheathe the "sword of jehad" and thereby raise a commotion in the world. They should not let the name of Islam be tarnished, but should unite and display bravery on the battlefield. Heathenism (? Christianity) is strong on all sides, and infidels have turned into enemies of Islamic unitarianism.

The proposed pilgrim hospital at Jeddah.

3. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 10th August 1912, has an article headed "An untimely song." After praising British rule, the paper speaks of the proposal, to establish a hospital at Jeddah for the benefit of the pilgrims (to the Hedjaz), contained in a circular letter issued by the President, Haj Committee, Bombay, and forwarded by the Punjab Government to the press and to all Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners and the Political Agent, Phulkian States and Bahawalpur. The paper cannot find words to praise sufficiently Government's conduct in the matter, but it regrets that the proposal should have been made at this inauspicious time, when dark clouds overhang the Islamic world. Persia has been ruthlessly plundered by Russian dacoits, and a civilised European power is engaged in butchering Muhammadan women and children in Tripoli. As regards Turkey, the fact that the power of Islam cannot be weakened in the Turkish possessions in Africa has led to an apple of discord being thrown among those in power in Turkey, and disturbances being fomented in the Balkans. The Muslim sufferers in Meshed and Tripoli have (the first) claim on the sympathy of the Prophet's followers throughout the world, and it is, therefore, according to the paper, unlikely that the poor middle-class Indian Muhammadans will be able to give money in aid of the hospital at Jeddah, especially since the community has had to find 30 or 35 lakhs for the University at Aligarh. Those Muhammadans, however, who claim to be leaders of their co-religionists and have so far given nothing for the above sufferers, are free to render pecuniary help in aid of the Government proposal in question. It is a pity that the project should have been launched at the present juncture; such a step can but engender in the minds of some Musalmans the suspicion that Government wishes to distract the thoughts of the followers of Islam. Government should not allow such suspicions to be aroused, and should therefore shelve the proposal for the present. As it is, only those Muhammadans will give money for the projected hospital who are afraid of Government and pose as well-wishers of their community.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th August 1912, publishes some verses by Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, who, in reply to a request from an imaginary person for a donation in aid of the hospital, says, among other things :—

"Deliver the message of life to some one else,

"I (, for one,) seek for death (and not health) in the Hedjaz."

The Watan (Lahore), of the 12th August 1912, complains that "A zealous (and) true servant" of Muhammadans (this is an ironical reference to the Zamindar) has been the first to object to the laudable proposal for a hospital at Jeddah. There is, however, nothing to be surprised at in this, seeing that in these days service to Islam and the (Muslim) community consists only in opposing noble undertakings, ridiculing the leading followers of the Prophet, rifling the pockets of Musalmans to one's heart's content, and indulging in Billingsgate, drinking and mischief making.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 13th August 1912, says that the establishment of the proposed hospital is the only way fully to remove the hardships which Indian pilgrims have to suffer at Jeddah.

South African coal for Indian Railways.

4. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 14th August 1912 :—

"A telegram from Simla recently stated that the Government of India have entered into contracts for the supply of South African coal for the State Railways and are considering the placing of larger orders. There ought to be a unanimous and emphatic protest throughout India against this arrangement. The effect of this spontaneous act of the Government of India will be that the South African Colonists will be enriched without the removal of a single Indian grievance in South Africa. Who can blame the Colonists if, observing this, they cynically disregard official protests against the ill-treatment of resident Indians? Both private railway companies and the Government should be prepared to pay a little more for coal to be used on Indian railways, instead of putting money into the pockets of South African Colonists, if the wrongs of Indians in South Africa are ever to be righted."

"In continuation of what we wrote yesterday we find that the North-Western Railway and the Great Indian Peninsular and the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railways have purchased 100,000 and 78,000 tons respectively of Transvaal coal owing to the difficulty of relying on obtaining Indian coal. It is stated that the North-Western Railway has placed an order for 5,000 tons of Utricht coal as an experiment measure, and proposals are under consideration for placing larger orders in South Africa. As for the two Bombay Railways we are told that being under the management of Companies they make their own arrangements for their coal supplies without reference to the Government of India. It is stated that the Western Bengal coal fields are running short of the mineral due to the shortage of labour and also owing to excessive sea freight from Calcutta, Bombay and Karachi, the Railways will find the Transvaal coal cheaper than Bengal coal. We do not believe that the Indian coal fields are exhausted. As regards importing coal from the Transvaal our objections are shared by Indians and Europeans alike."

The late Mikado.

5. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 8th (received on the 14th) August 1912, publishes a eulogistic obituary notice of the late Mikado, observing in the course of its remarks that the credit for the political awakening of Asia is due chiefly to Japan, whose victory over Russia produced in the East "waves of bravery and liberty", which will one day place the Asiatic continent on a footing of equality with Europe. If the deceased Mikado, adds the paper, had not given up all his personal powers, Japan would have been swallowed up by Russia and no independent Asiatic State would have been left in existence.

Mr. Montagu's Budget Speech.

6. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 8th August 1912, publishes an article headed "Indian Budget in the British Parliament." It summarises Mr. Montagu's remarks about Indian students in England and finds fault with its Anglo-Indian contemporaries for having taken exception to them. It was the incapacity and shortsightedness of "these very Anglo-Indian worthies," adds the paper, that led to the outbreak of sedition in India (a few years back). After remarking that sedition (in this country) can be stamped out only by the aid of noble ideas and considerate treatment (of Indians) on the part of British statesmen, it observes that apparently Anglo-Indian papers are in the hands of people "who cause misunderstanding in India about the greatness and morality of the British nation." They have no fear of God and care nothing for religion, while they always speak of ruling the country by the sword and are engaged in creating difficulties for Government. Unlike their great ancestors, who founded the British Empire in India, Anglo-Indian journalists (lit. papers) seek their good in injuring educated Indians. They regard themselves as the highest of men, and hold the opinion that India has been given them to be disgraced and trampled upon. As long, however, as God is kind to the British Government, it will never allow itself to be deceived by them.

Continuing in its issue, dated the 9th August 1912, the paper says that, if the British Government (in India) keeps in view the sentiments voiced by Mr. Montagu, it can be safely predicted, that the highest hopes of India, about a common (lit. useful) nationality will be realised (lit. fostered). The Under-Secretary of State champions the cause of higher education in India, and he even appreciates and accepts Mr. Gakhale's doctrine of compulsory education. Anglo-Indian papers are displeased at this, but it would appear that their "dark selfishness" has been fully probed, which is a matter for congratulation. The attention of Mr. Montagu is drawn to Lord Curzon's Universities Act, which has had the effect not only of raising tuition fees but also of creating several difficulties for parents in giving an education to their sons. Formerly students used slates for doing sums in arithmetic, but now they are required to use copy books, which they must buy only at particular shops and which must be of specified sizes, shapes, &c. Should a student buy paper and make his own copy books, they are torn up; moreover, only a few lines are written on each of those used for caligraphy, after which the books are taken away by teachers. This entails unnecessary expense on parents, which raises the suspicion that Government is averse to making the benefits of education universal. Mr. Montagu has undoubtedly done his utmost to remove this suspicion, and, if he is sincere (lit. if it is true), the practice referred to should be put down as soon as possible. Continuing, the paper refers to and endorses Mr. Montagu's remarks about University education, and applauds his announcement about Government's wishes to spread technical education to all parts of India. In conclusion, it says that it is possible that the time may come when the Indian Civil Service Examination will be held simultaneously in India and England.

Government and the public.

7. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 8th (received on the 14th) August 1912, has a note headed "The position of the public is superior to (that of) Government." It reports that, in the course of his speech at a meeting of the Allahabad Municipal Committee, recently held to consider Sir John Hewett's censure of that body, the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is said to have remarked that His Honour's criticism was exaggerated and he himself would try to convince the public, whose position was superior to Government's, that this was so. The paper congratulates Hindus on their possessing enlightened and independent leaders like the Pandit, as against "the Hon'ble" Muhammadan leaders who, in spite of their occupying the important post of Secretary of the Muslim League (sic.), seek for feathers for their caps in the dust under the feet, not even of Lieutenant-Governors, but of Deputy Commissioners, and lesser officials. Continuing, it says that the Pandit is entitled to thanks from the entire Indian public, in whose behalf he has displayed the greatest courage in uttering the above words. The public assuredly occupies a position higher than that of any Government. No Government can withstand united opposition from the people. A government is the servant of the public; its officers eat the public's salt; its whole machinery is worked by the public; and the money it needs is found by them. From the people come recruits for the Army and the Police and for all administrative posts. Government, is therefore, in a subordinate position.

The Indian Public Service Commission.

8. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 7th August 1912, in a note headed "Personnel of the (Civil Services) Commission," says that the members of the Commission include narrow-minded men like Sir Valentine Chirol and liberal-minded gentlemen of Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's type. The three Indian Commissioners profess moderate politics, and all of them may be relied upon to conduct themselves in a statesmanlike way. The same cannot, however, he said of their European colleagues, who are extremists of one or another description. If the report of the Commission is submitted while the Liberal Party is still in power, there will be a strong hope of the interests of Indians (being furthered). If, however, the Conservatives are in power when the report is submitted, there will be very little likelihood of this.

* * * * * * *

"Among the members appointed to the Commission, Sir Valentine Chirol and Mr. Ramsay MacDonald attract considerable attention in India. For both of them have held no Government appointments but they command considerable respect on account of their independent and impartial examination of Indian affairs. They have risen from the ranks of journalists who have studied public questions in their many sided aspects and they have escaped being drawn into a narrow groove in any matter. They are men with broad sympathies and knowledge of humane activities in different parts of the world. Both have been in India and studied Indian discontent, tracing its causes and forming their own conclusions as to the remedies to be applied. They recognise that India of to-day is much different from what it was six years ago and look at India's future from a more liberal standpoint. We believe that we may well look forward to their helping this country with their individual opinions so as to establish the era of contented and peaceful progress.

* * * * * * * *

"One of the favourite theories of old times is that a certain minimum number of European officials are a political necessity in India and they should be appointed to that minimum number of posts. The circumstances which determine political necessity and suggest a minimum can hardly be regarded as constant or permanent. We now recognise no such political necessity in India and the time is past when the mere presence of a definite number of European officers could guarantee the loyalty of India and its permanent attachment to the British Empire. The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale last year pointed four main tests of progress to which we must to-day adhere—viz., (1) the moral and material improvement, (2) larger powers in local affairs, (3) effective voice in the deliberative Councils, and (4) increasing appointment of Indians in Public Service. In order to keep up the continuous progress of the Government, progress should be shown in the four directions. Sir Valentine Chirol, in his book on 'Indian Unrest' says on the Civil Service in India (page 293) :—

'Far from having flooded India, as is often alleged, with a hoard of overpaid officials, we may justly claim that no Western nation has ever attempted to govern an alien dependency with a smaller staff of its own race, or has admitted the subject races to so large a participation in its public services.'

"A remark like this in a book on unrest will do very well, but we hope it will have no place in the Public Service Commission. For in the first place, the political differentiation of subject races and ruling races sounds inharmonious and even offensive at a time when India is regarded as a consolidated portion of the vast British Empire. If on the other hand Indians are considered to be a subject race held together by sundry devices of chains and chords, then there has been no change since the middle of the last century in the policy and principles of the Government. The age is past when India was looked at with perpetual suspicion and its populations regarded with something like the courtesy of the warder in charge of an under-trial prisoner. Sir Valentine Chirol who has made extensive enquiries in regard to Indian unrest knows very well what part this suspicious view of the Government and its consequent degradation assigned to Indians has played in creating misunderstanding and trouble. If English people come to Indians with an open heart and with the spirit of true comradeship, then Indians will return the courtesy and honour manyfold. There have been many practical illustrations of this attitude. If on the other hand, they approach us in the spirit of a superior race and a conquering one bent on controlling and directing the affairs of a mere dependent, then the feelings and relations engendered thereby will be of a far different kind and will lead to the perpetuation of smothered discontent of a vast nation. This is quite against the spirit of the Royal Proclamations and liberal principles of Government and the error, we hope, will not be repeated now. Every cultured Indian will admit that we have a great deal to learn from the enlightened and great British race and from the British contact we have already learnt much. Perhaps the service will be mutual and Indians will have to discharge this heavy debt of gratitude some day. But the stamp of inferiority and degradation on a whole race cannot be placed and established as a necessary political principle or policy of administration. If Indians had equal opportunities of education and other facilities, they would in no way prove inferior to the British race. Educationally and in service this has been proved, and Sir Valentine Chirol would make the greatest mistake if he does not support the obliteration of the racial inequality in administration, and establish the equal recognition of tried merit and capacity under equal conditions irrespective of race or caste. That is a necessary preliminary to progress and we venture to urge it on the attention of the members of the Public Service Commission.

"Whoever is called upon to re-shape Indian policy in regard to any matter must start with ideas and principles which are in better harmony with progressive modern ideals. Even in the Roman ideal of imperialism, the idea of conquered provinces being perpetually regarded as alien and dependent was not established. For a time the contact of a conquering with the conquered nation remained unsatisfactory. But things have changed and are changing with every measure of settlement and pacification in the country, and the growing homogeneousness of the races becomes a necessary condition of successful annexation. The Boer-British Confederacy in South Africa is the latest example of this principle; and if after 150 years of British rule and the recent political events in India, the racial superiority of the English people has to be maintained by statutory and practical provisions, we must despair of India's future and British good-will. But happily those ideas of racial arrogance and inequality are, we hope, gone and we meet on new conditions of absolute equality. Educated Indians entrusted with power and responsibility in high offices have discharged their duty equally well with European officers and this has been witnessed and spoken of by successive Viceroys and Secretaries of State. We do require the services of capable Englishmen in the administration of India in all departments, but the principle ought to be unreservedly admitted that capable Indians ought to be encouraged and employed without distinction of race or other obstacle. In the services, we meet with practical restrictions of many kinds and the removal of these will be one of the objects of the enquiry. In this enquiry, our object is to show how the surrounding circumstances such as the general political outlook, the recent changes in the ideas and sentiments of the people and the prejudices awakened by the colour, should be taken into consideration by the members. We have no doubt that due consideration of the present and anticipations of the future will be made in the light of events and results of history. Indians are anxious to prove their individuality, but they ask for opportunities of employing their worth and these opportunities should be created first at home and then extended abroad—without prejudice to colour, race or caste.

Lord Crewe and the Indian Policy.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 13th August 1912:—

"It is not so easy to rule and shape the destines of nations as it is to make speeches. Moreover governing a people in the 20th century has acquired a tremendously more important meaning than when Akbar or Aurangzeb reigned. It is not easy to say whether Lord Crewe has been fully aware of this fact, as he is of the necessity to reconcile Indian policy with Tory sentiment in England. But he ought to know, having recently been in India and attended one of the most imposing scenes at Delhi and Calcutta, that his speeches are not merely read by millions of people whose destinies are placed in trust in his hands as Minister for India, but are taken to be the final words deciding a national question for the time being. That national question is about the political future of this vast country with the most ancient civilisation, developed art and learning, highest culture, religion and philosophy—a country whose past history is full of memorable and soul-stirring events. It is necessary that all this should be kept in mind by one who has to deal with modern India and also the extent of the country and the teeming populations, the immense variety of social ideas and aims of life, &c. To an ordinary European who sees India, whether it be for a week or for a lifetime, only the outward garb appears. The inner life is not revealed to those who look from high platform of social aloofness. The majority of Anglo-Indian officials live in India a sort of segregated life, and they do not know the inner life or strength of India. They do not make an effort to know; and from their standpoint it is neither inviting nor necessary. They only see its outward poverty, sordidness, careless arrangements, castes, divisions, ignorance and humiliation. We obey our rulers, compliment them for their goodness and live with apparent content. Taking these outward emblems it is unfair to generalise about the national worth or trend. In fact, most of the rulers have been so doing. What they have seen they have recorded on paper and that forms the sacred official record. That is also the basis of the policy and principles that guide their future action. All this is wrong, or at best, superficial. Conclusions based on one-sided observations of an Oriental people from a detached and exclusive standpoint can never be sound. Where they consult Indians, the opinions are of those who colour their views to fit in with those of the rulers. The soul and spirit of India has been unheard, unseen. In some cases it expressed itself, but it was either ununderstandable or unpleasant and has been suppressed. How else will the rulers of India know the political destiny or the future of this country as it ought to be? The present is always unsatisfactory, the past was always wrong, and the future always hazy—if not positively hideous.

"Those who aimed at Indian swaraj absolutely have been whipped into jail for their pains of setting so nasty an ideal. Between bureaucracy and absolute swaraj the gulf was unbridgeable. An attempt was made to throw across a bridge in the form of self-government under British auspices. A small Indian banner was set afloat under the large Union Jack. The compromise seemed to please all—at any rate, those who were eager for some solution. It served the purpose of saving an unknown situation. A new policy was formulated of taking the people into consultation, providing for such consultation and expression of opinion. The new reformed Councils and sundry other re-organisations were welcomed as they gave greater scope for the exercise of Indian talent. The crowning act of this policy was the annulment of the Bengal Partition and the removal of the capital to Delhi. But the main administration rests with the rulers and Indians have as yet no real power. But they were perfectly content with this, as a beginning of a new regime and thanked the Government. The Indians are a grateful people and for very little kindness express profuse thankfulness. But it is their misfortune that their profuse gratitude is invariably misunderstood as a result of having received more than they expected. The Europeans do not understand the Indian courtesy. During the last three years there has been such a flood of thanks giving for the new policy in India, that we are not surprised that Lord Crewe has stiffened his back a little. He has understood the Oriental in the time-honoured sense. He thinks that the people of India have been so charmed by the Council reforms and Delhi announcements, that they can afford to have no future at all. At any rate, he knows enough of the Indian millions to protest against self-governing 'pretensions' by the dark, black and non-British people. Indians are not of 'our race.' No British blood runs in Indian veins, and no white skin covers the flesh. Why then, should they have self-government on Colonial lines? That is argued perfectly. What should become of India then? Is she to be satisfied with her present political position? Is it a European or English political virtue to be satisfied with their present position and not to aspire for the very best that they can get or wish to get? But perhaps we, as a black and non-English people, have no right to borrow truths from European history. We must take ideals from Asiatic history. Very well, then. What about Japan and China and Pillippines? What about Turkey and Persia? None of these nations are older or more civilised than the Indians. None of them as created and placed by God is superior to Indians. But all of them have political opportunities which India has not. The Phillippines, peopled by humanity little removed from pastoral life, have under the protection of the United States of America got better political status and powers. They obtained in 6 years what British Indians could not in 150. Does that show the defect of the Indian people? What about China? Are the Chinese better endowed than the Indians? What about Japan? Is India to be the solitary Asiatic State which has neither a political status nor a future—because India is the oldest, largest and best country in Asia? And what are the sins of Indians for this perpetual degradation, political tutelage or dependence?

"Although India cannot have Western examples to benefit her, Indians are shown Western lessons to restrain and check themselves. It is said that Indians are divided into castes and therefore form no homogeneous nation. Therefore they cannot have self-government. Western theorists basing their logic on Western history have said so and that becomes a natural law for all nations which the British statesmen are anxious to apply.

They forget that before the British rule castes and racial distinctions were even more defined and yet there were national forms of government. Even now in certain Native States the people enjoy a more national form of government, though conducted in the name of and by one Maharaja. Some of them have developed a constitution which acquires a popular character. Different castes mingle in conducting the administration without any hitch. In fact, castes and other social distinctions do not interfere in the conduct of public affairs. The rigidity of Indian caste exclusion is a myth and has nothing whatever to do with administrative matters. Then, again, there is the ignorance of the masses and the inexperience of the educated public in the routine of the administration. There is little doubt that when the masses are educated and the public are more accustomed to settled and progressive lines of administration, people will be better able to exercise their political privileges. But what have the Government been doing in these directions? They have strenuously opposed the scheme of compulsory education in very humble and modest form. They have excluded educated natives of India from a larger participation in the more respectable public offices. Even municipal chairmanship and secretaryship have been preserved to Europeans and the natives of India are not encouraged in the appointments. How far can the attitude of Government be considered consistent with their professions? Who urges extension of education and who obstructs? Who asks for opportunities of gaining administrative experience, and who denies? Again, how many popular suggestions in the Legislative Councils have been sympathetically adopted? Even the generous minded Viceroy confessed that if the Government accepted all the non-official resolutions, the Government would have to go into the "melting pot." Such is the spirit of the Government that requires the standard of work and a policy of administration, which in effect keep out Indians as far as possible. The result is that when two nations come together, the one very powerful and guiding and the other weak and obedient, the latter always goes to the wall except when small mercy is voluntarily extended by the strong to prevent the weak from collapsing.

"Such, I am afraid, is the position of poor India whether under reform scheme or otherwise. The reform patch-work on the surface may wipe away streaming tears now and then, but the grief is unaffected. The pain remains and the wound festers. The rate of progress in India is mournfully slow. Compare events in India with those of any other country similarly situated. Only take the treatment given to British Indians in British Colonies. How can we believe that we have fair treatment by a justice-loving Government? We are told they will extend primary education and double the number of scholars. When, in what time? It takes some years for you to formulate a scheme and perhaps it takes ten years or more for you to carry out that. What can that affect in India? What harm would there be in adopting compulsory education in a modest way? There are two ways of ruling India—one is to do so with a view to make Indians rule themselves under the supervision of England; the other is to rule them with a view to perpetual dependence. Both are possible and both have ample merit and excuse. The depressed classes in India are an instance of large masses being kept down, never again to rise. Do they complain? Do they feel they have a higher outlook and a happier ambition in life? No. Who gives them an opportunity to think so? When Lord Crewe comfortably says with all the coolness of a British aristocrat that he can never imagine a time when India will have self-government, little did he imagine he was merely repeating the thousand-year-old maxim of the upper-class Brahman in India, who keeps down the untouchable Pariah. Let him do so; we do not envy his political wisdom or social philosophy. The time is past when India could hope to look to the scions of British aristocracy for justice. When we want favours, we will go to them. We look for Lloyd George and Churchill to do us bare justice. May their time come soon."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Afghanistan politics.

10. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 16th August 1912 :—

"There is no doubt that the authority of the present Amir of Afghanistan is not at all so firm and well established as was the case with that of his father, Amir Abdurrahman Khan, who was both feared and respected. During the rule of Amir Abdurrahman Khan the Hindu residents throughout Afghanistan were treated with justice and nobody dare molest them. But now things are quite different. The more intolerant and fanatical among the Pathans make it hot for the Hindus without let or hindrance from the present Amir. He is thus either powerless to help, or he is unwilling to do anything for them. As regards the maintenance of law and order in Afghanistan, reports are published that the road between Dhakka and Jellalabad has once more become unsafe owing to the presence of gangs of robbers. An Afghan official had his baggage looted a short time ago. The road guards are quite inefficient and the orders issued by the Amir during his stay at Jellalabad regarding the protection of travellers are said to be disregarded. We are told further that the report that wheeled transport was going to be placed on the whole length of the road to Kabul gave offence to the ordinary carriers. They have, however, been reassured by the announcement that there is no intention of organising any regular service and that heavy goods for the State factories, public works, etc., will alone be dealt with. Let us hope that all these reports are considerably exaggerated and that the Amir is fully capable of maintaining law and order throughout his territories. The prohibitive imposts levied by his father and which the present ruler of Afghanistan has not interfered with have very considerably reduced the volume of both import and export trade between India and Afghanistan, and it is quite clear that the news about the unsafety of the trade routes will go some way to strangle what little trade there is between the two countries."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Muslim League, London, and the Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

11. The Watan (Lahore), of the 9th August 1912, has a note headed "The London Muslim League. Hindu-Muslim unity. May God save the (Muslim) community from these new promoters of union." Adverting to the League's annual report, a summary of which has recently been cabled by Reuter, the paper refers to the suggestion that Muhammadans should avoid cow-killing in places, where they are in a minority, out of regard for Hindu sentiment, and remarks that perhaps the League next year will order Musalmans to discontinue making the call for prayers. It also takes exception to the appeal addressed to Hindus, that they on their part should allow Muhammadans peacefully to enjoy the constitutional privileges accorded to them and to participate, on equal terms, in the benefits of British rule. No greater insult than this could be offered to the British raj, because such language insinuates that there exists a power in India which can, if it will, prevent Musalmans from profiting by the blessings and privileges of British rule. This is the gratitude that the London Leaguers have shown for the British liberality (displayed towards the followers of Islam). And these persons claim to be engaged in promoting the religious and secular welfare, not only of 7 crores of Indian Musalmans, but also of their 30 crores of co-religionists in the world. Nothing better could be expected from men of the type of Talaat Bey, Djavid Bey, &c., of Salonika and such places, who can betray both their Government and religion.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 13th August 1912, commenting on the above under the heading "An obscene and savage attack on the Right Hon'ble Sayad Amir Ali and the London Muslim League," says that the League's proposal for a Hindu-Muhammadan union is not only in consonance with the King Emperor's declared wishes on the subject, but has also the cordial support of all the leading Muslim public men in India. The Editor of the Watan, however, for some unknown, sordid (lit. gold and silver) reason regards it as such a reprehensible idea, that he has applied the epithet "betrayers of (their) Government and religion" to Mr. Amir Ali, Major Sayad Hasan Bilgrami and other prominent Muhammadans in England for the sole offence of having proposed to unite the followers of Islam and Hinduism.

"The remarks in the latest annual Report of the All-India Moslem League regarding the necessity of a Hindu-Moslem rapprochement are certainly gratifying. The Hindus are prepared to meet the Moslems more than half way in this matter. The differences between the two great communities which have of late been very regrettably accentuated are sure to prevent the realisation of the dream of Indian Unity and if Hindus and Moslems of light and leading can come to an understanding on the subject, the best interests of this country are sure to be promoted and furthered thereby. Two excellent suggestions are made in the report: one is the formation of a representative joint board at which questions affecting the general interest of the country would be discussed and afterwards placed before the representative associations. It is an excellent suggestion and if adopted is sure to lead to good. The second suggestion relates to the interchange of delegates between the Congress and the League as a means of educating the people generally to a fuller co-operation. We are disposed to attach great importance to this suggestion and we fully endorse the contention advanced in the Report that the success of the scheme proposed will depend not merely upon a spirit of amity and toleration on both sides, but also on the full recognition of the principle of co-ordination. Where there is a will there is a way, and with the leading men on both sides prepared to adopt the policy of give and take, good relations need not be difficult of establishment. The report suggests a mutual and purely voluntary arrangement for avoiding, where Muhammadans are in a majority (? minority), the sacrifice of kine out of regard for Hindu sentiment and the substitution of goats and sheep; Hindus on their part abandoning the proscription and disparagement of the Urdu language and allowing Muhammadans peaceably to enjoy the constitutional privileges accorded to them and participation on equal terms of the benefits of the British rule. But what about the separate electorates and the demands for preferential treatment put forward and favourably entertained? We hope they are not included in the phrase 'constitutional privileges.' As we have already said a suitable modus vivendi can be arranged if there is a desire on both sides that amicable relations should give way to the present strained ones."

Libel case against the Editor of the Burma Critic.

12. Writing about the libel case against Mr. Arnold, Editor of the Burma Critic, the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 8th August 1912, endorses the suggestion made by the Muin (Amritsar), that pecuniary help should be given to the accused (vide paragraph 18 of Selections No. 30). The case being, however, sub-judice the paper cannot support the further proposal, that meetings should be held all over the country to sympathise with Mr. Arnold. It also suggests that the Provincial Muslim League, Burma, should move in the matter.

The Muin (Amritsar), of the 1st August 1912, publishes a note headed "Worthy of attention by Islamic papers. A noble Englishman is in trouble owing to his sympathy with Muhammadans." In continuation of his previous remarks about the libel case against Mr. Arnold, Editor of the Burma Critic (vide paragraph 18 of Selections No. 30), the Editor reports that he has received a private letter from Sheikh Abdul Haq, B.A., Secretary, District Muslim League, Multan, asking him

(1) to open formally a fund (in aid of Mr. Arnold) ; and

(2) to issue a circular letter to all Muslim papers—both Urdu and English—to request them to invite the Muhammadan community's attention to the case.

As, however, his paper is as yet an obscure one and commands no confidence, nor is his personal character fully known to the general Musalman public, he considers it inadvisable for the suggested fund to be opened by the Muin. The appropriate thing to be done would be that the Sheikh, who is one of the few Muhammadans in whom his co-religionists repose complete trust, should himself start a fund as soon as possible, making the necessary announcement in the organs of the Islamic community. In the event of his being unable to undertake the responsibility, the fund should be started by some respectable Muhammadan newspaper. The Zamindar, the Watan and the Paisa Akhbar, in which the Prophet's followers repose confidence more or less, are already engaged in collecting money for Muhammadan sufferers in Tripoli. The Editor would strongly urge the Observer, the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), the Afghan, the Vakil, and the Comrade (Calcutta), to ponder over the political importance of the case and carry out the proposal. And seeing that it is connected with the safeguarding of the political rights of Muhammadans he would ask the above five papers to open as many separate funds, to enable Musalmans throughout India to contribute. The Islamic press should unite in laying the case before Government, the Muslim community and League, and should raise a strong voice for practical work being undertaken. As regards Sheikh Abdul Haq, he should communicate with the members of the said press and come to some useful decision in the matter. He should also have a meeting of the Multan Muhammadans held, and a resolution adopted by the local District Muslim League, on the case.

The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 8th August 1912, says that Mr. Arnold is in great trouble owing to having sympathised with a Muhammadan girl.

Justice in the Frontier Province.

13. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 13th August 1912 :—

"In another column we publish the facts of certain strange proceedings in a case of assault lodged by Sardar Bhagwan Singh, Treasurer, Abbottabad District Treasury, against a Muhammadan servant of the Muhammadan District Judge, for thrashing his nine-year old son in public with a riding whip. Before taking the matter to the criminal court, the Sardar Sahib wrote to Wazirzada Muhammad Akram Khan, the District Judge, and the latter went to the Sardar's house and saw the injuries inflicted on the person of the Sardar's son by his servant. The District Judge was apparently satisfied that the case was serious and wrote to the Sardar Sahib asking him to prosecute the man. A complaint was formally filed in the court of Risaldar Kashi Nand and charges were framed against the accused. At this stage, it would appear from what our correspondent says, an agitation was started by local Muhammadans. As a result of that agitation the accused preferred a counter-charge against Sardarini Bhagwan Singh to the effect that she had hit him with a stone! Apparently to obviate the necessity of dragging the lady to the court the District Magistrate intervend and advised the Sardar Sahib to withdraw his case. As an official he had no alternative but to withdraw his complaint. Without doubting the good intentions of the District Magistrate, we are afraid his interference in this matter puts a premium on the arrogance of individuals. It is not difficult to see through the tactics of those Muhammadans who would not permit justice being done to the aggrieved party. Nearly a fortnight after the occurrence they started an agitation against a purdah lady in order to minimise the seriousness of the offence. Compromise under such circumstances may seem justice in the Frontier Province, but it will hardly restrain the lawless spirit of that province from attacks on defenceless women and children. We certainly wish that Sir George Roos-Keppel called for the file in this case."

(d)—Education.

The proposed racial Universities.

14. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 8th (received on the 14th) August 1912, publishes an article headed "The desires for the Muslim University have been dashed to the ground II." In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 21 of Selections No. 32), the paper says that the demand of Muhammadans for a fair share of the public service has always been met with the reply that they should first deserve and then desire. They have also been told that, if they devote all their efforts to their educational advancement, they will receive guidance and every legitimate help from Government. Accordingly, in addition to profiting by Government educational institutions, they established a number of Islamic Schools and Colleges in the country, and they formulated the scheme of an All-India Muslim University, for which they collected 35 lakhs of rupees in a short time in spite of their being a poor community. But now, when they have done all that lay in their power and there remains only the question of the grant of a charter—which Government alone can give—the authorities have all at once gone back on their oft-repeated advice and promises of help, and have refused, without assigning any reason, to grant a charter for a University such as Muhammadans desire. "We" know full well that all this promise-breaking has nothing to do with the democratic and constitutional policy of the British Government. By according such treatment to the proposed Muslim University, the Government of India has afforded proof of a spirit of gross narrow-mindedness and cowardice—a spirit wholly against the principles on which the British Empire is run. In spite, therefore, of two announcements on the subject, the decision cannot be accepted as a settled fact. All orders by the Government of India which run counter to the British principles of rule partake of an ephemeral character. Muhammadans should not, therefore, bow to the decision or abandon their agitation for obtaining a University. Government's order limiting the scope of denominational Universities has dashed to the ground the hopes of Hindus also, and if the two communities were unitedly to agitate—appealing to Parliament and the British conscience and petitioning even the King Emperor—the decision of Government would be brushed aside like a cobweb. The indifference of the Hindu press in the matter is not, however, encouraging, although Lord Crewe has not only ruined the schemes of both Universities, but has also destroyed the hopes of Hindus regarding the attainment of self-government, throwing overboard the late Queen Victoria's proclamation about the rights of Indians. His Lordship is determined to arrest the growth of democratic principles in India, and wishes to place this country under a personal rule which would prevent Indians from struggling upward to the status of free citizens in the British Empire. It is, therefore, highly necessary that the followers of Islam and Hinduism should now raise a united voice. If Muhammadans bow to this decision and limit the jurisdiction of their University to Aligarh, it will be a gross and oppressive injustice for their poorer co-religionists, who could not afford to study at the M. A.-O. College. This would mean the political death of Muhammadans, and the Government of India would not hesitate in future to trample on any of their legitimate desires.

"* * * * * Shall we accept the orders as final and be content to receive a charter for a local University? Or shall we submit a representation to the Government of India and the Secretary of State and press for the grant of a central University, fully empowered to affiliate outside colleges? Or, again, shall we forthwith abandon the idea altogether and set to work to solve our educational problem independently of the aid of a State-given University? These are the various alternatives that can be possibly adopted and it is worth our while to find out which of these three is commending itself to the community and which is likely to bring about the greatest good of the largest number.

"And to start with, we must summarily reject the first alternative, that of unhesitatingly agreeing to the proposals of the Secretary of State in toto, as these would not only entail a heavy wastage of the hard-earned money of a poor people but also hold out the certain prospect of proving disastrous to the best interests of the community. We have already said so, in language at once clear and explicit; and our view has been emphatically endorsed by the spokesmen and the representative organs of the Indian Muslims from one end of the country to the other. In repeating the same to-day, we may add that such articulate opinion among the Musalmans as has hitherto found public expression is so strong and so unanimous that the decision which the University Constitution Committee may arrive at, on the 11th and 12th instant, at its meetings to be held to consider the question—the decision will run the risk of being disowned by the community if it goes counter to the general Muhammadan view.

"The second and the third alternatives are practically one; for the second alternative is no alternative at all. It simply suggests that a strennous effort should be made to approach the Government once more and ask for a reconsideration of its orders before the community is called upon to frame its final decision. There cannot be the slightest harm in this and we would urge once more that, even if it were simply to convince the Government of the sincerity of our motives and the strength of our national convictions, it is not only desirable but necessary to submit a representation; and there is no reason to doubt that our prayers will receive the most serious consideration of the powers-that-be. We are encouraged in this belief by the knowledge that the Government of India were favourably disposed to the proposed Universities being granted the power of affiliating outside colleges and that it is the Secretary of State who has thought fit to deny them this power.

"If, however, our prayers are not acceded to and the Government, or the Secretary of State who is of course the supreme authority in the present instance, refuse to modify the orders, we should not hesitate in adopting the third alternative and bidding adieu to the University scheme. As otherwise the University would be a costly luxury, serving no useful purpose and perpetuating a heavy financial drain on the resources of the Musalmans.

* * * * * * *

"We shall, then, all efforts failing, have to fall back on the last alternative and lay down a large and comprehensive scheme, including all branches of higher technical, scientific and professional training, to work out our national regeneration at the minimum of cost and with the smallest expenditure of communal energy."

The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 14th August 1912 :—

"The letters addressed by Sir Harcourt Butler to the Raja of Mahamudabad and the Maharaja of Durbhunga on the Muhammadan and Hindu Universities explain the decision already announced about the refusal of the power of affiliation to the two proposed Universities. The Education Member, who writes on behalf of the Secretary of State and the Government of India, takes his stand on the fact that the movement of the Muhammadan University was set on foot without any reference to the Government. The implied inference is that if the Secretary of State now imposes any limitations on the scope of the University the Muhammadan community can have no grievance. As regards the Hindu University it is in the same position except that the Maharaja of Durbhunga did not join the movement until it had received official approval. So far as the public is concerned it has been understood all along that the Hindu and Muhammadan Universities were all-India movements. Otherwise, they would not have produced so much enthusiasm or received such generous support. It is perfectly true that a University cannot be established without a Royal Charter and every detail must receive the sanction of the Government. But, while it must be admitted that the two movements are spontaneous and were started without first consulting the Government, it must at the same time be recognised that the views of the Government have been very leisurely unfolded, one limitation following another, and the consequent disappointment of the people has been very great. We do not think any fault can be found with the way in which the movements were started. If the Government had been first consulted and then there had been no adequate response to the appeal for funds the promoters would have looked very small. The first thing was to feel the pulse of the country, the next to appeal for funds and the last was to approach the Government. This has duly been done. The Government cannot say that they were unaware of these movements until they were approached on the subject. The views of the Government should have been formulated and communicated to the promoters when they first went to the Government. Instead of which only one point has been decided at a time and the exact position of the two Universities has remained uncertain all this time. The Government first generally approved of the two schemes. It was next decided that English professors must be employed and it has been now laid down that the Universities will be local and will have no power of affiliating colleges outside Aligarh and Benares. Muhammadans have already expressed their keen disappointment. Nawab Viquar-ul-Mulk, before his retirement, wrote that every endeavour should be made to have this decision set aside and meetings have been held to declare that the Muhammadan University should be abandoned. The Hindu leaders have yet made no sign but their disappointment must be as great as that of their Muhammadan brethern. The entire situation will have now to be reconsidered and it must be seriously debated whether it is worth while proceeding with these schemes, or whether the money and energy should be diverted in some other direction."

"The spirited reply of the Constitution Committee of the Muhammadan University to the letter of Sir Harcourt Butler shows that that body has no intention of accepting the decision of the Secretary of State without protest and is fully prepared to voice Muhammadan feeling on the subject. The Committee takes exception to the restriction of the power of affiliation and to the power of the Chancellor being vested in the Governor-General in Council. It also requests that the naming of the University may be reconsidered. The names given to the two Universities are Hindu and Muhammadan Universities and there is no reason why the Government should change them into Benares and Aligarh Universities. The promise of a liberal Government grant has not affected the firmness of the Committee. It is curious that the Hindu University Committee has so far made no reply to Education Member's letter. The Maharaja of Durbhunga is now himself an official and he cannot with propriety reply to Sir Harcourt Butler. The remarkable change that is noticeable is that the Hindus appear to be content to let the Muhammadans fight out their battle for them. Only a few years ago it was the other way about. The Muhammadans did not join the Congress because they were aware that they would have their full share, if any benefits resulted from the agitation of the Congress, while they avoided being called agitators by refraining from joining the movement. When, however, the reforms were conceded they agitated for preferential treatment and succeeded in getting it. Since then they have been steadily feeling sure of their position and have lost no opportunity of asserting themselves. In deference to their protests Mr. Montagu had to withdraw the remarks he had made in the House of Commons about Pan-Islamism. On the present occasion they are right and the general Muhammadan feeling seems to be that, rather than have a crabbed and confined Muhammadan University, it will be preferable to have none at all."

Western education and Muhammadans.

15. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 3rd August 1912, has a note headed "A striking effect of Western education." Referring to the speech which Mirza Abbas Ali Beg recently made before the Indian National Association, London, against polygamy and the purdah system, the paper says that Western education has undoubtedly made Indians, especially Muhammadans, strangers to religion. Islamic practices have disappeared one by one ; the spirit of (Islamic) natianality has been destroyed ; the morals and spirits (of Muhammadans) have been lowered and sycophancy has increased. If a seat on the India Council or in a Chief Court can lead a Muhammadan to revolt against the tenets of Islam, he can on no account be a representative of the believers in the Kalima. He alone can be a true representative who sincerely believes in the Quran, and will always protect the rights and interests of Muhammadans. They should see in future that no representative of their community falls short of the above standard.

Two complaints.

16. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 7th (received on the 13th) August 1912, publishes an article, headed "Let Government consider," takiug exception to the appointment of Mr. Mallet as Secretary of the Indian Students in England, saying that he can serve no useful purpose and that the money spent on the Advisory Committee is simply thrown away. Another point, says the Vakil, that is agitating the public in India at the present time is the question of the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities. After remarking that Government's communiqué on the subject has caused feelings of deep sorrow among the people, it reports the proceedings of the Muhammadan meetings held at Multan and Sialkot to protest against Government's decision. Continuing, it observes that Muhammadans believe that the promoters of the Aligarh University Scheme wish to establish the proposed institution, not so much to benefit the community, as to raise themselves in the estimation of Government These gentlemen should, therefore, be excused for not fully entering into the feelings of their co-religionists. The desire for a University, which has become universal, "may prove the forerunner even for Government of unpleasant complications with the Islamic element, and we are afraid that this disappointment conceals highly undesirable consequences."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

His Excellency Sir O'Moore Creagh.

17. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 9th August 1912, has a note headed "Office of Commander-in-Chief in India." Adverting to the rumour about the impending retirement of Sir O'Moore Creagh, the paper states that there is absolutely no reason to believe that His Excellency intends retiring before the expiry of his term of office. Although Sir O'Moore is not as active and energetic as his immediate predecessor was, still it is wholly wrong to say that he has not proved a success. He has for instance increased the pay of native soldiers and improved their barracks, and has done other such works, for which all feel highly grateful to him. It has grieved the Native Army to learn of the chance of his prematurely retiring.

Dina Nath.

18. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 8th August 1912, publishes an article headed "The history of the Assassin's Association. Betrayal of the nation in the name of loving it. Dina Nath's strange doings." The above Association, it says, has its head-quarters at Lahore in the house of Dina Nath and works under his leadership. It has caused many an injury to the Hindu community and has driven scores of (Hindu) public workers to go into retirement. The result is that there is not a single Hindu society or (Hindu) public worker in the Punjab that can be compared to the organisation and workers of other communities. The Association in question is composed of Dina Nath, certain journalists who fawn on him, and "the four nationalists" who have, together with Dina Nath, swallowed up thousands of rupees belonging to the public, which does not, however, expose them, through fear of these roughs. These persons banded themselves together at the time when the Rs. 5,000 collected in aid of "the Jaswant Rai Defence Fund" went pro rata into their pockets ; and as this money came to them through Dina Nath the latter acts as their chief. They are the same men of whom Dina Nath has spoken in his letter in defence of Jaswant Rai (vide paragraph 16 of the Selections No. 28), and it is surprising that "the four youths, whom the Bharat Mata people regarded as fools and used as (their) tools, should now be called the living martyrs of the Punjab." They swallowed up hundreds of rupees belonging to the Bharat Mata (Society), as also the entire money subscribed towards the Panjabee Defence Fund. The Editor defends his conduct in exposing Dina Nath, as being for the good of the public and not due to any selfish motives.

Elsewhere the paper states that, in a recent issue of the Hindustan, Dina Nath speaks of the Editor of the Jhang Sial as being morally dead. His reason for coming to this conclusion is that he has been informed by one Sardar Lal Singh, who checked the account of the Pindi Das Defence Fund, that the latter is not satisfied as to Banka Dyal's having remitted Rs. 100 in aid of the Arobindo Ghosh Defence Fund. As a matter of fact, however, the Sardar has made no such remark in his written opinion.

In another place the paper publishes a note announcing the moral death of Dina Nath.

I.—Politics.

(b)—Home.

India and self-government.

1. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 15th August 1912, publishes an article headed "A thing to the interest of Government. Swaraj must be given to India." After remarking that the love of liberty is inherent in man, the paper speaks of the difficulties which alien rulers have to experience in their conquered possessions. Conquerors have to look to all the requirements of the conquered, and protect the latter against foreign invasions. This duty assumes a very onerous character when they have to rule a country larger and more numerously populated than their native land. England felt this difficulty towards the close of the nineteenth century, when the Ministers found it impossible to solve the questions pertaining to all parts of the British Empire. The British colonies were, therefore, granted self-government, with the result that the peoples concerned learned to stand on their own legs, and moreover became still more loyal to the mother country, being now in a position to prove of help to her in time of war. Indians, on the contrary, are in an utterly helpless condition; they are not only unable to do anything for themselves, but can prove of no help to Government in its hour of danger. The question of their protection is of first moment to the British Government, and Parliament has been growing anxious over it in consequence of other nations becoming more powerful from day to day. This anxiety sometimes becomes so great as to invest even trivial and ordinary things with danger. There would, however, have been no cause for it, if Indians had been given Swaraj and placed in a position to stand on their own legs. Again, if they had not been disarmed, would the British Government have expected to-day any danger from Germany or Russia? The century and a half (during which India has been under the present regime) is not a short period of time. If Government had so willed, it could have made India its greatest pillar of strength by imparting higher education to, and conferring higher rights in, her children. It should now grant Swaraj as soon as possible and thereby deepen loyalty to the throne. It is highly to be regretted that Lord Crewe is not as yet willing to give his consent to the adoption of this course.

The present condition of Indians.

2. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 15th August 1912, publishes a communication headed "Our condition." The writer—one Radha Mohan Gokalji—says that "our" present condition resembles that in which the Italians were at one time. With the exception of one or two "old and retired" gentlemen, there is no able and responsible person to guide "us" in political matters. "We" do not know even the true meaning of "reform," "revolution," "conspiracy" or "sedition," nor do "we" fully trust "our" wisdom, courage, ability, strength and destiny. Every Indian is ready to obey and follow any one who dares treat the people of this country like a flock of sheep. These characteristics have become ingrained in Indians, and are ascribable to their great love of justice and peace and to their being very law-abiding. In a section of them these habits are due to the intelligible and excusable fear of being charged with "sedition or selfishness." But it is to be regretted that this fear has overstepped all reasonable bounds. Continuing, the writer says that we cannot see prosperity until "our work, our arrangements and our internal and external organisation (bandash), whether administrative, moral, or reformative" are in accord with the changed and changing trend of the times. "Friendship, love, peacefulness and loyalty are good and praiseworthy virtues in themselves, but there is a limit." "Similarly, enmity and strife, malice and animosity, are apparently bad as reprehensible things, but have you never had to acknowledge these vices as your first duty?" The present wretched condition of India renders it necessary that Indian young men and every true lover of the country and the nation should raise a party "which may be able to remove all these evils and, working with wisdom and care, produce, throughout the country, a union which is sorely needed at present."

The appointment of Mr. Justice Rattigan as President of the Anglo-Indian Association, Lahore.

3. The Rajput Gazette (Lahore), of the 10th August 1912, has a note headed "A Judge of the (Punjab) Chief Court as President of a Political Society." It is Government's desire, says the paper, that no one among its officers should take an active part in the work of any political body. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Rattigan, however, is said to have been appointed President of the newly-founded Anglo-Indian Assocation of Lahore. If the news is well-founded, the appointment goes against the wishes of Government, for the reason that the said Association is as much a political society as the Muslim League or the National Congress. Will the Punjab Government take any action in the matter ?

The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 10th August 1912, remarks that the appointment creates a useful precedent for Indians. Hindu, Muslim, and Sikh officers of Government also can now openly join denominational political societies, while the event should serve as a lesson to those Sikh leaders who have been showing hesitation in establishing a political association for their community.

Swaraj self-government or Home Rule.

4. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 22nd August 1912 :—

"While so much has been said by Lord Crewe on India's future and so much again by Indians and others, there are two broad facts which will be admitted by all. Indian progress in future cannot be the same or on the same lines as in the past and the reforms and changes introduced lately have been devised with a view to reconcile Indian policy with Indian aspirations as far as possible. Lord Crewe himself defined the main objects of the new policy of provincial autonomy in the following terms: (1) To devolve as many of the functions of Government as can safely be entrusted to provincial Governments, (2) to employ as many Indians in the public service as can reasonably be employed, and (3) to maintain the perpetual continuance of British rule in India. Now in regard to devolution of power to the provinces, the process can go on without limit and the only thing required is that things must be safe. It will be remembered that such a complete grant of provincial autonomy which, of course, is to be subjected to popular voice through the Legislative Councils, can be perfected so as to amount to virtual self-government. Considerations of safety will include those of justice to the province itself. The second condition of employing as many Indians in the public service as can reasonably be employed will conciliate the educated people and is a measure of detail. These two will be so combined as to maintain the perpetual continuance of British rule in India. The measures of provincial devolution and employment of Indians will be carried out consistent with the maintenance of British rule and not to a point of withdrawing British rule. These explanations as indicating the new policy, no doubt give satisfaction, but they do not indicate any ultimate goal. Lord Lansdowne in the course of his speech said there was nothing new in the 'new policy' if it included only provincial devolution and employment of Indians as explained by Lord Crewe. But every one understands that the policy has changed and the people of India have understood that there is a great change in which the association of the people is to play an important part. Whether this will lead to Swaraj or self-government or home rule for India is a question on which there must doubtless be a great difference of opinion.

"Lord Crewe himself has denied any measure of self-government for India and there is no doubt that if His Lordship were to preside at the head of the India Office for one hundred years to come, he would try to maintain his policy and interpretation of Indian progress. But during that long period, many things are bound to change in India as elsewhere. The people would not remain stagnant and speechless; the principle of autonomy would not be confined to the present limits. In the Punjab Council, for instance, there would be more than five non-official elected members and the finances will not be outside popular control. Ideals of Imperialism are also bound to change as they have changed in the past and influence of international politics in Europe and Asia will certainly not be what they are now. If the French and the Dutch have been delicately woven into the fabric of British Empire within the past generation, more startling changes in the Imperial fabric and handicraft might take place, all of which neither Lord Crewe nor his angry critics in India or England will be able to appreciate. After all in political as in organic evolution, environments play a large part and all our wisdom and foresight only hold good so long as the facts of to-day and the anticipations of to-morrow are good. No doubt the permanence of British rule will be maintained at all cost. The law of self-preservation is paramount and inexorable to British life and all other life else—including Indian life, so kindly fostered by Great Britain. If the conditions of Indian life between 1858 and 1910 can introduce the question of Swaraj, or self-government or home rule for India for discussion in the Houses of Parliament, with a shade of difference between the opinions expressed in the Commons and the Lords, we may well be sanguine that progress between 1910 and 1930 or some other date in the future will not bring political servitude to the 315 millions of Indian population—notwithstanding political prophets and administrative dictators. Lord Crewe spoke of the Indian 'legend' of to-day in a singularly incredible manner, but there have been more seriously minded historians who have doubted the very existence of States and nations whose achievements have been a little out of harmony with those of moderns.

"Whether or not Lord Crewe believes in Indian Swaraj or self-government, he is certainly not positive on the trend or goal of the wide British Empire itself. The policy of this Empire has also changed as it included more and more countries and nationalities under its sway and it is not perhaps comfortable to think of this policy always—especially when dominions are parcelled out with self-governing powers and also with powers to shape Imperial policies. But the same political intuition that enables one to decide that India will never have self-governing powers, must also fix the Imperial goal for the future. Lord Crewe was not free from misgivings on this point. He said:

"We have tried the experiment of a world-wide Empire with members of our own race, and all the chapters in that experiment have not been felicitous. One broke down in 1776, when the American colonies declared their independence. Since then we have learnt some wisdom.

"Doubtless, every historical event brings with it experience of value. But what historical event in India leads to the political conclusions of the Secretary of State? 'Can anybody conceive' he asked, 'any similar (to Canada and South Africa) solution of the Imperial problem for hundreds of the millions of men of altogether different race from our own? Is it conceivable that at any time an Indian Empire could exist on the lines, say, of Australia and New Zealand, with no British officials, no British troops, and no tie of creed or of blood, which takes the places of those material bonds?' But does not the very difficulty of the situation suggest answers to the connundrum? What is the political destiny of any large nation alien in race, religion and blood which is included within the British Empire and which is to thrive and prosper subject to just laws of progress and that cannot get out of the Imperial control? Swaraj will not do, self-government cannot be granted and home rule is out of the question. Can any one imagine that India will live on provincial crumbs of charity as more employments in public service? Does Lord Crewe know of any nation that has lived and prospered on hopes of this kind? The fact is that Lord Crewe is anxious to make his Tory critics believe that he has introduced such changes in India which in reality are only old policies renovated. They lead India to nowhere and India cannot move, except in a groove, remaining where she is, content with the crumbs of office thrown to those who complain. If this is a sample of political destiny devised by Liberal statesmanship, we can only pity the fall of liberalism from the days of Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman whose axium was: 'No good Government by aliens can be a substitute for Government by the people themselves.'"

III.—Native States.

Kashmir affairs.

5. The Rajput Gazette (Lahore), of the 10th August 1912, publishes a communication headed "Who is responsible for creating ill-feeling between Hindu and Muhammadan subjects of the Jammu and Kashmir State?" The writer—Abu Zafar, Kashmiri—says that Hindu and Muhammadan newspapers in the Punjab may attack each other; but that that is no reason why they should aim at Native States, particularly the Jammu and Kashmir State, where neither the Maharaja nor his subjects make any destinction between Hindus and Muhammadans. Indeed, His Highness the Maharaja has on several occasions declared that the wave of bigotry that has passed over the Punjab has not in the least affected his dominion. It is, however, to be greatly regretted, that, since the persons of new light have usurped the rights of Hindu and Muhammadan inhabitants of the State, and have gained a footing in every State Department, the latter are not only bewailing the loss of their rights, but are also afraid lest the outsiders should cause a split between them. These outsiders are in the habit of having most ordinary news, connected with the State, published in newspapers of their own liking in an exaggerated form and with their own pungent remarks. As an instance in point, the writer refers to a note recently published by the Panjabee and the Hindustan alleging that the Muhammadan tailors of Jammu had gone on strike, and says that the papers named have done this without making any enquiry whatsoever as to the veracity of the allegation. The Maharaja, however, instituted an enquiry, and found that the allegation had absolutely no foundation in fact. After remarking that the Rajput Gazette and the Kashmiri Magazine have long been urging that the subjects of the Kashmir State should be allowed to enjoy their rights and be saved from the machinations of outsiders who are ousting them from (services &c., in the State), the writer says that this has now become easy, seeing that education is making headway in the State. Besides it may also be borne in mind that, if the number of outsiders is lessened, the danger of Hindu-Muhammadan dissensions in the State is likely to be reduced also.

Commenting on the above the paper states that it is a matter for thankfulness that the news about the strike of tailors at Jammu has proved to be false. It agrees with its correspondent that the outsiders, who have usurped the rights of the inhabitants of the State, are responsible for giving currency to such mischievous and disquieting news. Indeed, seeing that the inhabitants of the State are claiming their rights, the outsiders have become so alarmed that they are now trying to create dissensions among them in order to divert their attention from their rights. In these circumstances it is advisable to devise means to lessen the number and influence of outsiders in the employ of the Maharaja.

Income Tax in Bahawalpur.

6. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 20th August 1912 :—

"In our issue of the 16th ultimo we briefly referred to the attempt made by the Council of Regency in the Bahawalpur State to impose a new tax called income tax on His Highness's subjects. From the facts that have since been placed at our disposal we have no hesitation in stating that the Punjab Government has blundered in permitting the Council to entertain the idea. The most important point to be remembered in this connection is that during the minority of a ruling prince it is the British Resident or Political Agent that is the de facto ruler. A Council of Regency is a mere administrative body. Its powers are extremely limited even in matters of routine. It has absolutely no power either to abolish an existing tax or to impose a new tax. Not merely in Bahawalpur, but in every State throughout India questions of budget, new schemes of a reproductive nature, revenue, finance and taxation, not to say of the appointment and dismissal of principal officials, are left to the Political Agent or Resident. This being so we are astonished to find that in a primitive State like Bahawalpur the levy of income tax should have been seriously taken up by the Council of Regency. The Punjab Government should certainly be aware that on no less than three occasions before, the scheme was abandoned on scrutiny, and that the latest abortive attempt was in 1904, in the reign of the late Nawab Bahawal Khan V. Between 1904 and 1912 surely the people have not prospered in so extraordinary a manner as to justify this taxation, especially when the revenue of the State already yields a surplus of close upon Rs. 10 lakhs per annum and when there is in the State an accumulated surplus of over Rs. 60 lakhs, excluding the outlay on the Khanpur-Chachran Railway. We do not think that the people of Bahawalpur have escaped plague and seasonal vicissitudes more than their neighbours in the British provinces to be able to bear extra taxation. On the contrary there is abundant evidence to show that the industrial and commercial activities of the people has greatly diminished in recent years. Their sources of income have been crippled and the opportunities of employment in State service curtailed. If an income tax should be imposed upon any one in the State it should be restricted to the 80 per cent. of officials who have gone there from British territory. The anomaly of income tax exists in no State except in Baroda where its retention is justified by the abolition of a hundred other small and irksome levies to which it was once subject. We appeal to the Government of India to interfere and knock the proposal on the head."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The jhatka-halal question.

7. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 16th, 17th, 18th, 20th and 21st August 1912, has articles headed "Justice in the Lyallpur district." It is difficult to say, writes the paper, what evil days the jhatka-halal controversy is to bring to this unfortunate country. Muhammadans ruled India at one time and non-Muslims used then to abstain from doing things likely to wound their religious feelings. Those days have, however, gone by ; and the Prophet's followers have lost the sceptre and have been reduced to the condition of slaves. It is now idle on their part to expect that their non-Muhammadan fellow countrymen, who were once their subjects but are now their equals—nay, have begun to shame them—should continue to respect them to the extent of abstaining from decapitating goats. They have no right to stand in the way of Sikhs or of those Hindus who may desire to use jhatka flesh. It is now foolish in them to say that jhatka meat being forbidden food (for them) they cannot bear to see it exposed for sale. A people who live in a country, of which the rulers and ¾ths of inhabitants are of another religion, cannot fittingly utter such words. Muhammadans abominate jhatka flesh owing to its use having been prohibited in the Quran. But does not the prohibition extend also to liquor—gallons of which are now drunk in every lane and shops for the sale of which are to be found everywhere—and to pork, which is imported in tins, sold at all shops dealing in English articles and eaten at hotels? Similarly, it is idle on the part of Hindus to expect that while they themselves should be free to decapitate goats, the believers in the kalima should be prevented from killing cows. It is high time that they gave up the idea that they can forcibly keep Muhammadans—and that also under British rule—out of the legitimate right of cow-killing. The only solution of the difficulty is for Hindus and Musalmans, out of regard for one other's feelings, to discontinue openly decapitating goats and slaughtering kine respectively. So long, however, as they do not follow this course of conduct, it is the duty of the authorities, in the event of a conflict between the two communities, to reconcile them only on the above terms. Any officer behaving differently not only creates bad blood between Hindus and Muhammadans, but also casts an ugly shadow on (British) justice.

"The Hindu boycott of Musalmans has assumed another form. For some time past attempts have been made to engineer a boycott of Muslim fruit and vegetable-sellers, Muslim musicians and even Muslim public criers. Open efforts have also been made to boycott Aghakhani Hindus, who have become converts to the Ismaili sect, and to force them to resume Hinduism. And now Hindus are being publicly called upon to renounce meat slaughtered by Muslims and have recourse to jhatka meat. The Punjab Government lately appeared to express its disapproval through the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore of any endeavours made with a view to induce Musalmans to take food prepared by Muhammadans only, notwithstanding the fact that Islam enjoins upon its followers to have only such edibles as are prepared by their co-religionists or by Christians or Jews. But the Punjab Government has not yet evinced its displeasure at the flagrant attempts now being made to put pressure upon Hindus to boycott the Musalmans, notwithstanding the fact that no claim of religious sanction has been advanced for the campaign even by its organisers. But while hoping that the authorities will deal with the offenders as they deserve, we beg to invite pointed attention to the jhatka question. Only a few years ago there were hardly any jhatka meat shops in the Punjab. The Sikhs slaughtered animals in this fashion in out-of-the-way places or in Native States, but almost all meat-eating Hindus in the British Province used halal meat. It is from 1897 that the jhatka question has come into prominence, though it is for the last few months that it has entered upon a very acute phase. Jhatka meat shops are now being asked for in places where they were never dreamt of. The innovation has been followed in some places by disturbances of the peace and has invariably resulted in an embitterment of the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. The district authorities are apparently without any authoritative guide in the matter, and while new jhatka shops have been disallowed in one town, Hindus or Sikhs have been permitted to open them in another. Wherever the permission has been accorded, the Hindu press of the Province has acclaimed the decision as another brilliant example of the impartiality of the British Raj; but wherever the decision has been in favour of the Musalmans, it has thrown our friends into hysterics and made them deplore the gullibility of the British race. It is asserted that jhatka meat and halal meat occupy the same footing, that in justice to the Hindus as much facility should be afforded for the sale of the former as is given for the sale of the latter. Hindus are being called upon not to eat halal meat where the sale of jhatka meat is forbidden. And at the same time the Local Government is being invoked to pronounce an authoritative decision which may serve as a guide to all district officials and put an end to conflicting orders.

"That an authoritative pronouncement is urgently called for no one who is conversant with contemporary politics can deny. Musalmans are as much solicitous for it as Hindus. But the Musalmans feel confident that Government will not regard the party which clamours most as the one necessarily in the right. At all events, it is not within the competence of Hindus to decide questions of Muhammadan law. The one thing that deserves the earnest attention of the Government is the fact that the Muslims look upon jhatka meat in the same way as the Hindus regard beef. Jhatka meat is as much forbidden food to Musalmans as pork. It can never be classed with halal meat, which is eaten by thousands of Hindus without feeling any religious scruples. Its sale deserves to be subjected to as many restrictions as is the sale of beef. The decision in Nowshera, where a jhatka shop has been allowed to be opened in spite of Muslim protests, but at the same time the beef market has been placed in close proximity to the town, proceeds on the basis of meting out equal treatment to both races. Such a course is, however, likely to be attended by disturbances in places where the people are not so much enlightened. The dictates of justice and impartiality, at all events, demand uniformity of treatment as regards jhatka meat and beef. Either both should be free from shackles or both should be fettered. If jhatka meat shops are found in the thoroughfares of some towns, that does not mean that they do not offend the Musalmans. Muslims feel their existence in Lahore as keenly as the Hindus would those of beef shops. But while jhatka shops are being freely opened in some towns, even the unexposed sale of halal meat is being forbidden in a town like Jagadhri, which contains a considerable population of not only Muhammadans but of meat-eating Hindus. Surely it is time that such flagrant anomalies came to an end. We therefore join our Hindu contemporaries in their appeal to the Punjab Government for an authoritative decision and hope it will be one founded on equity and reason. It may not give satisfaction to both parties, but it should set the question at rest and allay perturbed pulic feeling."

The Vedas and revelation.

8. The Indar (Lahore), of the 9th (received on the 20th) August 1912, publishes a leader headed "The Vedas and revelation—VI." In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 14 of Selections No. 23), the paper says that Dayanandis' idea of revelation is undoubtedly appreciated in the world of hypocrites, atheists, fools and blockheads. But no honest and truthful person can, after accepting this idea, believe, in the true sense of the term, in the existence of God. "To make matters worse, if we regard the existing Vedas as being the word of God, it becomes incumbent on us to bid farewell, together with such Vedas, even to the God (i.e., the Vedic God) who claims to disseminate wickedness among mankind by imparting dangerous and mischievous teachings." There are only very few verses in these scriptures which can be ascribed to God: the large majority not only provides for the gratification of baser passions, but in some cases also contains grossly mischievous verses. A large number of the Vedic mantras teach rapine and bloodshed, and the dissemination of the existing Vedas cannot, therefore, bring any peace to man. The Editor takes his stand on the commentary written by Swami Dayanand on the Vedas. If, however, this commentary is wrong, he will have to look upon the scriptures in question, on the authority of the commentaries by Mahidhara, Sayanacharya and others, as the books of Vam Margis. His argument is that Swami Dayanand's refutation of the statement that the writers of the Vedas were buffoons, cheats and demons, is that this assertion is based on the commentaries of Mahidhara and (some) other Vam Margis. The Editor is not, however, prepared to throw the Swami's commentary overboard; he believes the latter to have been a (great) Vedic scholar. Nevertheless, his contention is, that while Mahidhara and others proved the Vedas to countenance Vam Marg, a learned man like Swami Dayanand could show no such lofty teachings in those books as to prove them to be from God. The teachings contained in the Vedas are quite the reverse of such as could be attributed to the Holy God. The Swami laid the world under a deep debt of obligation by publishing his commentary on the Vedas, which put an end to the wickedness which had been wrought in the name of the said scriptures since ancient times. This being so, it was (lit. is) "a highly dangerous sin" in him to acknowledge the religious books in question to be the word of God and to teach others to follow his example. It is inexplicable that he could do this violence to his conscience; and this ugly blot will remain on his name for ever. He acknowledged the Vedas to be revealed books only to vanquish Christians and Muhammadans, which was a great sin on his part.

Modern scientific discoveries and Islam.

9. The Arya Musafir (Jullundur), for July (received on the 16th August) 1912, has a letter headed "Muhammadanism and the new philosophy." The writer, Sham Lal, says that Islam is a memorial of Muhammad, who disturbed the world's peace 1,330 years ago with his powerful sword. The Quran, he adds, may be called an index to the Prophet's achievements; it tells us that it was composed to solve the difficulties of the founder of Islam. It indeed teaches nothing about God or matter, while, in not a few places, it represents the position of the Deity as being highly "dangerous and shameful." It (undoubtedly) contains many a word in His praise, but the object (Muhammad had) in view was to frighten unbelievers, gain his own selfish ends and raise the position of the Quran. At all events, there can be no denying the fact that it uses words in respect of God which cannot be applied even to a tyrant or hypocrite. It is inexplicable how people can speak of the Quran, which abounds in unfounded stories and many misleading tenets, as being a book from on high. The writer then goes on to state that Dr. Muhammad Husain, an Ahmadi of Lahore, recently delivered a lecture before the Anjuman-i-Hidayat-i-Islam, Agra, on "The future progress of Islam." After remarking that the Doctor made a number of mis-statements and used most disrespectful language about the Arya Samaj and its founder, he reports that the Doctor told Muhammadans to feel joyful at "the new philosophy" playing havoc with the beliefs of the Samaj. The correspondent is very glad that God, who had hitherto, perhaps, been engaged in marring Islam with the aid of philosophy, has brought victory to that faith by laying the foundation of "the new philosophy." Next he quotes an extract from the lecture, in which Dr. Muhammad Hussain endeavoured to show that certain recent scientific discoveries had proved that matter was neither eternal nor imperishable. After stating that the Doctor left it to Aryas to decide how "the new philosophy" would affect their beliefs, the writer says that it cannot in any way damage the doctrines of the Arya Samaj. Again, if matter is perishable, what is to become of (the Muslim) paradise, which—although, according to the late Sir Sayad Ahmad, it is worse than a chakla (prostitutes' quarter)—Muhammad has used in the Quran as a bait for the faithful? This paradise contains houris, ghilmans, and streams of wine and milk, but if matter is perishable what is to become of all these? Similarly, what is to happen to the hell with which the Prophet has threatened non-Muhammadans in the Quran? As a matter of fact that book only exists in the world because of the promises it makes to man by inventing these stories of hell and heaven. If these promises prove to be false, the Quran also must cease to exist; and in the event of its proving to be a false book, Islam also will be set down as a false religion.

The Punjab Hindu Conference.

10. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 23rd August 1912:—

"Lala Moti Sagar, Honorary Secretary to the next Punjab Hindu Conference, which will be held at Delhi during the Dussehra holidays, writes that opportunity should be taken for inviting other Hindu leaders to discuss the All-India Hindu Association which was established at Allahabad in 1910 but which has so far produced no results. We have grave doubts whether there will be any response to the invitation. No definite programme of work was ever decided upon. Work on the lines of the Muslim League would have been out of the question as the Hindus have never asked for preferential treatment. What they have consistently demanded is a fair field and no favour and they cannot now adopt another course. The idea of an All-India Hindu Association met with official discouragement and most of the wealthy Hindu landowners held aloof. At present there is a marked desire on the part of both Hindus and Muhammadans to sink their differences and to work together for the common weal. That in itself is no argument against the establishment of an All-India Hindu Association which may in fact help the work of unification. Lala Moti Sagar's idea is an excellent one and we hope it will receive the consideration it deserves."

The Muslim League, London, and Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

11. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 17th August 1912:—

"The All-India Muslim League, which has its base of operations in London, has just described a wonderful somersault in the flaming firmanent of Muslim politics. In its annual report presented at its general meeting the other day it says that the course of events in Tripoli and Persia—implying pressure of strong nations on the weak—is doing a great deal to create solidarity of interest and sentiment among the different nationalities of India. Indeed, a solidarity of interest and sentiment among the different nationalities of India would hardly be possible but for the course of events in Tripoli and Persia. This beautiful threat, which is wholly gratuitious, is worthily supplemented by a call for 'fresh efforts for a Hindu-Muslim modus vivendi.' Indeed, the enthusiasm for the new cause is almost surprising in its intensity. An interchange of delegates is seriously proposed between the Congress and the League.

"The report further suggests a mutual arrangement for avoiding sacrifice of kine only 'where Muhammadans are in a minority.' In return the Hindus will have to stop their opposition to the Urdu language—even in Hindi speaking districts—as well as to allow Muhammadans 'peaceably to enjoy the constitutional privileges accorded to them.' But who has ever objected to Muslims having adequate representation on Councils and local bodies? What is objected to is the injustice done to Hindus and other non-Muslim communities by the over-representation of Muslims in the Councils and local bodies. To ask the Hindus to hold their tongues on this particular aspect of the question is rather a large order on their gratitude for a small favour. Unfortunately we cannot bring ourselves to believe that this sudden and overwhelming affection for the Hindus is wholly disinterested. As long as it suited its purpose the Muslim League left no stone unturned to keep apart Hindus and Muhammadans. It now suits its purpose to make 'fresh efforts for a Hindu-Muslim modus vivendi.' The basis of friendship ought surely to be more stable than a weather-cock."

VI.—Legislation.

The Indian Press Act, 1910.

12. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 22nd August 1912 :—

"The summary provisions of the Indian Press Act of 1910 have been adopted as a preventive measure, say the official apologists. But the idea of prevention itself has been more or less conjectural and is based upon a possibility rather than on an actuality. Section 4 (1) punishes an individual, for 'words, signs or visible representations which are likely or may have a tendency directly or indirectly, whether by reference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise. . . . . to bring into hatred or contempt. . . . . the Government established by Law. . . . . ' Can anything be more opposed to the elementary principles of jurisprudence? The section says it is not necessary to prove that the Government established by law has been brought, or that it would be brought, into hatred or contempt. It authorises summary punishment if in the opinion of the Local Government the words are 'likely' or 'may have a tendency' to bring about a remote contingency. For every ten authorities who may agree that certain words 'may have a tendency' to bring about the contingency, there may be in the country twenty others who agree that the words may not have such a tendency. None the less is the individual concerned punished by being deprived of his hard earned savings and his circumstances may not permit him to produce the burden of proof thrown upon him. In the case of the Punjab Advocate if the publisher is unable to secure assistance, financial or professional, to prove his case in a court of law, the public sympathy will be entirely with him for the reason that he has been condemned unheard. The Government certainly stands to gain by leaving both the determination of the offence and punishment to a properly constituted tribunal."

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

A complaint in regard to a judgment by the Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court.

13. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 10th August 1912, reports that the Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court while delivering judgment in a certain case, in which some policemen belonging to the Roberts thana, Mirzapur, were charged with having beaten a villager to death, asserted that any one (in India) would willingly kill even a friend in order to involve the police in trouble. Mistakes, adds the paper, creep into judicial findings, but a Chief Justice ought not to cut the throats of the people by making such a dangerous and one-sided assertion.

(b)—Police.

The Police.

14. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 20th August 1912 :—

"The question of police reforms in India comes up for frequent examination. It is inevitable under the circumstances. Until the people are satisfied with the reforms introduced, they cannot rest contented with the police. It is seven years since the Government of India issued orders sanctioning reforms costing nearly a crore and a half of rupees. Much of this money has been already allotted and reforms are carried out in name. But has the country been benefited? Have the police vagaries stopped or at any rate materially decreased? It will be remembered from the time of the appointment of the Police Commission in 1903 and the issue of the resolution of the Government of India in 1905, the informed section of the public have been sceptical about the effect of the reforms recommended. The rank and file of the force is still recruited from the inefficient and illiterate classes. Large increases of pay have been given to the controlling officers, but the main force actually dealing with the people and engaged both in preventive and detective work, is very little affected by the reform. Not only the people and the press, but the judicial courts continue to make the most scathing charges against the conduct of the police in cases that come up for open enquiry. Cases of extortion and ill-treatment have been of late tried more largely and the police offenders punished. All these show that abuses exist very largely still and the Government efforts to reform the force must continue with unabated zeal.

"Mr. D. E. Wacha, whose articles have been issued in a pamphlet form by the Leader Press, has done valuable public work by bringing into prominent notice some of the vagaries of the police and the faults in the force, especially those connected with recruitment. We have already approved of his suggestion that the pay of the force should be raised above Rs. 15 and policemen should be drawn from the ranks of young men who study as far as the Matriculation standard but fail to secure a pass and who would be glad to accept from Rs. 15 to Rs. 20 a month. They are men with a sense of right and wrong, with moral consciousness, ideas of duty and can be trusted to do the policing with great efficiency. As education spreads in the country a larger number of men will be available and in the place of the illiterate and corrupt ten-rupee policemen, if we put the twenty-rupee literate and moral men drawn from the middle and secondary schools, we may expect far better results. And the increased cost would be justified by the good results. The matter is certainly worth consideration. In the report on the Material and Moral Progress of India for 1910-11 we find that the police work has by no means been very efficient, though improvements are visible during good seasons. The organised series of dacoities carried on in defiance of all authority in the Punjab at once shows the futility of police protection. If we only knew the number of complaints made by the people against police failings in the country, we would understand the nature and volume of the delinquency. But as things are Government have yet to carry out some of the wholesome schemes of reform urged. We have frequently drawn attention to the criticisms of police work made by judicial officers. It is not known whether every case is noticed by the Inspector-General of Police and action taken to punish the force. We suspect that this is not done, at any rate in all cases. Moreover in cases where policemen are actually tried and convicted for various offences, a general warning to the entire force by circulating the facts of such cases, would have a deterrent effect. But we are afraid this is not done. The publication of a few cases in the Police Gazette will have little effect—unless this is done in a special manner by opening a page for warnings with instructions to officers to read them to the majority of the illiterate members of the force. Copies of this should also be sent to the press so that the people may know what steps the authorities are taking to warn the erring force and to reform the men.

* * * * *

"The police offences are increasing too, and in many cases it is difficult to replace men in offices which become vacant by resignations. In Bombay the difficulty of recruiting is very great. The number of punishments rose from 3,094 to 3,181. The percentage of resignations increased from 4·5 to 5·1. In the Punjab, during 1910, we read that 3 officers and 136 men were dismissed as compared with 3 officers and 114 men in 1909. Minor departmental punishments were inflicted on 1,308 officers and men as against 1,018 in the previous year. Moreover the number of judicial punishments was 69 as against 52. It is, of course, recorded that the increase in dismissals from the force and in judicial punishments is largely due to closer supervision. But a continued increase cannot show a state of affairs which admits of any permanent improvement in character and morals. The whole question is one of carrying out radical reforms. Government and the departments must take vigorous action in making an example of all known delinquents of the force, by publishing the facts and by recruiting more capable men from whom a more responsible work can be expected. The Government of India are well aware of the state of public complaints and of the very imperfect nature of the 1905 reforms. They ought to be convinced that without a radical reform of the rank and file of the force, the general character and efficiency of the police cannot come up to public expectations. As the crime does not show a tendency to decrease, except by chance, and as the various improvements sanctioned by the Government have not produced the desired effects, we hope that futher reforms will be adopted in the light of facts and criticisms made in the Imperial Council in February last."

(d)—Education.

15. The Millat (Lahore), of the 9th (received on the 14th) August 1912, publishes an article headed "A warning." Government's recent decision, says the paper, regarding the scope of Hindu and Muhammadan Universities, concerns Hindus and Muhammadans equally, but the Hindu and

The proposed racial Universities.

Muslim Presses have behaved quite differently in the matter. The decision has quite upset some Muslim newspapers, which do not realise the real aim of a University. A certain Muslim paper but recently started in Amritsar (the Muin), whose Editor has always been under suspicion, has, says the Millat, published within black borders an article on the proposed Aligarh University. May God indeed protect the press which has among its members one whose Editor is as foolish and as ignorant as the Editor of this paper ! The Hindu Press is more clever ; Hindu papers do not write a single word about their own University ; they devote column upon column to the Muslim University and reprint with their own pungent remarks the vigorous articles of Muslim papers on the subject. They are even going to the length of privately inciting certain foolish Muhammadan papers to write about the question. What can be the worth of a journalist who, at the instigation of his youthful Hindu confrères, is unnecessarily writing unjustifiable remarks against Government ? As a matter of fact those impulsive and only-nominally-Muhammadan papers which the Hindus are lauding to the skies—in order to gain their own ends and prejudice Government against Muhammadans—are not true Muhammadan papers, seeing that their conduct is opposed to the laws of Islam. Continuing, the paper describes how Hindu journalists are paying money to Muslim newspapers, and how Dina Nath recently offered Rs. 1,000 to the Zamindar and Rs. 500 to the proprietor, Rifah-i-'Am Steam Press, Lahore, in part payment of the securities demanded from them, although he did not pay a single pie to the Jhang Sial or the Musafir (Agra, United Provinces), when these papers also were called upon to furnish securities. Muhammadans, however, cannot see through these tricks, and are ignorant that their community is going to be disgraced by two or three selfish and unworthy members. It is a pity that the Muhammadan community does not see that it is being deceived, and that unmitigated debauchees and selfish schemers are trying to hold its destinies in their own hands.

The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 12th August 1912, publishes an article headed "The Aligarh Muslim University." Instead of being grateful (to Government) for granting them permission to establish a Muslim University at Aligarh, says the paper, Muhammadans are giving expression to their feelings of disappointment and indignation and are accusing Government of faithlessness and dishonesty. Government, it observes ironically, is indeed dishonest ; and what benefit can Muhammadans expect from it, seeing that it professes Christianity and not Islam ? Can its dishonesty go further, seeing that it gave no help to Turks during the Turko-Italian war, took no steps to prevent Italians committing brigandage (in Tripoli), and paid no heed to the feelings of 7 crores of Indian Muhammadans in the matter ? The paper then goes on to say that, if such be the views of men like Nawab Vicar-ul-Mulk, the Right Hon'ble Saiyid Amir Ali and of the Aligarh Institute Gazette, it is idle to expect that the Observer and the Zamindar will take a sensible view of the subject. After giving an extract from the Nawab's letter published in the Aligarh Institute Gazette protesting against the Government's order limiting the scope of the Muslim University, the paper says that nothing can be more bitter than the attack which the Nawab has made on the motives of Government in his communication—the Nawab has beaten Government with a shoe wrapped in a shawl. If, as the Nawab says, Muhammadans give up the idea of establishing a University, it is the Aligarh Muhammadans, and not Government, who will be to blame. The paper then expresses a hope that the Hindu leaders will not go so far as to give expression to their feelings of "indignation and disaffection" at the decision of Government regarding their University, but will take the present opportunity to thank Government for accepting the principle of a national University. They should bear in mind that, if, taking advantage of the concessions of Government, they manage the affairs of the Benares University with such ability and foresight as to make it a success and productive of excellent results, the scope of the University will no doubt gradually be so far extended, as to allow the affiliation of Schools and Colleges of the United Provinces and afterwards perhaps throughout the entire country. In conclusion the paper remarks that it is through the efforts of Government, at whose conduct in limiting the scope of the Aligarh University Muhammadans are "indignant and disaffected," that the Aligarh College is now in existence. Is it not sufficient for the Aligarh party to realise that the Government is honest?

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 15th August 1912, publishes an article headed "The Muslim University." Adverting to the meeting of the Constitution Committee of the University, held at Lucknow on the 11th instant, the paper says that the proceedings show that this time the members of the Committee have paid the fullest regard to the feelings and demands of their community, and have refused to bow their heads to Government's "settled facts." Commenting on the Secretary of State's decision that the University is to have a limited jurisdiction and that it should be called not the Muslim, but the Aligarh University, it remarks that, as a local institution, the M. A.-O. College has proved of much service to Muhammadans, and its replacement by the University of Aligarh only means that they will lose the benefit which it has been conferring on them as a College. It is difficult to say what poison there is in the word "Muslim," that Government does not like to see it prefixed to "University." Muhammadans want a University whose name will reveal "Nationality" and whose courses of study will revive their religious traditions. If the Government can give them a National University, it should do so; otherwise they will use the Universities which already exist in the country. The leaders of the Muslim community have decided to submit a final petition to the Government of India on the subject. If it is granted, well and good; otherwise, it should be concluded that Muhammadans cannot be given a National University. The Secretary of State has also decided that the Viceroy should not be Chancellor of the Muslim University, but that all the powers proposed for the Chancellor in the constitution should be exercised by the Governor-General in Council. This means that Muhammadans will have the right to elect a so-called Chancellor, but that he will not exercise his power while "his life will be in the hand of the Governor-General in Council." That is to say, the Muslim University will always be under the influence of Government. It is indeed difficult to see what military and political considerations require that the powers of Chancellor should be vested in the Governor-General in Council.

The Observer (Lahore), of the 17th August 1912, publishes the following letter from Ahad Shah of Ludhiana :—

"When the scheme for the establishment of a Muslim University was projected and His Highness the Aga Khan paid a visit to Lahore with a view to collect subscriptions, some men saw at once that the object aimed at was impossible of realisation. A few of them went so far as to hint that there was no need of such a University and that the congregation of Muhammadans and the enthusiasm manifested by them on the occasion of Sir Aga Khan's visit to Lahore were ill-advised. The voice of these well-wishers of the community was, however, drowned in the chorus of welcome that greeted the proposal. But though the Indian Muhammadans, reposing implicit reliance on their leaders, have collected nearly 33 lakhs for the proposed University, the predictions of those who foresaw the failure of the scheme have been amply fulfilled.

"The decision of Government to limit the scope of the proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities will no doubt cause disappointment to both communities, but a dispassionate consideration of the matter will show that the decision has been dictated by prudential consideration, for the first thing which a foreign Government has, naturally and with perfect justification, to consider is its own stability. How can the British Government remain blind to the treatment meted out to it by educated people? Can Government ignore the intemperate spirit still exhibited in Bengal and the dacoities committed for the most part by educated people, which are dignified with the title of political dacoities? Can Government lose sight of the trouble in store for it in the case of a general diffusion of education in India, which will make them averse to following their ancestral occupations and plunge them into poverty and discontent? Can Government forget the fact that only two lakhs of people, inhabitants of an island 6,000 miles away, are governing a population of three hundred and twenty millions, who have with their rulers neither community of religion nor community of race? Under these circumstances and in view of the fact that half the administration of the country is carried on through the Universities, it is impossible for Government to withdraw its control from education and allow Hindus and Muhammadans to become absolutely independent in the matter of denominational Universities.

"Granting that the people of this country (both Hindus and Muslims) are sincerely loyal to the British Raj, a prudent Government will not, in view of the above considerations, relax its precautions. Any one, therefore, who is not afraid of looking facts in the face, who sees both sides of a question and is guided by justice, will not resent the decision of the Government. He will realise that the decision has been dictated by prudence and that a foreign Government is perfectly justified in, and stands in urgent need of, such precaution.

"Moreover, the present condition of Indian Muhammadans makes it obligatory on Government to observe these precautions. As long as Sir Syed lived, the Aligarh College was popular with the Muslims and was also regarded as absolutely safe and trustworthy by Government. His successors, however, though they won the esteem and confidence of their own community, have exceeded the limits of prudence within which Sir Syed used to confine himself. It is an acknowledged fact that Government never found a single speech or writing of Sir Syed as open to objection. The speech delivered at Lucknow by the late Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, however, and the reception given to it by Sir now (Lord) Anthony Macdonnel are a matter of history, while some of the articles written in these days by Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk have been regarded as ill advised even by Muhammadans. And to crown it all, the students of the Aligarh College are now collecting subscriptions in aid of their Muslim brethren in Tripoli. No Musalman can criticise adversely the policy pursued by the last two Secretaries of the M. A.-O. College Trustees or the practical sympathy exhibited by the scholars of the college with their afflicted brethren outside India. The present writer, for one, regards these things as praiseworthy from the Islamic standpoint. But prudence demands that as long as a gentleman holds the office of Secretary to the M. A.-O. College Trustees, or a young man is a student at the Institution, they should both abstain from airing these sentiments. Both these classes of people should confine themselves to the affairs of the College and to their studies only.

"The decision of Government in regard to the University will cause disappointment to the Indian Muhammadans. The writer shares this sorrow as a member of the community. It would, however, be well to exercise more caution in future."

The Observer (Lahore), of the 21st August 1912, has the following :—

"It is daily becoming increasingly manifest that the Muslim feeling about the proposed University is both deep and unanimous, that the Musalmans will not accept a purely local University, and that there are strong and cogent reasons for this attitude of the community. Muhammadan newspapers of all shades of opinion have written on the question with rare unanimity and all sections of the community are agreed in refusing to treat Lord Crewe's decision as final. The proceedings of the recent meeting of the Constitution Committee have made this point absolutely clear; while the reply of the Committee to Sir Harcourt Butler's letter to the Hon'ble the Raja of Mahmudabad reflects the Muslim attitude with striking accuracy. After this, and especially on a careful perusal not only of the resolutions adopted at the meeting but also the speeches made thereat, there cannot be the slightest room for doubting the grave disappointment of the Musalmans and the firmness of their resolve in the matter. We may repeat that the reasons given in Sir Harcourt Butler's letter as having influenced the decision of the Secretary of State are not all convincing and we make bold to say that Sir Harcourt has completely failed in making out a case for the Government. We read the document in vain for a reply to the Muslim contention that if the Aligarh University is to be a local University only, it will not bring them any advantage corresponding to the heavy sacrifice of money and energy which its establishment on this restricted scale will entail. That appears to us to be the crux of the situation; and so long as the Government of India, or for the matter of that the Secretary of State, cannot show that the University which they want to give the Musalmans will not be a costly luxury, merely a shadow without the substance, so long will they be unable to reconcile the Muhammadan community to the idea of a local University. Indeed, that sentiment has been deeply perturbed and the orders of Government have created profound disappointment. We are glad the members of the Committee have risen to the occasion and have performed their duty right well by a frank interpretation of the wishes of their people. There is absolutely no charm in the word University and if we cannot be permitted to establish a real and living University, we shall not start any at all. In that eventuality we shall either abandon the idea of the University altogether and launch some other comprehensive and ambitious scheme of scholarships and provincial colleges for our benefit. Or, as was suggested by more than one speaker, we may hope to seriously think over the means of establishing a University independently of State aid. In any case, the question is a most momentous one, Muhammadan feeling is keen, and the Constitution Committee has shown wisdom as well as firmness in making a bold stand for the wishes of the community. We agree fully with an esteemed correspondent who, in speaking of the proceedings of the meeting, says that 'the thing is historical' and, unusual though the firmness displayed be, we are positive, it was no more than what was demanded by the exigencies of the moment and the necessity of the situation.

"We publish in other column the full text of the reply of the Constitution Committee of the Muslim University to Sir Harcourt Butler. It is on the lines of the resolutions passed by the Committee on the first day and as such cannot fail to command the approval of the Indian Muhammadans. We need hardly state that the reply reflects the views of an overwhelming majority of subscribers to the University Fund, who will have no University of their own rather than an emasculated institution more under Government control and more expensive than the existing Universities established by Government.

* * * * * * *

"The next day's meeting was, at the suggestion of Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan, treated as not open to the public. We are very sorry for this decision as well as for the mover of the resolution. As a consequence of this, the proceedings of the meeting have not become public, except the portion that has been communicated to the Press. It has, however, transpired that a resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mian Muhammad Shafi thanking the Government for its offer of a grant in the event of Musalmans acquiescing in its proposals was negatived by a majority as inopportune and premature."

"A serious doubt arises as to why the Moslems started their University scheme. Was it for sound learning or for anything else? The denial by the Government of India of certain powers to the University has raised so much angry protest that it is very doubtful if the Muhammadans have a truly educational aspiration. The educational status of Muhammadans is very small. They occupy but the lowest rung of the ladder of learning. It is more becoming that they are guided by Government than that they seek a will of their own. Their fiery spirit rather than their profound wisdom betrays them in this hour of trial.

"A people who were long used to have a gentle pat on the back cannot take a denial with good grace. After treating them with special favours and separatist benefits, Government have for the first time run counter to the dearest wishes of Moslem's hearts in regard to the Aligarh University. It is not a matter of right and wrong. Moslems, like kings, could do no wrong and their decisions have been always right. For the first time they have been told they are wrong and it is a mighty question how that has to be accepted. It is a cruel situation both to the paternal Government and the dear little pet children. Every Moslem mind is burning with righteous indignation and the barometer of loyalty—what degree does it mark now?

"I hope that better counsel will prevail and both Hindus and Muhammadans will accept the decision of the Government of India. It may not be very liberal, but we must not ask Government too much at a time. It is far better to be guided by the Government of India than to stand apart and ask for privileges which cannot be granted now. What were Hindus and Muhammadans fifty years back? But for the Government efforts to educate the people in spite of religious differences, the Muhammadans would not have learnt that they wanted a University. Consistently with our sentiments of gratitude to Government, we must not force their hands. I am glad the Hindus show they appreciate Government help and do not betray an unbending spirit."

The following is from the Punjabee (Lahore), of the 22nd August 1912 :—

"Referring to the offer of a liberal annual grant by the Government of India to the proposed Aligarh University, the Comrade of Calcutta remarks :—

"The camel that is sold for five rupees has to be purchased along with the cat tied to its neck that is price at five hundred. This was a fable some time ago; but our Government is converting fables of yesterday into the facts of to-day . . . . There are other ways of displaying a 'deep interest in the movement' and the liberal 'annual grant' could well have waited till the Musalmans had framed a constitution satisfactory to the Government of India and the Secretary of State. The Government credit is not yet so low that for every bargain the coin must be jingled in the pockets.

"Is this comment fair, considering all that the Government have done to the Muhammadans and all the benefits that they have received? Is it consistent with the respect and position due to Government which is spending millions on education? Can the Muhammadans do without Government help and undertake the education of all their community unaided by Government in any manner? It is amazing that a community whose educational advancement is so backward should be described as flinging a grant back in the face of the Government in a contemptuous manner. We do not envy the Government in their present position with regard to Muslim attitude. But every effect has a cause and every cause will have its effect. We trust that wiser councils will yet prevail and induce the Muhammadans to modify their attitude and powers as compared with the Government.

"From the proceedings of the Muslim University Constitution Committee recently held, we see that there is a firm and unanimous opinion to reject the Government conditions and go without the University. But they have not quite decided that. They leave the burden to the Foundation Committee, indicating, however, that their decision will be the same. Mr. Muhammad Shafi observed that public opinion was so unanimous that even young men threaten to sue the promoters if a local University were accepted. Mr. Haq said, 'he was not sorry for the Secretary of State's decision. He (Secretary of State) was creating solidarity and self-respect among them. At this juncture, courage, not cowardice was required.' Captain Tiwana said, when he toured even in small towns and villages to collect funds, the villagers understood that even their local schools would be linked with the Muslim University. It is doubtful who created these extraordinary hopes even in the minds of villagers. It probably shows the inner workings of the Muslim mind and they wanted to establish a kind of Muslim educational department of their own wholly independent of Government control. We are sure no such false hopes were created in the Hindu minds and no Hindu leader ever put such ideas in the Hindus. Of course, powers of affiliation of mofussil colleges were expected in the fullness of time, but no such condition was attached. The Muslim demands are preposterous in the extreme and their attitude is a surprise to all. They seem to expect the Government would withdraw their restrictions to propitiate the angry leaders of the community. We only wish the Hindus will understand the situation and will treat the Government of India's conditions more rationally."

Alleged oppression of Muhammadan students of the Medical School, Agra.

16. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 17th August 1912, complains that Major O'Meara (the Principal), and Doctors Modi and De have been getting more emboldened from day to day. Muslim students are being turned out of the Boarding House on the mere suspicion of having made a public exposure of the said Doctors' spirit of (religious) bigotry. Major O'Meara, "the despotic ruler of the Medical School, Agra," has absolutely no proof to show that these students ever wrote any letter to the (Islamic) press. To make matters worse, pressure is being brought to bear on Muhammadan students, to make them confess to having supplied information to the papers. Besides, when "we" have been openly saying that "our" writings have been based on an article from the pen of Maulvi Shamsul Hasan, a Vakil at Agra, the conduct of Doctor Modi and others in persisting in blaming Muslim students constitutes a piece of gross injustice and oppression. "We" used to complain only of the boycott of Islamic papers; it never entered "our" mind that a Government School could openly boycott even Muhammadan students. But it now turns out that "clever people" (the reference is to Hindus) can have things their own way everywhere. The authorities of the School have deeply hurt the feelings of Musalmans by boycotting Islamic papers and expelling Muhammadan students from the Boarding House. "We" praise the patience displayed by the Muhammadans of Agra in the matter; they have not as yet exhibited any unusual excitement over the affair. Facts, however, go to show that the authorities have made up their minds to (do) their utmost in attacking the religion of Musalmans, boycotting their papers, and expelling their sons from the Boarding House. The indifference of the United Provinces Government in the matter has been causing feelings of discontent, disappointment and indignation among the Prophet's followers. Can (that) Government suffer the rights of Muhammadans to be trampled under foot in broad daylight and no thought to be paid to the making of amends?

The Khan of Hoti's case.

17. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 13th August 1912, publishes an article headed "The Khan of Hoti in Parliament." Referring to the recent remarks in Parliament on the Khan's case, the paper observes that, although the Secretary of State has "preserved the prestige of the administration," as it behoved him to do, still the event may be relied upon to serve as a warning for the future. It also heartily congratulates the Chief Commissioner, Frontier Province, on the vindication of his character, saying that his recent stay at Simla has proved useful for him. No sooner had Sir George Roos-Keppel left (Simla) for Nathiagali than there was a white-washing (of his name) in Parliament.

Forfeiture of security furnished by the Punjab Advocate, Mianwali.

18. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 20th August 1912 :—

"We believe it is permissible to examine some feature of the service of this notice and the language employed therein to justify the action taken under section 9 (1) of Act I of 1910. In March 1911 the Hon'ble Babu Bhupendra Nath Basu intended to bring forward an amendment of the existing Press Act upon the lines which had more or less been adopted throughout India by the Government themselves. His object was to embody in the statute the practice of the several Local Governments in order to make the existing provisions less obnoxious than they were. Out of deference to those whose advice and opinion were entitled to the greatest weight he asked His Excellency the President's permission to withdraw the Bill. That explanation in the Council from the champion of the legitimate rights of the Press had raised the hopes that the Government of India themselves had intended to modify the rigorous provisions of the Act. But from the manner in which action has been taken in the first case of forfeiture of security under section 9 (1) of the Act it seems to us that the agitation against the Act should be continued with unabated zeal. It is most unfortunate that the first case to justify the provisions of section 9 should have been that of Mianwali district in the westernmost part of the Punjab. The offending communications cited have reference not to the Government of the Punjab but to the Government of the North-West Frontier Province. Whether or not this is the sort of justification which the Government of India pleads for the retention of the provision for summary executive action we are certainly unable to say. But of one thing we are certain. The order in the present case does not show that the Government is quite convinced of the correctness of its interpretation of the offending communications. The notice says 'in the opinion of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab the said letters or communications are of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1) (c) . . . ., that is to say, they are likely or may have a tendency directly or indirectly to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by Law in British India . . . .'. That is to say, the Government is no more certain of the actual effect in the concrete case under notice than the legislature which had hypothetical cases in view in providing for summary executive action. If the Government in its executive capacity is unable to say with certainty that certain communications are calculated to bring the Government into hatred or contempt it is far better to leave the responsibility of determining the nature of communications to the judicial authorities. When the Government can only say that a certain communication 'may have' a tendency to bring into hatred, etc., it is obviously unjust to empower the Government to declare that the paper publishing the communication must be punished summarily by an executive order. If the action of the Punjab Government in this matter proves anything it proves the great necessity of repealing the summary provisions of the Act and subjecting the examination of the merits and demerits of offending articles to a Special Bench of the High Court or Chief Court."

A charge against the Zamindar's editor.

19. Writing under the heading "Account of the fund in aid of the Tripolitan sufferers," the Editor of the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th August 1912, states that a sum of Rs. 48,566-14-11 has so far been subscribed towards the fund opened by him for the benefit of the said sufferers. Of this, Rs. 47,888-1-5 has already been acknowledged in the paper, while Rs. 46,601-13-6 has been remitted to the Turkish Prime Minister and the Right Hon'ble Sayad Amir Ali. The balance, Rs. 1,965-1-5 is with the Editor, who can also produce receipts for the remittances made by him. He has been accused of having pocketed the interest paid to him for the collections, a part of which also is said to have been misappropriated by him. In refutation of the first charge, he publishes a translation of two letters from the Bank of Bengal and the Orient Bank (of India), Lahore. These communications are to the effect that no interest was paid to him by these banks ; and, he asserts, he deals with no other banking institution. He understands that some persons have been giving out that he has made more collections than have been referred to in the Zamindar. He considers it sufficient to ask in reply that the receipts may be shown to him. It is possible that some amounts may not have been entered in the accounts, which have been compiled by himself and in which there may possibly be mistakes. Those gentlemen, therefore, whose contributions have not been shown in the accounts, should produce his receipts and have the mistakes rectified.

Commenting on the above the Watan (Lahore), of the 13th August 1912, states that, when the Millat first preferred the above charges against the Zamindar's Editor, he asserted in reply that he would pay Rs. 1,000 for every pie proved to have been pocketed by him. On the one hand, however, this was like protesting too much ; while, on the other, he (at about the same time) put a written confession into the hands of thousands, to the effect that he was a bankrupt, having spent the Rs. 2,000 he had, and that he wanted them to find Rs. 10,000 to enable him to carry on his business. Again, he now says that if donations from any persons have not been entered in the accounts he may be shown his receipts to enable him to rectify the mistakes. Does he want the receipts to make away with them and has no one already shown him any receipts ? If receipts have been shown, what did he do ?

Indians in South Africa.

1. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 23rd August 1912, publishes an article headed "The plight of Indians in South Africa," enumerating some of the more serious grievances of the Indian in the Transvaal. After asking whether there can be any greater humiliation for them than what they have to suffer in the ex-Boer republic, it remarks that they are so treated merely because they have black skins and do not profess Christianity. Moreover, not content with the disgrace and degradation to which Indian Muhammadans are already subjected in the Transvaal, the highest local tribunal has now ruled that polygamy is illegal there—a ruling which constitutes an ugly blot on British justice. Nor is this all; another court has gone a step further and laid down that a man, who has only one wife but has married according to the Muhammadan Law, cannot bring her into the Transvaal; such a marriage being, according to the court, not lawful. This assertion is an open insult to Islam, and can be tolerated by no self-respecting Musalman. This tyrannical, nay, savage order will have the effect of ruining Muhammadan homes, the responsibility for which will lie with Mr. Asquith and Lord Crewe, who do not interfere with such doings.

The late General Booth.

2. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 23rd August 1912, has a note headed "The late General Booth," praising his spirit of perseverance, and the efforts of his Salvation Army to raise the fallen and lead aright the misguided. Referring to the Punjab Government's proposal to convert juvenile prisoners into good citizens, the paper asks why, since Hindus and Muhammadans will not undertake the task, it should not be taken in hand by the Salvation Army.

China and Tibet.

3. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 30th August 1912 :—

"In view of the tremendous and almost incredible change that has occurred in China there would have been nothing strange if affairs relating to that country outside the country itself had been neglected, but the vigorous young Republic is displaying astonishing energy in all directions. The protracted state of anarchy in Tibet, the incessant fighting between the Chinese soldiers and the Tibetans justified the belief that the new Chinese Government had determined to wash its hands of Tibet. That this is not so is quite clear from the Peace Mission which the Peking Government has sent to Tibet and which has passed through Calcutta to Kalimpong and Lhassa. The Mission as announced by telegram consists of a Chinese official and twelve Lamas, six of whom are from Mongolia. The Lamas are devoted to the new regime in China and they will explain the present political situation in China to the Dalai Lama as well as the policy of the Chinese Government in Tibet. At the same time Chinese troops are marching through Tibet to impress the Dalai Lama and the people with the great improvement in the military organisation of China since the overthrow of the Empire. The Dalai Lama will be acknowledged as the spiritual leader of the Buddhists in Tibet but will have no temporal authority. The influence of Dorjieff on the Dalai Lama is recognised in China and the Mission will try to counteract it. The attempts of Russia to discredit the Chinese Republican Government both in Mongolia and Tibet will be explained to the Dalai Lama. We anticipate the difficulty will be in persuading the Dalai Lama to be content with the spiritual leadership of the Buddhhists. He is the only Dalai Lama who has lived to be a grown up man and he exercised unbounded authority, both spiritual and temporal. So long as he is at Lhassa the Chinese Government will be well advised in associating him with the actual administration of Tibet and in persuading him to exercise his influence to make the Tibetans friendly to the Chinese."

(b)—Home.

Mr. Amir Ali and the presidency of the All-India Muslim League.

4. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 23rd August 1912, has a note headed "Can Mr. Amir Ali be president of the Muslim League?" The All-India Muslim League resolved at a recent meeting that Mr. Amir Ali should preside at its next annual session, to be held at Lucknow on the 30th and 31st December. The question, however, says the paper, is whether the Right Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali can do so. He is a Judge of the highest judicial tribunal of the Empire, and the League is a powerful political association. Can a Judge preside at a political meeting, and that also at one held by a society which frequently discusses politics intended to injure the feelings of Hindus and other sections of Indians ?

The Public Services Commission.

5. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 17th August 1912, publishes a note, headed "The Public Service Commission from an inter-communal point of view," to the effect that the personnel of the Commission has been viewed with feelings of disappointment throughout the length and breadth of the country. Referring to the objections raised by Hindus, Muhammadans, and Anglo-Indians to it, the paper asks where, if noted Hindus like Messrs. Gokhale and Chaubal cannot (adequately) represent their co-religionists, are keener supporters of the Hindu community to come from ? Again, the National Congress and its branches are demanding that two Congressmen should be appointed to the Commission to represent the views of the followers of Hinduism. The demand cannot, however, be approved by the whole of India, seeing that the Congress does not represent the entire country, while Hindus are already adequately represented on the Commission. But the same cannot be said of Muhammadans. Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim is no doubt a Musalman, but his views do not coincide with those of the general Muslim public. As to those European Commissioners who are hostile to Hindus, they need not necessarily be favourably disposed towards the Prophet's followers. Similarly those Indians on the Commission (Messrs. Gokhale and Chaubal), who champion Indian interests and claim to belong to no particular party, can on no account side with Muhammadans. Are not, therefore, the latter justified in demanding that the Commission should have on it some such Muhammadans as may be said to be true representatives of their community. The inadequacy of Muslim representation should be evident from the fact, that, while the small Eurasian community has one representative, 7 crores of Musalmans have also only one representative.

"Sir Thomas Munro—whose conscience never ceased to sting him for the miseries he perhaps unconsciously brought upon the prosperous peasantry of Madras by the introduction of his Riotwari system of land revenue in that Presidency—thus gave a bit of his mind on the subject of wider employment of Indians in the Public Service :—

"With what grace can we talk of our paternal Government if we exclude them from every important office and say, as we did till very lately, that in a country containing fifteen millions of inhabitants no man but a European shall be entrusted with so much authority as to order the punishment of a single stroke of rattan? Such an interdiction is to pass a sentence of degradation on a whole people, for which no benefit can ever compensate. There is no instance in the world of so humiliating a sentence having ever been passed upon any nation.

"Strangely enough, the chief responsibility for this sentence of degradation passed upon a whole people lies upon the shoulders of the 'benevolent' Marquess Cornwallis. The policy which he inaugurated has frequently been sought to be justified by his apologists on grounds not one of which can stand the test of facts. The Marquess of Wellesley, a worthy friend of Cornwallis, however, delivered himself on the subject with a frankness which is quite refreshing. 'The duty and policy of the British Government in India,' he said, 'require that the system of confiding the immediate exercise of every branch and department of the Government to Europeans educated in its own service, and subject to its own direct control, should be diffused as widely as possible, as well with a view to the stability of our own interests as to the happiness and welfare of our own subjects.' It is an interesting and instructive fact that the Moslem rulers of India were far more liberal in this respect. The administration of justice, says Orme, was almost universally entrusted to the Hindus, the office of Dewan being generally conferred upon one of that people. It is recorded by the historian, Mr. James Mill, that under Moslem rule the whole detail of administration, with a few exceptions, 'remained invariably in the hands of the native magistrates and officer.' There is no historical evidence that the policy of trusting the children of the soil with all high appointments in the State went against the happiness and welfare of the Moghul Emperors' 'own subjects.' Indeed, there have been British administrators and statesmen who have refused to recognise the validity of the contention that the policy inaugurated by Lord Cornwallis and followed by his successors is calculated to contribute to the happiness and welfare of the Indian people. 'Let Britain be subjected by a foreign power to-morrow.' says Sir Thomas Munro; 'let the people be excluded from all share in the Government, from public honours, from every office of high emolument, and let them in every situation be considered as unworthy of trust, and all their knowledge and all their literature, sacred and profane, would not save them from becoming, in another generation or two, a low-minded, deceitful and dishonest race.' So it is freely admitted by English administrators of the reputation of Sir Thomas Munro that the policy inaugurated by early British rulers cannot contribute to the happiness and welfare of the people.

"It is not exactly the inefficiency of the native agency which prompted this policy of exclusion. 'We do not want generals, statesmen and legislators,' said Mr. William Thackeray, one of Lord Bentinck's Councillors, in his Report to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs appointed in 1812; 'we want industrious husbandmen. If we wanted rank, restless and ambitious spirits, there are enough of them in Malabar to supply the whole peninsula. We must avoid the creation of more.' We refuse to believe that this honorable sentiment represents to any appreciable extent the keynote of British rule in India. The history and traditions of England furnish hardly any ground or justification for the entertainment of any such belief. But there has always been, at any rate, an unfortunate tendency towards providing British office-seekers at any cost, even by depriving the children of the soil of their just and natural rights. 'It is surprising,' said Sir Charles (afterwards Lord) Metcalfe, 'how little Europeans have been employed in the lower offices of the State. The use of natives in the exercise of considerable functions in the judicial department is great and increasing; but they must remain subordinate and moderately paid . . . European agency must occupy all important positions.' The Indians were not excluded from these important positions for incompetency. In 1802 Lord Wellesley circulated a series of interrogatories among his officers as to the efficiency of the native agency. The answers to these must have surprised His Lordship. Sir John Strachey, Judge and Magistrate, thought that an intelligent Indian was for obvious reasons, better qualified to preside at a trial than a European. He wished that the situations they were favoured with were more respectable 'in a pecuniary point of view' and that they were entrusted with more power and responsibility. One of the stock arguments against the wider employment of Indians to positions of trust and responsibility is that the Indians themselves have more reliance on the uprightness of European officers than of those appointed from their own people. A fitting answer to this argument was given by one Mr. T. H. Ernst in reply to Lord Wellesley's interrogatories. 'This distinction,' he said, 'is chiefly to be ascribed, I think, to the unequal footing on which the natives are placed in all official situation compared with Europeans.' 'Everything combines,' said Mr. E. Strachey, 'to make the European honest and independent, and the native the contrary. Reverse their circumstances, and I have no doubt their conduct would be reversed.' It is difficult to understand the motives which prompted the interrogatories; for the answers—revealing as they did things beyond the dreams of Horatio—had absolutely no effort on the policy of exclusion. It was not until 1830 that there was a slight change for the better, and men who were not particularly enamoured of Indians pleaded for their more extensive employment in order at least to 'secure their attachment.' There have been public Service Commissions between then and now, and Indians have been allowed to be made Commissioners of Divisions and officiating Chief Judges of High Courts. But that things are still not as they should be is shown by the appointment of the present Commission. Constituted as it is, the present Commission, however, gives hardly any cause for jubilation. This is unfortunate. Why not do it now as it will have to be done sooner or later? The time has come. There is now no permanent room for Pickwickian caution."

India and the Privy Council.

6. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 24th August 1912 :—

"Complaint is rife that proper attention is not paid by their Lordships of the Privy Council to cases from India. While cases from the Colonies are heard by all the Law Lords together with the Lord Chancellor, cases from India are relegated to three members, two of whom are generally Indian Judges of ordinary standing. What is, then, the value of the decision of such a tribunal which may not infrequently sit in judgment on a decision of a Full Bench of an Indian High Court? Besides many litigants can never reap the benefit of the provision allowing an appeal to the Privy Council simply because they find it too expensive to go to England and remain there all the time their cases are pending or to pay the exhorbitant charges of counsel and solicitors in that country.

"The Governor-General of India is also the Viceroy and there is nothing in the Constitutional Law of England which would stand in the way of the formation of an Indian Privy Council. The Chief Justices of all the High Courts in India may be ex-officio Privy Councillors and may form the Indian section of the Judicial Committee. They may meet for a term at Delhi and despatch the business. The decrees may be signed by the Governor-General as the Viceroy or they may be sent Home. In any case the Indian cases will receive better attention, be more efficiently dealt with and the cost and inconvenience to the litigants will be immensely reduced. We invite lawyers to discuss the subject."

British officers.

7. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 24th August 1912 :—

"We are not quite sure if the dignity of British rule in India would suffer, if a little more care were taken in the selection of officers to represent the ruling race. Indeed, the real enemy of British rule in this country is not the 'Indian agitator,' but that curious specimen of humanity who is imported from the back slums of London to 'help' the administration of India in various capacities, and whom Lord Morley as Secretary of State for India found it necessary to honour with the dignified appellation of a 'bounder.' He is an interesting fellow—this 'bounder.' His head, if it contains anything, is filled with a fearfully elongated notion of his own importance in the constitution of the Empire—especially that portion of the Empire which is inhabited by a race which, to borrow a current phrase, is altogether different from his own. When he sets foot on one end of this land of 'natives,' he apparently expects the other end to flop up in the air! He is to be met with everywhere in India as Judge, Magistrate, Professor—and what not? His golden deeds frequently set all tongues wagging in this country.

"His latest exploit in the capacity of a Magistrate is reported from Bengal. Mr. Warde-Jones, Deputy Magistrate of Purnea, in the course of his examination of a petitioner the other day, delivered himself of the following noble and gratifying sentiments:—'Look at me. If you don't do so, I shall send you to hajut. Keep quiet, your fool! Keep quiet, you son of a fool!' This glorious specimen of rhetorical art was, however, not appreciated by the party concerned, and the High Court, on being moved, called for an explanation from the worthy functionary complained against. In his explanation the Magistrate has admitted the use of the expressions alleged with a fearlessness characteristic of his type; and though the highest tribunal in the land has passed severe strictures upon his conduct, one can fairly imagine him to be as much beyond their reach as the Man in the Moon.

"Mr. Warde-Jones is not particularly to blame. A bounder is almost invariably fond of giving 'natives' lessons in politeness. The notorious Kharagpore case may not have been forgotten in this country. In this case the trying Magistrate had a Brahman petitioner publicly shoe-beaten by a Court Chaprasi as a 'lesson in politeness,' as he described his deed in his explanation to Government! The following lesson in politeness was given by a European Headmaster of a Government School in India to an erring boy:—'I hear you are in the habit of abusing and beating boys. You require to be told that it is sinful to abuse or beat a fellow-creature. Look here, you are a d—d ———. The next time you abuse or beat anybody I will knock your brain out of that confounded head of yours!' And he punctuated his peroration on the utter impropriety and sinfulness of assaulting a fellow-creature with a resounding slap on the poor fellow's head. The distinguished recipient of this rattling lesson in politeness only stared into space and said nothing."

The Moslem League and the National Congress.

8. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 27th August 1912 :—

"Reuter cabled out briefly the reference in the report of the London branch of the Moslem League to the need for the establishment of more cordial relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. The passage itself is now before us and it is of such importance that the widest circulation should be given to it.

* * * * * * * *

"United action between the two communities is becoming absolutely necessary as has been well exemplified in the case of Hindu and Muhammadan Universities. The Congress and the Moslem League should present a united front so that the cause of Indian progress may be assured."

The naming of a vicious horse.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 27th August 1912 :—

"The Leader gives publicity to a report that a European member of the Civil Service has christened his tame horse 'Raja Sahib' and a particularly vicious animal as 'Malaviyaji.' We read: 'The animal he calls 'Malaviyaji' is wayward and obstructive, noisy and discontended, holds his head high, is keen on his rights and unwilling to perform his duties and he has therefore given him an appropriate name.' Undoubtedly banter should be recognised as such. But banter has its time and place. It is well that the wholesome limitations placed upon it be recognised by all. But the christening of a notorious animal in the manner reported is arrogant, insulting and mischievous. If tolerated in one case it is sure to lead to retaliatory methods which are not likly to please the Indian Civil Service. If Indians do not keep horses as largely as Europeans they certainly keep other animals. It would not be a very desirable thing to encourage them to give the names of unpopular Collectors and other European officials to some of their wicked animals."

III.—Native States.

Kashmir affairs.

10. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 21st August 1912, publishes a communication headed "Mischievous mis-statements by the Punjabee's correspondent" The writer—A Muhammadan—remarks that Lord Crewe's discouraging and disappointing speeches (about self-government for India) require that Hindus and Muhammadans should join hands and raise a strong voice. His Lordship's decision in regard to the scope of the Universities proposed to be established at Benares and Aligarh also calls for united effort. Unfortunately, however, there has come into existence a party which is engaged, from motives of selfishness and bigotry, in straining the relations between the two communities. After alleging that the Punjabee and the Hindustan are its organs, the writer says that recently the Jammu correspondent of the former reported, and the latter reproduced the news, that the local Muhammadans had boycotted their Shamsi Hindu fellow-townsmen, although there was absolutely no truth in this. Again, it was given out by the same correspondent that the Muslim tailors of the above town had declared a boycott against the Hindu cloth-merchants of the place. The fact, however, is that some Arya young men wish to boycott Muhammadan barbers, washermen, tailors, &c., nay, not a few (? Arya) Mahashais have already done so. The publication of news like the above is the work only of Arya youths, (who wish to gain their object by this means). The correspondent further remarks that, some time back, the Rajput Gazette announced that in the schools in the State Urdu had been replaced by Hindi—an assertion which had absolutely no foundation. No notice was, however, taken of the matter by the State. But on the Punjabee and the Hindustan preferring a false charge against the poor Muhammadans (? Muslim tailors) the State bestirred itself without loss of time. This shows that it is the Prophet's followers who prove sufferers in every case. It remains to be seen what notice the State will take of the mischievous writings of the Punjabee and the Hindustan.

Income Tax in the Bahawalpur State.

11. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 24th August 1912 :—

"In this issue we propose to examine in detail (1) the history of the proposal to impose a new tax called Income Tax on the people of Bahawalpur and (2) the object of the levy as far as it has been possible to ascertain from unofficial sources. The proposal was first made so far back as 1879 in the time of the late Nawab Sir Sadiq Muhammad Khan IV. It is stated that at that time, as at present, it was made with the approval of the Punjab Government. What the necessity for the proposal was in 1879 has not been stated with sufficient clearness; and apparently the Commissioner of Multan who seemed interested in popularising the License Tax in the British districts, was not himself convinced of its necessity in a Native State with its limited responsibilities. The matter was dropped, but was revived in 1900-1901 when Lieutenant-Colonel Grey, Superintendent of the State, wanted money to finance an irrigation scheme. It was found that the opposition was as strong as it ever was and that the nobles were uncompromising in their attitude. The Punjab Government realised that there was no hope of introducing the tax when the nobles had made common cause with the rest of the tax-payers. It again abandoned the proposal, but again revived it in 1904 in the time of the late Nawab Bahawal Khan V. The Government has revived the old question again. The Council of Regency, instead of opposing the suggestion as inopportune has rendered itself liable to the charge of surrendering the rights of the State during the minority of the Ruling Prince. But we believe there are still in the State noblemen, landed aristocrats and others who have the patriotism, foresight and knowledge necessary to firmly but respectfully oppose the measure as unsuitable and inopportune.

"The necessity for the new impost is said to be the proposed construction of a canal at the joint expenditure of Bikaner and Bahawalpur for the benefit of both the States. We know for a fact that His Highness Maharaja Sir Ganga Singhji of Bikaner has been endeavouring for the last more than five years to inundate the arid tract of his sand desert where water famine is perennial. In fact in one of his visits to Bikaner, the late Viceroy, Lord Minto, had promised all assistance for the construction of a canal. Bahawalpur may or may not be equally pressed for a canal of this kind; but there is no gain-saying that the advantage of the canal is mutual and reciprocal. Although no detailed information has reached us about the financial aspect of the irrigation scheme, yet we believe from the facts placed at our disposal that it is a remunerative scheme and as such ought to be executed as a capital work either from the surplus revenues or from loan funds. In either case the work will more than earn the interest on the capital outlay; and a loan, if raised, is a legitimate charge on posterity so that the State need have no hesitation in creating a sinking fund for the repayment of such a loan. This being so, we entirely fail to see the wisdom of the Punjab Government in recommending to the State the imposition of the Income Tax which was abandoned on three different occasions as unsuitable to the conditions of the State. It is certainly not too late for the Local Government to reconsider the matter and advice the Council of Regency to drop further proceedings.

"We regret to observe that the Government has created for itself a very delicate position. On the one hand it has to bear its legitimate responsibilities for the imposition of new taxes during the minority of the Prince. On the other hand it has to hear the grievances of the people against the Council of Regency in its appellate capacity. Unless the small State of Bahawalpur has been made an exception the Council of Regency has no power of taxation. This being so, an appeal against the new Income Tax should be heard by the Political Agent in his double capacity as sanctioning authority and appellate authority. He cannot certainly claim to be neutral; and neutrality is a position which no Political Agent can assume during the minority of a Prince. We have, therefore, been astonished to hear that when a deputation of the people appeared before him he elected to remain neutral and left the Council of Regency to deal with them as brusquely as they could. It is quite conceivable that the Political Agent is no more than a medium of communication in a matter which affects the interests of two Native States one of which being so influential as that over which Maharaja Sir Ganga Singhji presides. But surely even in this capacity it is the duty of the Political Agent to hear the objections of the tax-payers as patiently as the pæans of praise from sojourners and interlopers. What should become of the fate of the poor tax-paying units in a Native State when the Prince is a minor, when the Political Agent drives them from pillar to post, and when the appellate authority, the Government, brushes aside local difficulties in furtherance of some imperial object?

"Sad, indeed, is the plight of the subjects of Native States. There was a time when the Government was disposed to take its stand on the memorable passage of Lord Salisbury that the people of the States count as much to the Government as the Maharaja, or the Nawab or the Nizam. We now live in different times and the Government is content to leave the States in their mediæval condition with enough to eat, grow and multiply. Has the Government at any time proposed to levy a new tax in furtherance of education, sanitation or medical relief in any of the States? Has the Government at any time asked a Maharaja or a Nawab why trade and industry do not flourish in the soil of his State? Is there a single State, not excluding Baroda, but excluding the maritime states of Kathiawar, where any trade worth mentioning exists? In Bahawalpur, with trade and industry at a low level, with banking and financing almost annihilated, it is a mockery to talk of Income Tax. We repeat this is a matter which is important enough for the interference of the Government of India."

Marriage of the Faridkot Princess.

12. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 27th August 1912:—

"The Faridkot Princess is to be married some time in November to the young Maharaja of Bharatpur. The Maharaja was born on the 4th October 1899, so that he is just 13 years of age and the Princess who is to marry him is a year younger than him. Sardar Bahadur Dyal Singh Man is according to Hindus a very fortunate man for he will have brought about two marriages during his regime. We note that Bharatpur has just imported a tutor all the way from England for the Maharaja on a salary of Rs. 1,300 with free quarters, &c. He will have the unique privilege of witnessing the marriage of his ward and carrying away with him the impression of that happy event to his country."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Muslim League, London, on the Hindu-Muhammadan question.

13. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 22nd August 1912, publishes an article headed "A meeting of Muslim League in London." It refers to the League's desire that Hindus should allow Muhammadans the peaceful enjoyment of political privileges, which is their due. The National Congress and Hindu Sabhas do not, however, aim at depriving Musalmans of their share of political rights. Besides, the enjoyment of such rights has nothing to do with religion and is dependent upon personal ability. The reins of the administration are in the hands of Government and do not rest with Hindus and Muhammadans. The conduct of the two communities in blackguarding each other is injurious for both, and sometimes leads to Europeans being benefited at their expense. Continuing, the paper says that, formerly, the League was in favour of cementing friendship between Muhammadans and Europeans, but, the latter having paid no regard to Muslim feelings over the affairs of Turkey and Persia, it now deems it politic to promote union with the followers of Hinduism. Besides, while the League expressed these sentiments at its first day's sitting, the Right Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali voiced at the second day's meeting some thoughts which were calculated to cause feelings of estrangement (between the two communities). He remarked (for instance) that Hindu societies were more subject to outside influence than Muslim associations. He ought not to have made this misleading statement even if by "outside influence" he meant "British influence." Moreover, are the Muslim League itself and the Muhammadan Colleges at Aligarh, Lahore, and other places, free from "outside influence?" The paper also takes exception to Mr. Amir Ali's remarks about the members of Indian Civil Service, seeing that a meeting of the Muslim League was not a proper place for making such observations.

The Hindu (Lahore), of the 22nd (received on the 28th) August 1912, says that every well-wisher of India will welcome Mr. Amir Ali's proposal for the union of Hindus and Muhammadans. Mere words, however, cannot bring about this unity; action is necessary, if any good is to come. But some people are of opinion that the Muslim League is an instrument on which the tune of union cannot be played; the necessary strings have not been supplied by the inventors and makers of the instrument. Again, the player (in the present instance) is no other than Mr. Amir Ali, who, as the Amrita Bazar Patrika rightly says, has done more than any other person to alienate Muhammadans from Hindus. After remarking that, at all events, Hindus should meet Musalmans more than half way, the paper refers to the measures proposed by the League to unite the two communities—measures which have been condemned by the Muslim press, as is seen by the extracts from the Watan and the Paisa Akhbar (vide paragraphs 11 and 11 of Selections Nos. 33 and 34 respectively). As to how far they are fair, practicable and advantageous for Hindus, a still more disappointing reply must be made, says the Editor, to this question from the Hindu side. In return for the (trivial) concession that Muhammadans should avoid cow-killing in places where they are in a minority, Hindus are required to throw their mother-tongue (Hindi) and Nagri characters overboard, and to acknowledge, at the sacrifice of their rights, a supposititious Muslim claim. In other words, the League would have sugar in exchange for dust, while Muhammadan papers regard the bargain as disadvantageous for the followers of Islam. To crown all, they charge Hindus with being averse to a union (with Musalmans), although Hindu leaders have been trying for the last 25 years to unite the two communities. It is absurd for Musalmans to ask Hindus to sacrifice their all for this union, while they themselves will not make even the least sacrifice. If they and their League are sincerely desirous of unity, they should make their proposals with due regard to the feelings and rights of both communities.

The jhatka-halal question.

14. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 23rd August 1912 :—

* * * * * * * *

"As a typical example of the reverse of what we have been holding up as the ideal of high journalism, we bring to the notice of the public the leader of the Observer, under the flashy title of 'The Jhatka Campaign' in its issue of the 17th current.

"One admirable principle which the Editor seems to realise in journalism (as in war) is not to admit the weakness of a bad cause. Let any impartial reader go through the lucubration, and the arguments with which he will rise will not count more than two. The whole of the first column is devoted to the reiteration in different forms of the allegation that the Government should support the Muhammadans, because the Hindus are going to leave the shops of the Moslem meat-sellers. The second and the 'forte' of the rest of the article is that jhatka should be proscribed because 'the Muslims look upon jhatka meat in the same way as the Hindus regard beef.' The case of the Hindus and the Sikhs has been mixed up for obvious reasons.

"The first argument seems only the reverse of the mischievous motto 'whatever an Arab says, is right, others must be wrong.' The learned editor appears to insinuate that because the Hindus are supporting the movement, the Government should decide against them. We do not hold a brief for the Hindus, but we cannot withhold saying that in the eyes of the law they have as good a right to decide for themselves in the matter of eating one or the other kind of meat, as the Moslems.

"We have primarily to put forth our own case. The second and the most irrefutable argument, adduced by the Observer, is indeed very strong. If the Muhammadans form one liking, the world should say 'aye'! The world indeed is for them and not they for the world!

"We are glad, the times of the Great Moghul are gone. The question is not how they look upon a question, thing or people. In the eyes of at least the fanatical section among them, the Hindus, Sikhs and Christians must be Kafirs. But in this world, we have all to live and let others live. The question of questions is how impartial minds look upon the matter. What more final and convincing can there be than a Chief Court Judgment, which has stood the test of time and which has been reproduced in these columns. If it is only a thing of looking one way or the other what is there to prevent the Hindus and the Sikhs from looking at halal meat, as beef, and how do our friends of the Observer school know that they do not hold the same kind of feeling? Let the Moslems quote their verse and chapter in support of their view that jhatka is forbidden them like pork, as we have quoted on our side so many times, in these columns. It must be some strange chemistry by which a mutton-blade in a Sikh shop appears a piece of pork to a Muhammadan. Surely, we did not believe up to this time that a large section of the world can openly come forward for the opposite of the golden rule of doing unto others as you would be done by.

"We may only briefly hint at the mis-statements conveyed in the article. It is wrong to suggest that there was no provision for jhatka in the Punjab, prior to 1897. There might have been places where there were no 'shops' with sign boards, but we may point out that there was no necessity for such shop-indexes till very recent times. In the days of the Sikh supremacy it was prepared wherever there was a Sikh and in numerous villages, even now-a-days, there is no fixed house or shop for it, but it is prepared without let or hindrance all the same.

"Whatever the position of Hindus in the eyes of the Observer, it is known to all that for the Sikhs it is a cardinal principle of their faith. Wherever a Sikh is allowed to say his prayers, and to wear Keshas, and other symbols, he should for primâ facie reasons be permitted to eat jhatka and of course he cannot eat it unless it is prepared somewhere. A Muhammadan on the other hand may eat jhatka. He will be making a venial mistake. But a Sikh is no longer a Sikh, as soon as he tastes halal. He must be re-baptised.

"We beg to submit in the clearest yet most respectful terms to our rulers that jhatka is not so much a matter of option as even to our friends but a real and vital religious principle for the Sikhs, and any obstacle in this direction, is a most unjustifiable interference in the religious observances.

"Let the editor of the Observer cast off the coloured spectacles of prejudice and bigotry and he will be able to see with us. We would indeed have been glad, had he, an educated gentleman, come forward with the ulterior motive of the Muhmmadan agitation on the point. It is natural and very creditable for them to feel for their meat-sellers if their trade should fall off if many persons begin taking jhatka. But God's world is large enough and every one's oyster, if one would but open it.

"As to the veiled threat of disturbances for which the bigotry of our friends alone would be responsible, the Government can deal effectively if they like, otherwise, if they yield to such menaces, churches would be mosques and temples, tombs, in a day."

The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 24th August 1912 :—

"With regard to the jhatka-halal question, I wish to know on what authority or on what principle any one community can be prevented from using any particular kind of flesh or food, merely because a rival community objects to its exposure? I can understand each respecting the other's scruples and accommodating as far as possible. Cows may be killed but not in the presence of those to whom it is offiensive; pigs may be killed but not in the presence of those to whom it gives offence. Each community can do what it wants in a manner not to cause unnecessary offence to the other, and common sense must dictate the safe course. I am afraid these troubles arise more from feeble-minded officials taking sides rather than other causes, and Government must issue stringent orders in the matter."

Muhammadans and English-made biscuits, soaps and sweets.

15. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 26th August 1912, publishes a letter headed "English-made (Vilayati) biscuits." The writer—one Muhammad Arif, Dakhili, Librarian, Mahfil-ul-Islam Library, Randhir (?)—enquires what truth there is in the general statement that pig's fat is used in making Huntley and Palmer's biscuits.

Commenting on the above the Editor states that, as was reported in the paper on a former occasion, Messrs. Huntley and Palmer have flatly refused to give any information on the subject. This is suspicious, especially as no distinction is made in Europe between the fats of different animals, or of dead or slaughtered ones This being so, Muhammadans ought to abstain from the use of "Vilayati" biscuits, soaps and sweets ; fat being used in the preparation of all of these.

Grievances of Indian pilgrims to the Hedjaz.

16. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 14th (received on the 22nd) August 1912, publishes a letter headed "The Haj Committee should attend." The correspondent—one Sayad Zulfikar Ali—who writes from Mecca, makes the following complaints in regard to pilgrim ships :—

(1) That passengers are accommodated even in Saloons, which entails extreme inconvenience on 1st and 2nd Class passengers, especially purda-nashin ladies.

(2) That on the return journey passengers are taken on board the ships at Aden, Muscat and other Arabian ports, which is against the rules, and subjects Indian pilgrims to indescribable inconvenience.

(3) That some of the ships were (originally) intended to convey only goods and that pilgrims cannot be comfortable in them, while it is injurious for their health to travel by them.

(4) That the ships carry life-saving apparatus for even less than one-third of the pilgrims on board.

(5) That, unlike the Egyptian Government, the Indian Government does not make pilgrims deposit with it their fare for the return journey, and that the absence of this arrangement leads to Indian pilgrims being subjected to different hardships at Jeddah.

(6) That even deck passengers are charged Rs. 150 each, although the decks are such that no person of cleanly habits can stay on them even for a very short time.

(7) That the line of steamers in question charges excessive rates of fare.

Next the writer urges the members of the Haj Committee and other well-wishers of Muhammadans to invite Government's attention to the foregoing complaints.

Uplifting of depressed classes in the Punjab.

17. The Tribune (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912, publishes the following letter from a correspondent under the nom de plume of "Sattyarthi" :—

* * * * * * * *

"The Meghs, who are weavers by profession, do not engage in any filthy trade ; their features and colour show that they are of Aryan stock. But like other outcasts they are victims of social tyranny and suffer under various disabilities. They cannot draw water from wells used by the Hindus. They are not permitted to sit on the same carpet with high caste people ; their touch is a pollution to the orthodox ; they may not enter the sacred precincts of a temple ; and they can have no social intercourse. Things are perhaps not so bad in the Punjab as in Southern India, but here too the lot of the low castes is bad enough. Their daily sufferings and degradations are a serious blot on our social polity. A few prominent Meghs, who live in Sialkot city and adjacent villages, had come in touch with the liberalising forces of the times; they saw the benevolent work of the Arya Samaj and had attended its weekly ministrations without let or hindrance on equal terms with other members. They were keen enough to see the difference in the treatment accorded to them by the Hindus and Aryas, and it was but natural that hopes of social betterment were engendered in their hearts. As early as 1890 Bhagat Wadhawa Ram, the pioneer Megh, with a few others, applied to be reclaimed. But what could a handful of Aryas do when the Samaj itself was struggling for existence against adverse forces? A deaf ear was turned to these prayers and for several years no serious attention was paid to their requests. The Meghs continued to attend meetings and press their claims for favourable consideration, but for a dozen years with no better results. The question was several times discussed by the Samajists but looking to the magnitude of the task and their own slender resources they were overawed and dared not take the initiative. There was no public opinion in favour of the step and a small body of Aryas, howsoever zealous they might be, could not go against the deep-seated beliefs of the vast majority of Hindus. But how long could the Aryas resist or refuse to accede to the repeated and persistent prayers of the Meghs? The cause of reform at last triumphed, and the Sialkot Arya Samaj resolved unanimously at its general meeting of 14th March 1903, that the purification ceremony be performed on the occasion of the ensuing anniversary to be held on 28th and 29th idem.

"The Nagarkirtan procession came off on the 27th; it was joined by 3,000 Meghs headed by Mahant Ramdas, their high priest. When the non-Hindu residents of Sialkot town and neighbouring villages came to know of the proposed reclamation they started a powerful agitation against it. The Muhammadan Lambardars and Zaildars left no stone unturned to defeat the contemplated purification. They succeeded by threats and misrepresentation in intimidating the poor Meghs who were their village menials and tenants, so that on the day fixed only 200 men came forward for shudhi. The Hindus did not at first join the opposition and the chaudhris of the city who were invited to help in this noble cause readily responded to the call. The purified Meghs distributed sweets among the audience, and every one present partook of them. On the following day 100 more Meghs were purified. The Christians were already bitterly opposed, the Muhammadans were openly hostile and now the orthodox Hindus caught the infection. They organized meetings of the various communities and tried their best to excommunicate the Aryas from all social intercouse with their respective Biradries.

"The opponents next tried to stifle the movement by showing that His Highness the Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir fully sympathised with their antagonistic efforts and that he was opposed to uplift work. They purified the well of the serai of His Highness by pouring some Ganges water into it, because it had been defiled, they said, by the Meghs. Rumours were set afloat that the Maharaja had turned out the Arya Samajists from his dominion and had forbidden the Aryas from entering his territories. These insidious reports had a very depressing effect as a majority of Meghs are natives of His Highness' State. In April 1903 a deputation of prominent Aryas waited upon the Maharaja who received the members with favour and treated them with consideration and kindness and the rumours of his opposition were thus set at rest. But it cannot be gainsaid that some of the Jammu officials did their best to thwart the progress of the movement.

"Mahant Ramdas had, as already mentioned, joined the procession and was present at the first purification. One Abdulla, a bigoted Muhammadan, lodged a complaint against him before Rai Bishan Das, Tahsildar, that he (Ramdas) had taken Meghs to Sialkot and got them enlisted in the Arya Samaj. Proceedings were thereupon taken against Ramdas for bail and recognisance and though the poor man protested that he had committed no offence, the Hindu Tahsildar ordered him, on 7th Har, Sambat 1961 = 30th June 1904, to execute the following recognisance :—

"I, Ramdas, son of Sohna Megh, resident of Kesan, Tahsil Jammu, have been required by the Government of His Highness the Maharaja to give a recognisance for Rs. 100 to the effect that in future I will not take the Meghs of His Highness' territory to the British territory for getting them enlisted in the Arya Samaj; nor will I induce them to do so. Therefore I give the recognisance for Rs. 100 and declare that if it is proved that I got Meghs to join the Arya Samaj or induce them to do so, I will pay Rs. 100 in default of which the sum may be recovered from my property." No appeal was preferred against the order as the poor man was so much frightened that he would not come.

"The Meghs of the village of Pattan Sen were purified. The Rajputs who were enraged, attacked them in their houses and severely beat them; they ordered them to leave the village, or to disown and denounce their new religion. The Meghs made a report to the Sub-Inspector but the Rajputs falsely accused them of theft of wheat crops. The Meghs were chalaned by the Sub-Inspector to the Naib-Tahsildar, who found them guilty of theft! The Meghs appealed to Mr. I. F. Connolly, District Magistrate, a conscientious judicial officer, who made further inquiries and came to know the real facts. Subsequently the Meghs were acquitted and their counter-complaint for causing hurt was transferred to the court of the Assistant Commissioner who convicted the Rajputs and fined them Rs. 140!

"It is the suicidal policy of the Hindus which is the greatest stumbling block. The Meghs of village Lohinwala in Gujranwala district entreated the Hindus to allow them to draw water from their wells, but in return they were insulted and abused. The Meghs in a body turned Muhammadans and as such began to draw water from the same wells. The Hindus were impotent and looked on helplessly.

"The efforts made in 1907-08, when the Arya Samaj was under a cloud, to wreck the uplift work would have succeeded, had not the Sialkot district been ruled at the time by a wise and farseeing officer. It was he who checked the onslaughter of its enemies and saved the situation. As those were abnormal times I need not give a detail of the various prosecutions and cases which were started against the purified Meghs. In one of his judgments Mr. I. F. Connoly, the Deputy Commissioner, who realised the altruistic and philanthropic character of the movement, wrote those memorable words which are cherished by the community as their charters 'Lot of Meghs are becoming Aryas and they must be protected from outrage on that account.'

VI.—LEGISLATION.

The Vaccination Act.

18. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 27th August 1912 :—

"Lord Pentland, the Governor designate of Madras, is said to be a strong anti-Vaccinationist. The news will be received with interest by those Indians who are suffering by reason of coercive methods adopted by the Government in respect of conscientious objectors. Our readers are aware of the case of Lala Jetha Nand of Multan and the serious injury done to him by an imperfect law still more imperfectly enforced by men who know more of power than discretion. Lord Pentland, it would appear, has two of his children aged 5 and 7, not vaccinated and they are coming out with him. If this is true, we hope that his case will lead to the insertion of a conscience clause in the Vaccination Act of India and thereby save many a conscientious objector to vaccination. The coercive Act is bad in law and science and we should like to see more real sanitation and less makeshift adopted to prevent small-pox. We do not expect any strong anti-vaccination movement in India. Those who believe in it and find safety through it are welcome to resort to it. But the few who object to it on religious and conscientious grounds must obtain freedom from coercion and we must fight for it."

"It was not until the National Anti-Vaccination League took up the case of Dr. Jetha Nand of Multan that protection has been afforded to a conscientious objector. He refused to have his child vaccinated because he has no faith in vaccination. For this he was fined twice and on the third occasion was sent to prison for a fortnight, the sentence being upheld in appeal or revision by the Chief Court. In reply to the letter of the league it is pointed out by the Punjab Government that from first to last Dr. Jetha Nand never addressed the Punjab Government on the subject, which was his obvious course if he had any complaint to make. Prosecutions under the Vaccination Act do not require the sanction of the Government and as the law now stands only executive action is possible. The letter of the Government says 'the local authorities have been requested not to put the law in action again against Jetha Nand in regard to this child.' It is also pointed out that the District Magistrate who sentenced Dr. Jetha Nand to imprisonment is a Hindu and a Brahman 'who may well be trusted not to have harassed his fellow Hindu unnecessarily.' The District Magistrate is Diwan Bahadur Diwan Narendra Nath, but there is no question of a Hindu or Brahman at all. A Magistrate must administer the law as he finds it. Dr. Jetha Nand did not complain to Government probably because he thought he would get no redress and would be directed to obey the law or accept the consequences. The thanks of the public are due to the Lieutenant-Governor for protecting Dr. Jetha Nand against further prosecutions, but the protection refers to only this child. If Dr. Jetha Nand gets another child and refuses to vaccinate him will he be safe from prosecution? It is the law of compulsory vaccination that requires to be amended and the matter ought to be brought before the Government of India."

VII.—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION.

(a)—Judicial.

The Midnapur case.

19. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 24th August 1912 :—

"Anglo-Indian papers have been strongly criticising Mr. Justice Fletcher for his original decision in the well-known Midnapur case. But if a Judge has to suffer for giving his conscientious decision Mr. Justice Woodroffe and other Judges could as well be criticised by Indians. In this case it is not justice that we seek but decisions to suit party demands. Is this what the Anglo-Indians headed by the London Times want in India? The suggestion of the latter paper involving most damaging reflections on the Calcutta High Court is most mischievous. The one thing that Indians prize most in British rule is justice. It should be held above all party influence and executive exigencies. The Midnapur case has exposed more vagaries on the part of the executive than on that of the judiciary. The Pioneer says: 'If any Judge is desirous of learning the lesson what to avoid, we should recommend him to read that excellent authority Woodroffe on Fletcher—the most complete exposure we can recall having as yet come across of the judicial ineptitude in high places.' This is most unbecoming comment. It is equally open for justice Fletcher to write a commentary on Justice Woodroffe's Judgment and there are hundreds of men to admire it to each one who would admire the former. What is this leading to? We must deprecate criticism of this sort. When all is said in favour of the present decision, the balance of opinion and the facts disclosed are enough to humiliate the executive and condemn its procedure. What have Anglo-Indian papers to say on this?"

"Those whose fervent hope it is that British justice in India may never be influenced by any considerations but those of pure justice will be greatly disappointed in the final decision of the famous or notorious Midnapur case. As in most important cases of this kind where public expectations and interests are sharply divided and where both the parties are strong, judges have a very difficult task in keeping themselves uninfluenced by any. Usually the results of the trial are not beneficial entirely to any one party. A lot of exposure has been made and the weakness of one and all concerned in the whole case, not excluding those who decide it, have been exposed or subjected to severe public comment. In the long run, it is to the public opinion that people turn their attention for a moral and when that opinion is expressed in clear and impartial terms, we have the advantages of the trial. Singularly enough, the whole thing appears like a realistic and intensely interesting drama in which some important problem, social, religious or political, is sought to be explained. In the Midnapore case, we have an exciting political or rather an administrative drama with all the varying scenes and shifts which serve to give variety, lend interest and evolve a subtle or explicit moral. Tragic, sometimes comic, and not always with very relevant materials, the lengthy trial has been watched by the public, sometimes with intense interest and sometimes with a sleepy attention. Unless the present decision is appealed against, the last act and the final scene is over and the curtain has fallen finally over the drama. And now the public are free to draw what lessons they can and what inferences they please.

"The Midnapur case has been regarded as a veritable tragedy in official circles or, at any rate, by those Anglo-Indian papers who are their mouthpiece. They look upon it something like a murder and, having failed to find out somebody to be hanged on the gibbet, they have with the rage of utter disappointment turned towards Mr. Justice Fletcher for a victim. Mr. Justice Woodroffe, has helped to point out what he considers some of the serious mistakes of his learned colleague, Mr. Justice Fletcher, in his previous judgment. It is said that Mr. Justice Fletcher wrongly decreed for Rs. 1,000 as damages to the hero of the play for being victimised by those who have now turned the tables and become heroes in the last act. It is not that Rs. 1,000 is a ruinous amount—something like the 'pound of flesh' demanded by Shylock, but that the decree is a great blow to the prestige, position and official usefulness of those who have proved exceptionally good men all their life. All the elements of dramatic interest are here. The scene opens in Midnapur at a most exciting period of its history when bombs, arrests, accusations, condemnations are the order of the day. No man is safe or free from anxiety and no man is free from suspicion. Three men appear on the scene, or rather two with one behind. And they enter a rich man's house and find a bomb in a locked room. They arrest in all 28 persons, one of whom is a Raja and for one month or thereabouts most of them are kept in custody. That is the time for finding materials for developing this intensely vivid play. The next scene is laid in the court and with true dramatic effect, after some accusations, all but three are withdrawn from the trial. Very determined accusations are made against these as bomb makers and one of them has 'confessed' too. The audience watch the further developments with intense interest. Every detail of the case is interesting and there is no doubt as to the fate of those who are depicted as the traitors of the country, murderers and creators of human misery. But the last scene of this eventful act in the drama is again a surprise, a tragic-comic surprise, involving the acquittal of all the three, to the utter dismay of the accusing heroes and to the intense joy of the accused victims. When the Calcutta High Court pronounced the innocense of the three men, whose prolonged trial had caused intense suffering and a world of misery to the whole audience, there was great joy and there was also great disappointment to the other section of the zealous audience. Could human sensibility and interest allow the end of the drama here? Assuredly not. The acquitted and victorious party brought a suit of damages against their wilful accusers and this is the opening scene in the second half of the play. The public expected the natural end of it would be still more triumphant to the already successful party and public expectations were not disappointed when Mr. Justice Fletcher gave his judgment decreeing Rs. 1,000 as damages. That was regarded as adding insult to injury by the suffering party. In one of Shakespeare's masterpieces Shylock's character in the end is made particularly pathetic and famous critics have expressed that Shylock is a character that never was in reality, that never could be nor would be in the human kingdom. So it is with all excesses, rightful or wrongful, and they create forces which reverse the direction of human sympathy and judgment. The final appeal has been in the same manner, a reversal of the former processes, so far as such can be, amidst adverse circumstances. The whole of the Midnapur case affords a wonderfully interesting picture of high strung aims and emotions which are usually to be found in fiction. But life is sometimes stranger than fiction and far more interesting and its lessons will be remembered probably longer than many fascinating fictions are forgotten.

"It is doubtful whether any useful purpose would be served by criticising the judgment in this strange case. Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment has been strongly criticised by Mr. Justice Woodroffe and great capital is made out of this by certain papers. No doubt if Mr. Justice Somebody Else had opportunity of finding faults in Mr. Justice Woodroffe's findings, he would find materials to do it even more fully, given ample time, funds and somebody to listen to the same. Logic and facts can be marshalled as well as anybody else in any matter and as there is to be no finality in these processes and as we must accept the decisions of highly capable and conscientious judicial authorities, it is no use quarrelling over the findings in the one case as in the other. But there are certain lessons to be learnt, certain obvious morals to be drawn from this unique case which it is our earnest desire to point out. It will be admitted that the Midnapur case will never be considered as a triumph of official prestige in India. It will stand out in history as a remarkable, though costly, exposure of official failings and the real triumph is for those who so successfully exposed the wrongs, notwithstanding Mr. Justice Woodroffe's harsh comments on them. There is no doubt that the case is not of one man—nor of one object, but it is a test case in which not only were the people of Midnapur most directly interested, but the whole of Indians were indirectly. It involved principles, policies and methods which find parallels in many districts in India, varying only in effect and intensity. There is no force in Mr. Justice Woodroffe's condemnation that Mr. K. B. Dutt took unusual and active interest in the case. A thousand others would have done what this brave lawyer did, had they had a chance. Moreover various other officials of the districts were dragged in this case and it is certainly a most legitimate part of the case, having in view the exposure of the district administration. It is to be regretted that all the accusations that were indirectly made could not be proved. It is a defect affecting both the complainants and the defendants. The judges have prominently pointed out the difficulty of bringing evidence on behalf of the Crown against private men who are known for their complicity in offences. So it is with the subjects of the Crown who cannot always prove the well-known failings and excesses of proud officials. When 28 men were arrested for bomb-making and tried and all were acquitted, could not the other side marshall out a dozen officials and bring as many charges against them as possible and fail to prove any? The lessons of the Midnapur case are many. It is for the Government and the people to profit by them. The case is a regular fire-baptism to all, particularly to executive officials. Though the present judgment restores the lost prestige to officials concerned, and it is necessary in the present circumstances of the country not to weaken or deal harshly with them, so many obvious defects have been brought home that we hope the attitudes of District Magistrates, the police authorities and others will considerably improve in future. After all that is said in favour of the defendants in the case and after all the harsh words and angry protestations are exhausted about the other side, the sober conviction is—the serious defects of district administration and the unpardonable sin of combining executive and judicial functions. On the alter of this grim official goddess have many sacrifices been made and the Midnapur Drama is the culminating act of sacrifice, a humiliating tragedy. Six months hence no one could think of this historic case except with feelings of deep regret, if not humiliation. And when we reflect on the new turn given to Indian progress, of the rapidity with which events of 1906—1910 are being forgotten, and of the satisfied and settled condition of the country, we have a right to expect that the separation of judicial and executive functions and other reforms of district administration, that will restore popular confidence and the impartiality of British justice, will be effected without delay."

Recruitment of Munsifs in the Punjab.

* * * * *

Persistence in the present methods entails disastrous consequences. In fact, it will tend to make in some cases at least, as it has now been making, the administration of justice a mere parody. We propose here to refer to the existing rules for the recruitment of the Munsifs, for that, though the lowest, is perhaps the most important rung in the ladder of the judiciary as regards the extent of its connection with the litigants.

"Chapter 25 of the Rules and Orders of the Chief Court of the Punjab contains the rules made by the Chief Court with the previous sanction of the Local Government, under the powers conferred by section 25, sub-section (2), of the Punjab Courts Act, 1884, as amended, regulating the qualifications of persons to be appointed Munsifs. We make some extracts from them.

"I. Two registers of candidates for the office of Munsifs will be kept in the Chief Court Office namely:—

"A—a register of candidates who are eligible for appointment without passing the competitive examination hereinafter prescribed.

"B—a register of candidates who are only eligible for appointment after passing the competitive examination above mentioned.

"II. On the occurrence of a vacancy, whether permanent or temporary, in the office of Munsif, the District Judge of the district in which the vacancy occurs shall send immediate intimation of the fact through the Divisional Judge to the Chief Court. Permanent vacancies will ordinarily be filled up alternately from Register A and the candidates selected by competition from Register B. Temporary vacancies will ordinarily be filled up from Register A; and in appointing to such vacancies, the recommendations of the local authorities will be duly considered.

"It appears from the aforesaid extract that the candidates in Register A are in a privileged position as compared to candidates in Register B. The former have not got to pass any competitive examination and are alone eligible for temporary appointment. One may therefore well pause to enquire into the matter of their qualifications. These are to be found in schedule A appended to this chapter.

"'2. The following persons only will ordinarily be deemed eligible for admission to Register A, namely:—

"(a) officials who appear to be fitted for the office;

"(b) members of families who have rendered good service to the Government;

"(c) persons of good social position and influence in the country.'

"No minimum qualification as regards education is prescribed for candidates to the Register A. The other rule says that if any ministerial officer or other person described in the above quoted rule is deemed by the District Judge to be qualified for admission to Register A he shall be nominated by the former to the Divisional Judge, and on the latter's renomination, the candidate's name will be laid before the Chief Court and if accepted, will be entered in Register A. Once that is done, the candidate can get a temporary appointment without passing any departmental examination, and a permanent one after passing that test. We respectfully call the attention of the Government to the foregoing rules for enrolment as Munsifs.

* * * * * * * *

"It is fair to the Hon'ble Judges of the Chief Court to say that they recognised the anti-diluvian character of these rules. The recognition, however, has been extremely tardy and has led to no real improvement. In a letter dated 18th December 1909, to the Chief Secretary to the Punjab Government, the Registrar to the Chief Court recognises that the aforesaid 'rules were framed many years ago when the conditions were far different in the matter of education from what they are now' and that 'they have, in the opinion of the Hon'ble Judges, become out of date.' The letter further said that 'the difficulty that confronted the Court consisted in the fact that from two divisions a long list of most desirable candidates was received who could not be provided for, while they were under the rules obliged to accept far less suitable candidates in other divisions.'

"The admission that incompetent men of good family connections had been admitted into the judicial service by the operation of an anomalous and absurd rule was thus made by an autnority no less than the Chief Court only about two years ago. Has there been any real improvement since this discovery was made? The answer, we fear, will be largely in the negative. The authorities here are much too wedded to 'the principle of full local representation' to initiate any real reform. All that was done was a little patch-work. It was sought to widen a little the field of selection by allowing the Chief Court to consider along with the nomination rolls of ministerial officers and uneducated men of good family connections the claims of a few more candidates belonging to the Revenue Division in which the civil district or districts lie. No real reform can, however, be hoped by patchwork of this kind and the result is that Register A contains the names of a good many persons, who are not suitable for the heavy responsibilities and duties of a judicial officer."

The same paper publishes the following in its issue of the 30th August 1912:—

"In our previous articles, we have seen what a wide berth is given to merit and educational qualifications in nominations for the office of Munsif from Register A. What is extraordinary is that candidates admitted to Register A are pitchforked into the office of Munsif without having passed any University or competitive test whatever. It is true that they as well as candidates who are admitted to Register B on having passed the competitive test are required to pass a departmental examination. But that examination is by no means a stiff one, as will appear from the following extract in Rule V.

"The Departmental examination for candidates for the office of Munsif shall be the same as that prescribed for Assistant and Extra Assistant Commissioners by the Lower Standard in Groups A and B, namely:—.

"Group A consists of two subjects—Criminal Law—First and second papers (excluding questions on Jail Manual) and Civil Law first and second papers. Group B consists only of one subject, viz., Revenue Law, First and Second papers (excluding the vivâ voce examination in Settlement Reports).

"The minimum pass mark in each subject is 33 per cent. with an aggregate of 50 per cent. in each group. The peculiarity, however, of the Departmental Examination is that 'a candidate may write his answer in either the English or the Urdu language, but whichever language is used must be used throughout the examination.' So a knowledge of English is not at all compulsory for candidates admitted to Register A and they can enjoy all the emoluments of a Munsif (beginning with a salary of Rs. 175 per mensem), without ever having gone through the first English Primer. How these Munsifs manage to comprehend intricate points of civil, customary and case-law is indeed a mystery to us. Perhaps the inference is not at all unreasonable that they leave law and case-law to take care of themselves as best as they can. Can a greater anomaly, a grosser instance of exaltation of incompetence and detriment of merit be conceived? The existence of this absurd rule of admission to Register A is a slur and reproach to the administration of justice in the province, and the sooner it is removed the better for both the Government and the people.

"In a recent article, we found that 54 per cent. of the present Munsifs are graduates in Arts (not Law) of the Punjab University. These are mostly taken from candidates admitted to Register B. The latter are generally abler men than the candidates admitted to Register A, but even their qualifications leave a good deal to be desired. Candidates admitted to Register B are required to be natives of, or domiciled in the province and to have graduated in Arts, Law and Oriental Learning and to furnish, among other things, evidence of good social status. They have to further pass a competitive examination, on the result of which two or more appointments are allotted to the candidates obtaining the highest number of marks. The majority of Munsifs appointed, however, are taken from Register A and here, as we have said, educational qualification is not the determining factor. We do not deny that occasionally candidates with University qualifications are admitted to Register A. What we mean is that according to Rules, it is not incumbent on the authorities to look at all to educational qualifications. This is the reason why such a large proportion of our Munsifs are devoid of any University training and some are even innocent of the language in which legal authorities and rulings are written.

"We have thus examined the qualifications of candidates for admission to Registers A and B. We shall be considerably surprised if in this enlightened age any one comes forward to defend the appointments of ministerial officers or uneducated persons to judicial posts. The Chief Court does not defend this system and in his letter dated 18th December 1909 to the Chief Secretary of the Punjab Government, the Registrar frankly confessed that 'the Judges were under the rules obliged to accept far less suitable candidates in some divisions.' Why not then knock the Register A boldly on its head and make merit the real test for appointment to judicial offices? Has not this absurd rule had more than its day and must it not now cease to be? If the Local Government or the Chief Court hesitate to take the needed step, the Royal Commission on the Public Service will have to do so. We can no longer put up with an antiquated system. As regards Register B it has, we know, a distinguished defender in the present Lieutenant-Governor of the Province. Replying to the criticism made by the Hon'ble Messrs. Muhammad Shafi and Shadi Lal as to the constitution of the subordinate judiciary, His Honour said in the course of his Budget speech in 1910:—

"The attention of the Hon'ble Judges of the Chief Court will be invited to the question of appointing Munsifs from the local Bar. But I must point out to the Hon'ble Members that a great many of the gentlemen at present appointed were appointed by competition. Generally they are men, who have attained high intellectual maturity at an early age and would probably have risen high in the legal profession, for it is the pick of the University that enters for the open competition for the posts of Extra Assistant Commissioner and Munsif.

"It is true that this class is appointed as the result of a competitive examination, but the examination is not an open competition like the Indian Civil Service Examination nor is the test in any way a comprehensive test. The nature of the competitive test can be best known from the subjects prescribed for it. They are (1) composition, including an essay, (2) History of India, (3) Civil Procedure Code and Evidence Act, (4) the Court Fees Act, the Contract Act, the Stamp Act, the Specific Relief Act, the Registration Act and the Limitation Act, (5) Elementary Mathematics and (6) Urdu translation and manuscript reading. It cannot be said that this test brings out in any considerable degree the acumen of the candidates or can be a substitute for the LL.B. degree. We do by no means deprecate the value of a competitive test. On the other hand, we believe that it is the best test of intellectual and moral worth that can be conceived. But a degree in Law should be the preliminary condition for candidates allowed to compete and then we will have the best men for the posts and the best value for public money. We are quite prepared to allow Barristers also to compete for this test, if they so choose. At any rate, Register A should be done away with altogether and the appointment to judicial offices should be made only from men trained in Law. The adoption of this rule will also obviate the necessity of the unwholesome restriction that has been put upon the output of pleaders in this Province."

(d)—Education.

Religious education.

21. The Watan (Lahore), of the 19th August 1912, publishes a communication headed "A request to the just Government." The writer—one Maqbul Ahmad Khan, Assistant Secretary, Managing Committee of the Afghan Conference—says that Muhammadans are required by their religion to render obedience to their rulers. But, he adds, as there exist no satisfactory arrangements for imparting religious instruction to them, there is a fear of their ceasing to be obedient subjects by degrees. He, therefore, suggests that Hindu and Muhammadan Committees should be appointed in all villages and that arrangements should be made, in consultation with them, for the religious education of the followers of Islam and Hinduism. The funds wanted for the purpose should come out of the coffers of Government, a tax being, if necessary, imposed on the people also.

The racial Universities.

22. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 21st and 22nd August 1912, publishes an article headed "The proposed Muslim and Hindu Universities." The paper expresses surprise that, with the exception of certain Arya papers which are only anxious to see Hindus bestowing all their charity and enthusiasm on either the Dayanand College or the Gurukula, the Hindu press is studiously silent over the decision of Government regarding the Muslim and Hindu Universities—a decision which has filled the minds of Muhammadans with feelings of sorrow and disappointment. This may be due, it adds, either to the Hindu press being satisfied that the decision of Government is not likely to affect unpleasantly the University scheme, or to the idea that, when the required sum of money is realised, it will carry on such an agitation as to force Government to modify its decision, as it did in the case of the Partition of Bengal. After remarking that it is difficult to indicate the true feeling of the Hindu press in the matter, the paper says that there can be no denying the fact that the silence of Hindu newspapers, which are in the habit of making the welkin ring with their cries even in paltry cases, is extremely significant and that this, therefore, should receive due consideration at the hands of the Muslim community and its press. Continuing, it refers to an article in the Leader (Allahabad) on the subject and says that, according to this paper the conditions laid down by Government in the constitution of the Hindu University can be unhesitatingly accepted, seeing that they are not calculated to neutralise in any way the benefits which the Hindu University is likely to confer on the Hindu community. Referring to the nomenclature, the Leader approves the term "the Benares University" and says, "we will not surely sacrifice an excellent, useful and magnificent educational scheme for the sake of a single word." Continuing, it says that it is a valuable concession on the part of the Secretary of State to permit the (Hindu) University to elect its own chancellor in the capacity of a free and non-official body. It is undoubtedly true, it adds, that Government has reserved for itself some powers (to interfere in the affairs of the University) and that they will be exercised nominally by the Viceroy himself and actually by the Governor-General in Council, but it may, at the same time, be observed that this can scarcely make any difference, seeing that His Excellency is not likely to have time to attend to matters concerning the Hindu University, these powers in fact, under all circumstances, being exercised by the Education Department of the Government of India. But in making this assertion, says the Paisa Akhbar, the Leader forgets that it is because the Viceroy is not likely to find sufficient time to attend to University matters, that the leaders of the Muslim and Hindu Universities' movement were anxious to induce His Excellency to become the chancellor of the two Universities, and to afford by his supervision valuable help in their management. Now, however, as it has been decided that the Viceroy will not be the chancellor of the two Universities, it is apparent that the Education Department will take advantage of the powers of the chancellor to increase the influence of Government in the affairs of the Universities and to deprive them of any freedom in the details of management, as in the existing official Universities. Proceeding, the Leader refers to the grants-in-aid which Government has expressed its intention of conferring on the two Universities, and says that they can be accepted, provided they do not inordinately increase the influence of Government in the supervision of the affairs of the Universities and do not destroy their self-governing character. In saying this, it lays great stress on the desirability of making educational institutions free, and quotes from the speeches of Lord Beaconsfield and Mr. Gladstone in support of its assertion. It, however, fails to see how the Universities can remain free, when the powers of a chancellor are exercised by the Governor-General in Council or, in other words, by the Education Department. After remarking that the Leader has nothing to object to in the decision of Government limiting the scope of the Universities in the matter of affiliation, the paper says that the views of the Muslim community in all these matters are absolutely at variance with those of a powerful and influential Hindu organ like the Leader, and that it may, therefore, be asked whether the Muhammadan leaders will consider these matters and dive beneath them.

"A queer incident is recorded in one of Mr. Rabindranath Tagore's celebrated short stories. It took place several years ago on the river Padma in East Bengal. As soon as the sail of a boat caught the wind and swelled out to its proper extent, a European officer standing with a gun in hand on board a passing steamer lodged a bullet into it. It burst, and the boat sank at once. It was not of course the intention of our heroic hunter to sink the boat. Only he could not resist a sudden wild desire to bring an inflated canvas to a dramatic collapse. He showed no signs of a sportful tendency till the filling in of the ill-fated sail with the requisite amount of wind to make it a fit target for his gun. The matter was regarded in Court as an innocent outburst of exuberant animal spirit.

"We are afraid the Secretary of State's 'final decision' with regard to the Hindu and Muslim Universities has points of similarity to the strange incident recorded above. We are hardly inclined to deny that he did not mean any harm to the Universities. But that he should have silently allowed the people to be inflated with high hopes with regard to the movement, and dealt a fatal blow on the eve of their realisation, is a line of procedure which is distinctly sportful, if not worse. Even the Anglo-Indian Press has failed to admire this queer method of doing things. The Empire rightly asks if the scheme was wrong why was it not frowned upon from the beginning? This Anglo-Indian paper goes so far as to say that the Government has laid itself open to the accusation of having roused hopes which it never intended should materialise. There is perhaps yet time to recede."

The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated the 24th August 1912:—

"Below we publish a brief spirited article from 'Confident' on the Secretary of State's recent decision which has irritated the minds of the Muslim public so deeply. The article is bitterly one-sided, but it would be wrong to withhold it as it is just such an outspoken expression of views which really represents the disappointment now prevailing in the community.

"OUR FINAL WORD."

"SIR,—Muhammadans, if they were wise should welcome the decision of the Secretary of State to limit the benefits of our proposed Muhammadan University to Aligarh and to name it only the University of Aligarh. So much the better. It will give us the greater pleasure to make the Secretary of State modify his orders. The decision is final. So much the better. It will be a greater triumph for us to make him rescind his decision. They now know how to rescind decisions. Nothing is 'settled'—and they have taught us the way to achieve success. So let us welcome this decision. They are trying our mettle. Let us show them that it is not easy to dictate ideals. The decision to call it merely the University of Aligarh is an egregious blunder. So much the greater cause for rejoicing. We will have it called the Muslim University.

"Does the word Muslim offend and must it be deleted? No, never! A million times never! But why this short-sighted policy? Is the Government afraid of Pan-Islamism? Or what? Surely from the educational point of view, there is everything to gain and nothing to lose if the Muslim University could have the power to affiliate a few other colleges. Mind you—we do not want any sudden affiliation. All that is required is the power. A college will be affiliated if it deserved that distinction. If it does not, it will have to wait, till it does. But why refuse us even the power? Let the word, therefore, go forth to each and every Musalman that we want an unfettered Muslim University. And no power in the world should be able to induce us to have anything else or anything less. Our ideal of a Muslim University was to us more fair than a garden—more glorious than an empire. Shall we let our hopes be blighted? Adversity is trying us; but adversity will find us united.

"We committed the initial mistake of begging for the University as a matter of favour. We should have demanded it as a matter of right. We grovelled into the dust when we did the former, and our wishes were not accepted. Let us do the latter and we shall be respected. It is now a trial of moral strength and whoever yields is not of us. Better proverty with honour than riches with slavery. This is our final word.

CONFIDENT."

Writing under the heading "The Islamic University," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 21st August 1912, reproduces a passage in a speech by Victor Hugo in which he asked his fellow-countrymen to remember the rights of which they had been deprived, adding that otherwise they need not expect to achieve any success. These words, states the paper, were uttered by the greatest of French poets and orators at a meeting held to end the despotism prevalent (in France) in his time. A careful consideration of the heartlessness with which Muhammadan public opinion has been trampled on in connection with the Muslim University scheme and of the despotic way in which the highest and long-cherished expectations of the Prophet's followers have been disregarded, will show that such treatment does not "affect Musalmans in any lesser degree than the Bastille incident (did the people of France)."* The only difference is that, while in France (lit. there) there was a patriot like Victor Hugo, whose fiery speeches overturned Louis Napoleon's throne, "here" are to be found "traitors to the (Islamic) nation" whose "constitutional" doings are about to end the Muslim University scheme. Next the paper refers to the schemes promulgated since Sir Sayad's time about the establishment of a University at Aligarh, and observes that the same had the effect of making Muhammadans believe, among other things, that the proposed institution would not be liable to any interference from Government, and that it would be possible to affiliate to it Islamic Colleges in all parts of the country. It was in this belief, it adds, that they collected the funds required for the University, and that also at a critical time, when their brethren were being butchered in Tripoli, Persia, and Morocco for the sole offence of professing Islam, and when every house in Muhammadan India was a place of mourning in consequence. Proceeding, the paper speaks of the limited scope of the projected seat of learning, as also of the control which Government proposes to exercise over it; and goes on to say that the University will only supply hands for employment in Government offices, because it will impart only the so-called education which can merely augment the number of slaves; that it will not add in the least to the prosperity of the (Muslim) community, for the reason that a slavery-promoting machine cannot make any people prosperous, and that it will not be a Muhammadan University even in name. The believers in the Kalima should, therefore, gird up their loins to protest (against the proposed arrangements) for all time to come, bearing in mind the Right Hon'ble Sayad Amir Ali's words, "go on fighting for truth, no matter whether this may prove injurious for you. It is you who will triumph in the end." If the disgrace they are about to suffer and the ruin which overhangs their future as a community, mean death and destruction for Muslims, then they should be always mindful of that destruction and shed tears over their (likely) future. "The deluge flowed out of an oven; cannot your hearts' furnace give rise even to a flood, which will carry the rubbish of despotism before it?"

The Punjab University and the Punjabi language.

23. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 24th August 1912, publishes an article headed "The Punjab University puts the knife to the throat of Urdu." Previous to 1857, it says, Government used to follow the principle that the official and court, as also the literary and popular language of the Indian people, should be one and the same, so as to admit of their being united into one nation. After 1857, however, it began to favour the use of different languages in the various provinces, which were not, moreover, to have common interests. The result was that while formerly there existed lovers of Urdu like John

* Sic.

Gilchrist, "we" have had lately to confront such enemies of that language as Antony MacDonnell. Next the paper says that Hindus have raised a storm of bigotry and hatred against Urdu, and the authorities, instead of calming the storm have added force to it, with the result that it has swept Urdu out of Behar, the Central and the United Provinces. The Punjab was looked upon as the last ditch for Urdu, but it has been turned out of that province also. There comes the bewildering news that the Punjab University has announced rewards of Rs. 1,500 and Rs. 500 for the best Punjabi original work, and the best Punjabi translation of any scientific, philosophical or historical book, respectively, produced in 1911. The rewards given for (Maulvi Shibli's) Sher-ul-Ajam and the (Editor's) translation of the Conflict of Science and Religion had the effect of converting the houses of the opponents of Urdu into places of mourning. And their lamentation drove the Punjab University to the narrow-minded decision that rewards for literary works should not only be confined to the Punjab, but that half of them should be reserved for a rude and vulgar dialect like Punjabi. In conclusion, the Editor says that, to the best of his knowledge, no Punjabi book of the requisite merit was published in 1911, and that the only interpretation he can place on the above announcement is that the University has cut the throat of Urdu with the knife given to it by the heartless enemies of that language.

Mineral productions of India.

* * * * * * * *

"Among the mineral productions of India coal occupies the first place. Of the total output of coal in the country over 95 per cent. is claimed by Bengal. In that Province there was an increase of 691,598 tons which exceeds the increase for the rest of the whole of India which amounted to 661,010 tons. The increase was confined to the Jheria coal field where the output increased 10 per cent. or by over half a million tons. There were increases of 2·35 and 3·70 per cent. in the Ramgary and Giridih coal fields respectively, and a decrease mainly from Palamau, of 13·22 per cent. in the smaller coal fields. These figures show that there is no progress in India so far as the exploration of new tracts or coal fields is concerned. The department of Geological Survey has been now at work for many years and surely it should have discovered the many and vast coal fields that are in the country and which so far have not been worked. In the North-West Frontier Province where the output is infinitesimal an increase of 55 per cent. it reported. In the other Provinces outside Bengal there were decreases as follows : Assam 74 per cent., Baluchistan 2·29 per cent., the Central Provinces 4 per cent. and the Punjab 37·84 per cent. These decreases all require explanation. That relating to the Punjab is the fact that the Dandot Colliery which used to be worked by the North-Western Railway closed during the year. Since the report was compiled an enterprising firm of Punjabis has taken the lease for the working of this mine. The owners of coal mines have a grievance against the railway administration which requires to be redressed before the coal mine industry in the Punjab can ever hope to acquire a footing. The freight on coal is a heavy item and purchasers in the Punjab find it cheaper to import coal from Calcutta than buy it in the Province. If the freight charged by the North-Western Railway in coal were reduced to the same level as that on the East Indian Railway and on the North-Western Railway itself for distances over 300 miles, there would be an appreciable fall in the price of coal to purchasers in the Punjab. As regards the coal trade Mr. Adams says that it was generally better than in 1910 and improved throughout the year. It is stated that owing to a late harvest and consequent scarcity of labour in Bengal during the autumn the year closed without much accumulated stock at the collieries. Some interesting statistics relating the average output of each worker in the mines are given in the report. The average in England for the ten years ending in 1910 was 287 tons per person employed above and below ground. In India it was 174 and 113 tons respectively. In Bengal it was 178 and 165, in the Central Provinces 172 and 118; in Assam 245 and 255; in Baluchistan 79 and 67; and in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province 32 and 44. The average in the Punjab is very low. No attempt is made in the report to explain it. Surely the Punjabi labourer is as hardy as his brother in Bengal or the Central Provinces. There must be something in the condition of the mines which explains this very striking disparity."

I.—Politics.

China, Tibet and Great Britain.

1. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 1st September 1912 :—

"The memorandum sent by Sir John Jordan, British Minister at Peking, to the Chinese Government on Tibet raises an international issue of the highest importance. The subject of reference is the intention of China to incorporate Tibet as a province. Sir John Jordan 'declares that the Tibetans ought to be allowed to manage their own internal affairs without Chinese interference, and recommends a new Anglo-Chinese Agreement as a precedent to the recognition by Great Britain of the Republic. The memorandum reviews the situation in Tibet, and suggests that China should station a representative at Lhassa to advise the Tibetans on questions of foreign policy. This representative might have a bodyguard, but China ought not to station unlimited soldiery in Tibet, nor send an expedition. The memorandum further says that China at present ought not to use India as a highway to Tibet.' Following immediately on the Peace Mission which China has sent to Tibet and which passed through Calcutta the other day the memorandum has a special significance. The humane and laudable object that Great Britain has in view will command general approval, but the international questions involved are whether England as a friendly Power can intervene between China and Tibet or take any action to restrict the suzerainty of China over Tibet. There is no interregnum in China. The Empire has been succeeded by the Republic, the recognition of which by the British Government is only a formal matter. The recent anarchy and fighting in Tibet are to be deeply deplored, but diplomatic representations cannot exceed the limitations of international relations. It is of course in the highest degree desirable that China should act on the friendly and sound advice of England, but should she elect to stand on her rights as the suzerain of Tibet what can England do to force her hands? There is of course the proposed new Anglo-Chinese Agreement as a condition precedent to the recognition by Great Britain of the Chinese Republic, but it is difficult to understand how the relations between China and Tibet can be made part of that agreement. Pending such an agreement it is further suggested that China ought not to use India at present as a highway to Tibet. This practically means, if insisted upon, a rupture of friendly relations. Apart, however, from the complications of international questions the advice of Great Britain is in the best interests of China and Tibet and ought to be accepted by China in the same friendly spirit in which it is offered."

England and Russia.

2. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912, publishes a communication headed "A terrible danger," in which one Muhammad Ismail Khan, of Bombay, expresses his inability to understand why England reposes confidence in an oppressive and merciless power like Russia and has permitted her to extend her railway system to the (north-west) frontier of India. After remarking that recent Muscovite efforts to promote friendship with Japan are fraught with danger for India, he says that, being afraid of the large Afghan forces at Herat, Russia wishes to reach the Indus through Persia and Baluchistan (? by building the proposed Trans-Persian Railway). Moreover, she is cementing her friendship with Germany to ensure the latter not opposing her (advance towards India) after she (Germany) has acquired influence in Asia Minor by constructing the Baghdad Railway. She is also trying to win over Italy to her side in order to place herself in a position (successfully) to withstand the (British) fleets in the Mediterranean at Malta, Cyprus and Gibraltar.

England and Tibet.

3. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 30th August 1912, has a note headed "The Tibetan question and the British Government." Adverting to an article recently published by the London Times on the above subject, the paper says that "The Thunderer" lays stress on the posting of a British representative at Lhassa, which will perhaps be a dangerous step. It is, however, the duty of the British Government to protect Tibet against Chinese oppression, seeing that it was Lord Curzon's Lhassa expedition that brought China the suzerainty of Tibet.

Indian Muhammadans and the war in Tripoli.

4. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 30th August 1912, in an article headed "Test of the sense of national self-respect of Indian Muhammadans", says that black clouds overhang the entire Muhammadan world in these days. From the recent doings in Tripoli, Persia, Morocco and the European Provinces of Turkey, it is obvious, says the paper, that the civilised powers of Europe have made up their minds to sweep Islam off the face of the earth. The hearts of Indian Musalmans are bleeding like those of their oppressed co-religionists, and they feel still more grieved at the thought of Government not being very kind to them now and of the authorities having gone back on their promise to give them a University. The paper then goes on to say that they are in the wrong who think that the Tripolitan war is a local affair and that Muhammadans in India ought to have no concern with it. The war is no mere conflict between Italy and Turkey, but is a question of life and death for the Prophet's faith. It has imposed different duties on the followers of Islam in all quarters of the globe. Those self-respecting Musalmans in and around Tripoli who can bear arms have been desperately fighting the enemy on the battle-field. It is, however, difficult for "us" and (other) such Muhammadans as live very far from Turkey's African possession, to break the heads of Italians. If, however, "we" are men and true Musalmans, it is morally incumbent on "us" to render pecuniary help to Muslim sufferers in Tripoli.

Turkish affairs.

5. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 30th August 1912, publishes a letter, dated the 1st idem, from its Constantinople correspondent, Muhammad Abdul Wali Khan, to the effect that the recent political changes, which he describes in detail, in Turkey are thought to be beneficial for "the country and the nation." The non-Muslims inhabiting Turkey are, says the writer, mortal enemies of the Turks, in spite of their being under great obligation to them. They say that, so long as the Osmanalis continue believing in the Kalima, Christians will go on regarding them as the enemies of "life, property and the country." Proceeding, the writer says that the entire banking business (in Constantinople) is in the hands of foreigners, and that there is not a single bank (in the city) started by the Turks themselves. He spoke of this to some (Turkish) young men, "who have had better experience," but their reply was that they could do something only if "the champions of civilisation and enlightenment" (Christians of Europe) gave them breathing time. As it was, they added, new moves were daily made against them at the embassies. The correspondent then reports that the (Turkish) Government has engaged itself in establishing different factories in the country, and he wishes to inform (Muhammadan) traders in India that there is a great demand for leather in Turkey. Two respectable Turkish merchants, who are (also) Government contractors, have desired him to tell Indian capitalists like Sir Adamji Peerbhoy, of Bombay, through the Zamindar, that leather, Khaki drill, silk, and the cloth used in making tents and kanats is not only required by Government, but that a trade in these articles can be carried on with Bulgaria also. If he was supplied with samples together with a price list, he would gladly show them to Turkish traders and make arrangements.

The paper also publishes a letter, dated the 2nd August, in which the writer states that the appointment of Ahmad Mukhtar Pasha as Prime Minister has afforded satisfaction to all, and has much improved the situation. The recent changes are also likely to prevent Military Officers from dabbling in politics in the future.

Turkey and her enemies.

6. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 30th August 1912, publishes a cartoon designed by one Muhammad Ismail Khan, painter, in which Italy, Germany, Austria and Russia are shown standing near a globe, while John Bull peeps out at them from behind a curtain. In the letter-press the four countries declare their desires for various Turkish possessions, while John Bull addresses them as follows:—

"Hypocrites, remember (that) so long as even one Englishman lives you will assuredly fail to achieve your aims. British youths will convert your countries into deserts with the hoofs of their horses. (Your) safety consists only in restraining yourselves."

The Government of India and Opium.

7. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 31st August 1912 :—

"A resolution appeared in a recent issue of the Gazette of India on the subjects of opium eating and opium smoking in this country. Both these points are dealt with in an exhaustive manner, and the views of the Government of India regarding them are set forth clearly and succinctly. It is clear from the Resolution that the Government of India adhere to the policy recognised by them some years ago that everything that is possible in reason should be done to discourage the use of opium in the country. Considerations relating to revenue do not at all enter into an elucidation of this policy. Indeed it has cost and will cost ere long the Government several millions sterling. The financial side of the question has been entirely subordinated to its moral side. No fault can be found with the Government of India at present. Indeed it is admitted that they have made ample amends for the past when Indian opium was practically forced on the people of China * * * The Government of India have done well to differentiate between the deleterious habit of opium smoking and the use of opium in small quantities for medicinal or semi-medicinal purposes. Whilst they are determined to put down the former with a firm hand, they are anxious that the latter habit which is harmless and is even useful in certain circumstances should not be altogether suppressed. Sensible persons in India will cordially endorse this attitude. We might at once mention that in the detailed regulations relating to the use of opium for medical and semi-medical purposes there is nothing to which even the most fanatical anti-opiumists can in reason take exception."

The Eurasian Problem.

8. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 1st September 1912 :—

"There has been a good deal of correspondence regarding the Eurasian problem in the columns of the Calcutta papers, and among the mass of letters which advocate the concession of specially favoured treatment for the Eurasian there have been some which discuss the question impartially. These latter urge the sensible view that unless the Eurasians are taught the value of self-help their difficulties will never be overcome. According to one correspondent 'the Eurasian problem stands thus: the Eurasian is unable to hold his own under the existing conditions of his economic environment. That is his confession and the basis of his case. He refuses to go elsewhere to seek work or better himself. Instead he demands exceptional treatment to enable him to live in India, and he demands it through the machinery and at the expense of the State. These being the facts the simple question is—what case has the Eurasian made out for the creation in India of special economic conditions for himself at the expense of the English, the Hindu and the Muhammadan tax-payers? Translated into the vernacular of tariff, he asks for 'protection.' What case has he made out for it?' As Lord Hardinge very appropriately said in one of his very first utterances in India special favours to any one class in the country mean unfairness to other classes. Mere sentiment ought not to be allowed to have anything to do with the solution of problems which depend upon hard facts and economic considerations. As the writer to whom we have already referred in this note very appositely says, economic and political problems cannot be satisfactorily solved along the lines of mere sentiment, and the value of a little plain speaking, when there is a tendency to darken counsel with words, is considerable. It is equally true that the case of the Eurasian 'resembles closely the case of many other classes throughout the world at the present time, inasmuch as it needs self-generated moral evolution to mend it, not a fairy god-mother, in the shape of the State, bringing gifts. It is possible that education may do something for the community if it succeeds in forming character, but the church can do more for them by inculcating a truer knowledge of the dignity of work, a higher ideal of Christian duty.' This is the advice of a genuine friend and a well-wisher of the community and it is based on a comprehensive proof of the salient points of the problem."

The Government of India and the Punjab.

9. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 5th September 1912 :—

"We have already announced that Mr. M. S. D. Butler, Deputy Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, who has been appointed Joint Secretary to the Royal Commission, will be succeeded by Mr. W. C. Cotton who is a Madras Civilian. The Home Department will thus be without a single Punjab Civilian in any of its higher posts. The Member in charge, Sir Reginald Craddock, is a Central Provinces Civilian, whilst Mr. Wheeler, the Home Secretary, comes from Bengal. In the Finance Department all the posts—from Member down to Deputy Secretary—are held by non-Punjabis. The same is the case with the Legislative Department, the Education Department and the Department of Commerce and Industry. The only appointment in the Government of India held by a Punjab Commission man is that of Secretary in the Department of Revenue and Agriculture. We refer to Mr. E. D. Maclagan. It is true that the present Foreign Secretary, Sir Henry MacMahon, also belongs to the Punjab Commission, but it must be remembered at the same time that the Foreign Department has little or nothing to do with the actual administration of the country. It concerns itself exclusively with Native States. There is no doubt considerable truth in the complaint that the Punjab is not at all adequately represented in the present personnel of the Government of India. The large majority of the important matters concerning the internal administration of the various Provinces are dealt with in the Home Department and it is in that Department that this Province requires to be adequately represented."

The Public Services Commission.

10. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 3rd September 1912 :—

* * * * * * * *

"The people in India are well aware that the later type of Civil Servants do not bear comparison with the older men whose names are held in high veneration in India for their sympathetic, sound and progressive views and for just dealings. The bulk of the educated Indians are not satisfied with the averge type of civilians. They are not noted, with a few exceptions, for the qualities of their head or the heart. Educated Indians having opportunities of moving with them find the difference between the better material available in India now and the mediocre talent imported at great expense from England. Intellectually and in point of efficiency the Indians can bear any open test and be sure of winning. Of course, there are a number of superior English officers whose administrative ability is admired by Indians and whose services would be necessary. But their number is comparatively small, and while we must have more of that superior type of men, there is no reason why the mediocre type should be as largely imported as now. It is certainly a question worth deep consideration whether they cannot with advantage be replaced by Indians.

"To this there has been only one excuse, and that excuse is nearly twenty years old. But Sir Valentine Chirol has lately given it the strength of his hearty approval. It is the plea of a minimum number of Englishmen ruling India, and the apologists of this theory maintain that the minimum number has already been reached and whether good, bad or indifferent, there must be 1,200 Europeans recruited in London, in order to retain India for England. Twenty years ago Lord Lansdowne urged the same political excuse to ignore the Parliamentary decision of 1893. The Aitchison Commission said that it was inexpedient to hold simultaneous examination in India, but in 1893, June 2, a Parliamentary recommendation was made that the examinations 'shall henceforth be held simultaneously both in India and England, such examination in both countries being identical in their nature, and all who compete, being classified in one list according to merit.' This recommendation was in conformity with that of the councillors of the India Office in 1860 and the subsequent resolution of Mr. Fawcett in 1870. But Lord Lansdowne in India and Sir Henry Fowler in England put in the plea of the minimum number of European officials. They said: 'it would be entirely out of the question to reduce the existing minimum of Europeans at the present time.' But from the opinions expressed by Sir Valentine Chirol nearly 20 years after the above plea was made, the presumption is that the situation in India has not changed! And the plea urged for the 'present time only' in 1893, is said to hold good in 1913. It is pertinent to ask whether 20 years have made no difference in the progress of India, so far as the minimum number of European officials is concerned.

"There is certainly no magic in the minimum number, nor is it a political theory in any other country of the world. Without questioning the ability of the bulk of the English Civilians, it cannot be said that without them India would not exist and would not prosper. Moveover, the circumstances under which the minimum number theory was invented were extraordinary and undoubtedly temporary. The administrators of India are pledged to the principle of racial equality in the case of Indian subjects of the Crown. The pledge is handed down from the time of Lord William Bentinck and Sir Charles Trevelyan. The Parliamentary statute of 1833 laid down that 'no native of India nor any natural born subject of His Majesty resident therein shall, by reason only of his religion, place of birth, descent, colour or any of them be disabled from holding any place, office or any employment under the said Government.' Twenty years later in 1853 when the Charter of the East India Company was revised men like Macaulay and Bright raised their voice against the neglect of Indians. And when the Government passed to the Crown in 1858, provision was made in Section 32 of the Parliamentary Act 'for admitting all persons, being natural born subject of Her Majesty who may be desirous of becoming candidates for appointment to the Civil Service of India to be examined as candidates accordingly.' The Queen's Proclamation said: 'We hold ourselves bound to the natives of our Indian territories by the same obligations of duty which bind us to all our other subjects, and these obligations, by the blessings of Almighty God, we shall faithfully and conscientiously fulfill.' The Secretary of State appointed a Committee to consider the question of employment of Indians in the Civil Service and that committee reported in 1870 pointing out that two modes were open :—

"The first was by allotting a certain portion of the total number of appointments declared in each year to be competed for in India by natives and by all the other natural born subjects of Her Majesty resident in India. The second was to hold simultaneously two examinations, one in England and one in India, both being, as far as practicable, identical in their nature and those who compete in both countries being finally classified in one list according to merit by the Civil Service Commissioners.

"The Committee added that they 'have no hesitation in giving the preference to the second scheme as being the fairest and the most in accordance with the principle of the general competition for a common object. These are the early foundations of a sound and just policy which has been to this day ignored by local administrators. Even the plea of the minimum number of European officers was urged twenty years ago and to-day no question but that of efficiency and fitness can be urged in establishing the most acceptable policy. Mr. Montagu has pointed out other reasons. That there are disabilities which practically exclude Indians from higher appointments notwithstanding merit cannot be denied. How to remove these disabilities, while at the same time securing British officers of higher administrative worth is to be decided as a result of the Royal Commission. Two things should be remembered in this connection. One is that justice must be done to India at last, if Indians are to be conciliated by deeds and not merely by means of words. The second is that Indian loyalty could not be based on the 'minimum number' of European officers or of machine guns, but on the spontaneous gratitude and moral fervour resulting from the old and often forgotten maxim of Lord William Bentinck that 'India is to be governed for the benefit of Indians.' If the Commission keep these two things in mind in their enquiry their labours will be fruitful of much enduring good to India and to its permanent connection with England."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The All-Punjab Sikh Association.

11. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 30th August 1912 :—

"The resolution passed by the various Sikh Associations in the Province for the representation of the Sikhs on District and Municipal Boards and Legislative Councils have created a flutter in the dove-cots of the sister communities, especially in those of the Hindus. So long they have had the upper hand in the Councils of the Empire. Whenever public opinion has had to be consulted it is the Hindus or the Musalmans who have had their say, Sikh opinion has neither been sought nor ever been offered. No wonder, therefore, that the signs of the present awakening should have come upon our neighbours as a surprise. We hope the community has begun to shake off its torpor and that it is in right earnest to make its political existence felt. It is a sad commentary on the patriotism and the public spirit of the present-day Sikhs that they should have so long done nothing to provide for themselves an organization under the auspices of which they might take steps for the safe-guarding of their rights. There has never been nor is there now any lack of material for an organization of this sort. We know the feeling has been general for some years past that the Sikhs should have a political platform of their own. The difficulty has been on the score of leaders and we are afraid even now we are not so rich in the right sort of men who could be trusted for the safe conduct of the movement. Our esteemed friend and brother, the late Sardar Gurcharan Singh, Barrister-at-Law, Lahore, sounded the Sikhs assembled at the first Sikh Educational Conference at Gujranwala on the desirability of starting an organization of this kind on the lines on which later on the Muslim League was founded. Sometime after he issued a circular letter to this effect to his friends all over the Province. The response was great and genuine and had it not been for the opposition of certain over-imaginative persons who apprehended that the proposed movement would divert the attention of the Panth from the existing organizations and would directly prejudice their usefulness, the scheme of our amiable and loving friend would have assumed a practicable shape and he would have done a lot of work for it before the cruel hand of Fate put an end to his promising career. * * * * We shall not be surprised to learn that brother Gurcharan Singh's mantle has fallen on the shoulders of one worthy of it and that he is only waiting for the opportunity to receive a call. May we suggest that a place of meeting be appointed to consider the ways and means for launching the scheme during the next Dussehra holidays. We shall be glad to give prominent insertion to suggestions for the furtherance of this national cause."

The Muslim League, London, on Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

12. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912, has an article headed "How can the pleasant hopes of unity between Hindus and Muhammadans be realised ?" In continuation of its previous remarks about the London Muslim League's proposals (vide paragraph 13 of Selections No. 35), the paper says that the religious differences between the two communities can never be removed. Hindus and Muhammadans, are, however, neighbours, fellow-subjects, and amenable to the same laws. It is on this basis alone that a union between them is possible as well as necessary. The only way to bring about this unity is that the parties should follow a policy of equality in respect of political matters, and should not insult each other's social and religious feelings. Nor should they view the educational or commercial advancement of each other with jealous eyes. After remarking that the aforesaid policy of equality consists in allowing either community a share in "political matters" according to its ability and numerical strength, the paper goes on to say that, if Mr. Amir Ali and his colleagues of the League are really desirous of uniting Hindus and Muhammadans, they should make their co-religionists accept these conditions. As to those in India who share this desire, they should cure their co-religionists of their madness of political importance and preferential treatment. The Prophet's followers should also discontinue wounding the feelings of Hindus in their writings and speeches about the cow-killing question. Otherwise it will be concluded that they are not sincere in their wishes for union, and that they have really some ulterior object.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 31st August 1912, says that,—according to the Englishman—one of the causes of the existing disunion between Hindus and Muhammadans is the formers' objection to the special electorates formed for Muhammadans and to the excessive Muslim representation on Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils. The followers of Islam are not, however, prepared to recede even an inch from the position now occupied by them. They left the protection of their rights and interests to Hindus for full forty years, and put up in silence with the latter's preponderance in all departments of Government. When, however, it was practically proved to them, after this long experience, that Hindus treat them like step-brothers and place racial feelings above morality and justice in every thing, they felt themselves compelled to try to secure the right of separate representation. Further, the Englishman says that cow-killing is another cause of disunion between the two communities. But, says the Paisa Akhbar, for Muhammadans, the question has an important economical aspect, and, if Hindus can find a solution to it in this respect, Muhammadans would gladly give up not only the sacrifice of cows but also the daily use of beef.

"We publish elsewhere the fourth annual report of the London branch of the All-India Muslim League; and we must say that a careful perusal of the report has given us real pleasure, pleasure not only at the steady activity displayed by the League throughout the last year and the striking success achieved by it in various phases of Muslim public life, but also—and this, to our mind, is by far the more important point of the two—at the keen political sagacity of its workers and the remarkable acumen which they have brought to bear on the consideration of the various problems that have from time to time engaged the attention of the Muslim world. With that veteran leader, the Right Hon'ble Syed Ameer Ali, P.C., C.I.E., LL.D., holding in his tried hands the reins of the League, our vital national interests are in safe custody; and every page of the present report bears eloquent and emphatic testimony to the rare capability and gratifying success with which he has performed his arduous duty. It is a matter of unalloyed satisfaction that the Indian Musalmans are represented in the heart of the empire by a body of men, whose deliberations are guided by Mr. Ameer Ali; and while his is the most prominent figure among the London Muslims, the fact is well-known that his personality has made an indelible impression on the Indian Muslim mind and that no living man has made a deeper mark on the general policy of his co-religionists in this country than the talented Muhammadan member of the English Privy Council.

"The report may well be regarded as embodying a succinct account of the activity of the Indian Musalmans as a whole during the year 1911-12 in the domain of politics and as setting forth a comprehensive but detailed statement of their national policy in questions of high import. There is hardly a point of importance which came into prominence last year on which the League has not pronounced its view with clear emphasis, in language at once firm and temperate, and in a manner both constitutional and independent. We do not mean to say that there is no possibility of difference of view or that the Indian Muslims should premanently bind themselves to the pronouncement with fetters of iron. There is always room for honest difference of opinon and the progress of time and the shifting circumstance of the day will ever call for a re-adjustment of the political locus, necessitating, in consequence, the adoption of other ideals of politics and different methods of works. But taking into consideration the existing conditions of life in India, as well as the Muslim world, and keeping in view the limitations of our environment and the inter-relationship of Muslim and non-Muslim nations, the policy of the London League, as outlined in the report under review, cannot but be considered as the only correct policy for us to follow. We have said above that there is room for honest difference of opinion, and, by way of illustration, it may be explained that we are not inclined to place much reliance on the feasibility of the plan suggested by the League for the promotion of Hindu-Muslim cordiality. We yield to none in our desire for it and in our anxiety to bridge over the gulf that at present unfortunately divides the two principal communities of India from one another. But the chasm can be crossed only by the united efforts of the leaders of both communities. A conference of the prominent members of the different sub-divisions of the two nations may perhaps evolve a better plan of conciliation."

European visitors to the Jumma mosque, Delhi.

13. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 31st August 1912, has an article headed "The greatest Islamic Kingdom of the world." The Editor says that he has always heard Great Britain spoken of in the above terms and that it is owing to this position that the Prophet's followers have shed their blood for her. Their reward has, however, been that, after they have collected money to found a University in order to relieve Government of the burden of their education, they have been told that they cannot call it a Muslim institution. What a fine Islamic Kingdom Great Britain is! Again, the transfer of the Capital of India from Calcutta to Delhi led Muhammadans to believe that the fullest regard would now be paid to their sacred places in the new capital, as also to their (old) traditions. These unfortunate people are not, however, (considered) deserving even of this. No Englishman can enter the Golden Temple at Amritsar with his shoes on, while only the other day the Lieutenant-Governor (of Behar and Orissa) was not allowed to go into the Puri temple. It is Musalmans alone whose foreheads, which are meant to be bowed to God, are struck with "boots." Europeans go about in the Jumma Musjid, Delhi, with their shoes on and "the greatest Islamic Kingdom of the world" does not abstain from wounding the most sacred feelings of Muhammadans. The paper has already twice written on this subject, and its contemporary the Comrade also has strongly invited Government's attention to the matter. Government does not, however, now look on luckless Musalmans with a favourable eye; it sees their rights trampled on and (still) remains quiet. The presence of Europeans in the mosque with their shoes on has lacerated the hearts of the followers of Islam. The commission of this foul deed with the permission of Government has been rending the hearts of 7½ crore Muslim subjects of His Majesty the King Emperor.

Grievances of Muhammadan weavers.

14. The Muin (Amritsar), of the 24th August (received on the 3rd September) 1912, has an article headed "The unfortunate weaver community", complaining that Muhammadans of higher castes treat the weavers, shoe-makers, carpenters, blacksmiths and such people in their community just as Sudras are treated (by Hindus). Government also, it adds, accords these low-caste Muslims a contemptuous treatment, and prevents a large number of families among them, which live by agriculture, from acquiring land. As regards weavers in particular it says that the introduction of foreign-made cloth into India has reduced them to a state of abject poverty. To make matters worse, those of them who live in villages are frequently made to do begar work or the private work of rapacious lambardars and zaildars. Every village weaver has, on an average, to perform forced labour for ten days in the month, during which time he has also to feed himself. Again, his head is always a target for blows from the shoes and boots of Government officials. And even those among the weavers residing in cities and towns, who have been educated, are, because of their caste, refused respectable posts under Government.

The "Leader Number" of the Arya Gazette.

15. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912, says that it has been decided to issue a "Leader Number" of the paper containing scholarly contributions from Aryas, Hindus, Christians and Musalmans of note. The public should, however, first decide as to who are the two (most prominent) leaders of the Arya Samaj, the Sanatan Dharam Sabha, the followers of the Christ and the believers in the Kalima. The Arya, the Hindu, the Christian and the Musalman communities are, therefore, requested to send their opinions to the paper by the end of September. The issue will contain short biographical sketches and portraits of the eight leaders selected, as also learned writings from their pens.

Education of the depressed classes.

16. The Tribune (Lahore), of the 31st August 1912, publishes the following letter from Lajpat Rai :—

"I have read the contributions of 'Satyarthi' on the above subject with great interest. Considering that very large numbers of the so-called depressed classes in the Punjab have lately been admitted into the Arya Samaj it is his high time that something appreciable be undertaken to further the cause of education among them. No amount of 'Shuddhi' (it is a misnomer to call it Shuddhi) ceremonies will bring about the real uplift of these people without education. If the Punjab Hindus and the Punjab Arya Samajists do not profess merely lip sympathy for these classes it is time that they should put their hands into their pockets and give practical proofs of the genuineness of their sympathy by liberally subscribing for the education of these classes. The work being carried on, at Sialkot, at Mirpur (in the Jummu province) and in the Gurdaspur and Hoshiarpur districts deserves the fullest help from all well-wishers of the Hindu community. It is a matter of shame that while thousands upon thousands of rupees are being freely spent on mere eccentricities, on nautches, on tamashas, and on 'brick and mortar', people should be so reluctant to provide for the healing of wounds and sores that exist in the heart of the body politic. The existence and the present condition of the depressed classes and of the untouchables is nothing but a great sore in the body of the Hindu community; one may liken it to a deadly "carbuncle." Upon the proper healing of this sore depends the future health and existence (not to speak of the progress and prosperity) of the body politic. All the cures and remedies suggested and pursued by the 'leaders' of the Hindu community are nothing as compared with this. They are merely symptomatic or superficial or ornamental. The recent decision of the Municipal Committee of Ludhiana refusing the use of municipal water tap to 'Ramdasias' is an ample illustration of the fatal egoism and brutal callousness of the higher classes of Hindus. In any other country a decision like that would have evoked an outburst of indignation such as would have opened the eyes of those responsible for such a flagrant disregard of ordinary human rights. Just think of the arrogance and inhumanity of a decision refusing a tax payer the use of a municipal water supply. As at present advised, I am inclined to think that the decision is illegal and ought to be questioned in a court of law. But what has surprised me is that the cultured Hindu and Muhammadan Press should have let the incident pass away so quietly. To my mind this is another proof of the utter degradation of the Hindu ideals. Hindus refusing the use of a public waterstand to a brother Hindu and the Muhammadans helping them by their votes is a sight to make the gods weep.

"The only remedy then is to educate these classes and to rouse in them a sense of the wrongs that are being inflicted on them by these arrogant Hindus. When one considers the depth of Hindu degradation and their inhuman attitude towards the classes all one's love for Hindus and Hinduism becomes petrified.

"I am prepared to co-operate with 'Sattyarthi' or for the matter of that with any one for advancing education among the depressed classes.

"The following (sic) note was written in June last soon after the 1st Punjab Hindu Education Conference. It was my intention not to make it public until after I had obtained promises of a substantial amount towards the proposed central fund. Press of other business, however, prevented me from exerting for the fund and I think it may now be made public. I hope the Hindu public will recognise their duty towards the depressed classes and apply themselves in all earnestness not only to the work of reclaiming them but also to educate them. The second is as important as the former.

"P.S.—I hope the Vernacular Hindu Press will take up the matter in all earnestness It is necessary that the subject should be constantly kept before the public. Something should be written about it constantly."

The unreality of Council Elections in the Punjab.

17. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 3rd September 1912 :—

"Some years ago an eminent statesman condemned the system of nomination in our former Councils as something very vicious. But in the Punjab we have a system of election compared with which that 'vicious' system of nomination would seem a blessing.

From the communication published in another column describing at length the composition of the several electoral groups it will be seen that the strength of the nominated element in a large number of municipalities is the despair of the popular party. In a system which favours direct nomination the responsibility for the choice devolves on the officials. But now we have a double distilled system of nomination in which the officials are freed from their responsibility while the people derive no benefit corresponding to the degree of responsibility placed upon them. The mixing of municipalities and cantonment committees is particularly hurtful, and injurious to the success of the elective system. The solid phalanx of the nominated members of the cantonment committees together with the nominated section of Municipal Commissioners can influence the tide of support for candidates in any manner they like. Then there is the effect of excluding from Council elections municipalities like Batala, Hoshiarpur and Kasur in the central group and those of Lyallpur, Gujrat, Dera Ghazi Khan, Wazirabad and Bhera in the western group. All these are populous towns which have made great progress in several activities and their exclusion from Council election is unjust and its effect is prejudicial to the interests of the people concerned. We are not aware whether the Punjab Government intends to remove these anomalies, but unless they are removed the system of appointing members to the Punjab Council can be called elective only by courtesy. For the same reason we should prefer the present system of direct nomination by Government on behalf of District Boards to a repetition of the farce of an election by the nominated members of such Boards. We hope Sir Louis Dane will give his best attention to this matter and remove the anomalies as far as possible.

The Vaccination Law.

18. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912 :—

"In the last issue of the Panjabee we published the Punjab Government's reply to the National Anti-Vaccination League, London, in regard to Dr. Jethanand's case in Multan. The reply does not at all cover any of the points raised in the letter of the London Secretary, which we published in our issue of the 17th instant. In fact the Punjab Government has practically admitted its blunder when it says that 'from the first Jethanand has never addressed the Punjab Government on the subject which was his obvious course, if he had any complaint to make.' Does not the Government know what its agents in the districts do, and are not complaints published in the papers? Moreover, in many cases on appeal, the Government has referred complainants to courts of law; and obviously people have little to hope for in an appeal to Government against local subordinates. Dr. Jethanand would not have willingly suffered all that he has done, had he had the slightest hope in an appeal to Government. Even the Chief Judge rejected his complaint saying that he did not wish to encourage opposition to law. Why did the local officers pursue Jethanand with such severity and prosecute him a second time even when the decision in the first case was pending? That is a grave irregularity for which the Punjab Government has made no reply, though pointedly asked by the London Secretary of the League. Nor can we appreciate the painful remark that 'the District Magistrate is a Hindu and a Brahman who may well be trusted not to have harassed his fellow-Hindus unnecessarily.' Supposing that any Hindu or a Brahman Magistrate acts as a Hindu or a Brahman in his official capacity would that not be an excuse for stopping his advancement? But above all is it a question of justice or one of castes and communities? Apart from this case instances are not wanting where 'Hindu' Magistrates dare not be just to Hindus for fear of losing promotions and confirmations in appointments, and this is a well-known fact in the Punjab. They usually avoid to try Hindus. The bitterness of the last remark of the Government is too patent to need further explanation."

Expulsion of Lalas Pyari Lal and Devi Dayal from the Jullundur Cantonments.

* * * * * * *

"There is one statement in the reply of Mr. Under-Secretary Montagu which cannot be allowed to pass unchallenged, and that is that the two gentlemen named above were readmitted into the Cantonment after they had submitted an apology accompanied by an assurance of future good behaviour. The so-called apology was shown to us before it was tendered by Lalas Pyari Lal and Devi Dayal and we considered that it was not an apology at all. All that was said was what had passed should be forgotten. Both gentlemen were determined to remain outside the Cantonment rather than offer an apology, for they were not conscious of having done any wrong. Nor are we aware that they gave any assurance of future good behaviour, though the military authorities might have made such a report. We think Lalas Pyari Lal and Devi Dayal should make a public statement giving the facts of their case."

Crime in the Punjab.

20 The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 3rd September 1912 :—

"We showed in our last issue how, in the opinion of the Lieutenant-Governor, there has not been an adequate return for the increased expenditure of 23½ lakhs a year on the police force. His Honour next presses upon all district magistrates the necessity of expediting the trials of the more important criminal cases. Attention is drawn to the disparity between districts like Hissar, Dera Ghazi Khan and Lahore where cases are most rapidly disposed of and the largest number of convictions obtained and the dilatory methods followed in Shahpur. Sir Louis Dane agrees that the arrangements for security and surveillance are inadequate. 'His Honour will consider further in this connection the suggestion that the more serious class of bad characters should have their movements restricted as in the case of members of criminal tribes.' The Lieutenant-Governor very justly observes that 'it is illogical to take this extreme measure in the case of criminal tribes addicted mainly to hereditary petty larceny, and to have to confess that all our attempts to bind down the more desperate pests of society by security and surveillance fail merely because we cannot take the same steps to restrict the movements of the criminal individual as we do with the so-called criminal tribes.' The difficulty, we conceive, lies in the fact that while the criminal tribes can be distinguished by their hereditary tendency to petty crime the dangerous criminal cannot be distinguished from the law-abiding population until he has actually committed a crime and put himself outside the pale of the law. The quick detention of crime and swift retributive justice can alone act as a deterrent and it is difficult to see how the police can be absolved of responsibility in the matter. Either the police force is insufficient or wanting in energy and the suggestion of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to increase the rank and file and subordinate staff is an eminently practical one. The growth of lawlessness with increasing contempt for law and order is a state of things which no responsible Government can tolerate and the most vigorous action would be justified in view of the alarming condition of affairs disclosed by the last Punjab Police Report.

Security for good behaviour.

21. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 4th September 1912 :—

"In the Criminal Procedure Code of this country there are sections which empower the District Magistrate to take security for good behaviour from persons who are of known bad conduct or who in the opinion of the police are likely to commit crime. The procedure usually adopted in districts is to depute a special magistrate who in consultation with the head of the police in the district selects persons who are required to furnish the necessary security. The police in this case act on the advice of the zaildars and lambardars who are well aware of the character and antecedents of most of the people living in their villages. In the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh where a regrettable increase occurred in dacoities, robberies and burglaries, it is noticed with regret that less action was taken under the bad livelihood sections than in 1910. We quite agree with the remark in the Resolution reviewing the report of the Police administration that the efficiency of such action depends not on the number of prosecutions but on the care and judgment exercised in the selection of persons to be proceeded against. Sir John Hewett says 'it is still too often true that the ring-leaders and the more dangerous criminals are left unmolested, and that only the smaller fry—the petty pilferer or village budmash—are called upon to give security. This appears to have been the case in Etawah where a vigorous crusade had no appreciable effect in reducing the amount of crimes.' The real ring-leaders in crime are left unmolested because the police and the lambardars are afraid of them or are willing to let them go for a consideration."

Traffic in women in the Punjab.

22. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 4th September 1912 :—

"Hitherto it has been Sind which complained that women from that Province were abducted and sold in the Punjab and in this Province the Police has secured convictions in several cases of traffic in women. The complaint now comes from the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh and it is stated in the latest report on the administration of the Police in those Provinces that 'kidnapping was on the increase in the districts of Dhera Dun, Muttra, Meerut and Agra and it is said that the trade centres in the Punjab where large prices are given for girls abducted from these Provinces.' In noticing this remark His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor says 'this appears to be a new development. In previous reports no mention is made of such a traffic. The matter calls for serious investigation by the Criminal Investigation Department, and the Lieutenant-Governor trusts that this will be taken in hand without delay.' What is wanted in our opinion is co-operation between the Police of the Punjab and the United Provinces. If they act together and proceed with zeal and tact, we feel sure they can do much to prevent this objectionable trade. In the Punjab the number of women is smaller than in the United Provinces and to that shortage is ascribed the comparatively large number of offences against women in that Province. The remedy for the evil—of which this traffic in women is only a development—lies in the diffusion of education among the people and also in a vigorous administration of the criminal law."

(d)—Education.

The Islamia College, Peshawar.

23. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912, publishes the following from its Dera Ismail Khan correspondent:—

"It may not be generally known that last year a deputation of the Islamia College Committee, Peshawar, headed by Sahibzada Abdul Qayum, C.I.E., K. S. Mir Alam Khan, Revenue Assistant, Sheikh Muhammad Akbar, Personal Assistant, and other gentlemen visited Dera. Two of the leading Nawabs promised rupees three thousand each and a third one actually paid one thousand to the Government Treasurer for the proposed College. The deputation, however, refused to accept the above promises or payment and went back after accepting from others such promises or payments as they considered satisfactory. Informal negotiations were said to be taking between the Committee and the three Nawabs, but lately one of the latter has asked for his money back from the Treasurer which shows that there is an end to the matter. Evidently the Committee thinks three thousand too small a subscription for a Nawab to pay, but it forgets that the Muhammadans of Dera, be they Nawabs or not, are not likely to be benefited by the proposed Islamia College at Peshawar. Peshawar is a place not very well noted for good morals and if the Dera Musalmans have to give higher education to their sons, they would rather send them to Aligarh or to the Islamia or Chiefs Colleges at Lahore. Whatever was promised by the Nawabs here was promised more out of regard for their Muslim brethren of Peshawar than any consideration of the well being of their Dera community, and should have been gratefully accepted by the Deputation. The refusal by the latter is apt to be misconstructed in many ways and it is hoped that even now it is not too late for them to reconsider it."

The Times on the Aligarh University.

24. The following is from the Punjabee (Lahore), of the 29th August 1912:—

"On the question of affiliation the London Times has expressed its opinion similar to what we wrote and it can hardly be said that the Times is unfair to Muslim interest. It says that the question of 'affiliation is of a somewhat distant future rather than of to-day' and that is exactly what most sensible men think. The Hindus ask for self-governing powers not as a measure of to-day but of a somewhat distant future. We want the ideal to be kept in view and shape our policies to that end. So it is in regard to other things in which we have yet to acquire and display qualities of fitness and efficient management. Nobody can say that the Muslim promotors are so far advanced in education and management of University interests as to begin by governing mofussil colleges with residential standards. If such a fitness were to be looked for to begin with, the Hindus are far better placed and there is some reason if the Benares University were to insist on having the powers of affiliation. But we prefer to show our fitness first and demand our rights in full in proper time as a safe and sound policy. But as in political ideals so in education, we do not lose sight of having our fullest rights, but the beginning must be free from ambiguity and unnecessary burdens and hopes. We are convinced it is a safe and correct position and does not involve any loss of right or imposition of restraint."

Security from the Muslim Press, Lucknow.

25. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 1st September 1912, publishes an article headed "Security from the Muslim Press." Government, says the paper, appears to have made up its mind to sweep the press into oblivion, seeing that it interferes with journalists in season and out of season. On the outbreak of war in Tripoli Muslim newspapers wrote, it is true, in their anguish, such fiery words that pained the hearts of certain officers of Government. The reversal of the Partition of Bengal three months later fired them still further, and some prominent leaders of their community, among whom the Nawab Vicar-ul-Mulk deserves special mention, advised Muhammadans to rely, after God, on their own strength of arm. Muhammadans came to be convinced that no faith could be reposed in the promises and doings of Government and that its words and deeds should be freely and boldly criticised. Accordingly, Muslim leaders and papers gave up their old practice of bowing to every order emanating from Government officers and of saying ditto (to the authorities) in all matters. The authorities became suspicious of this conduct and their suspicions are growing every day. (Again,) taking advantage of the Press Act, Government began to throttle Muslim newspapers, demanding security from any that displayed the least independence or used any forcible language in saying anything. The Muslim Gazette, the Vakil and the Zamindar deserve special mention among "such independent Urdu papers." The poor Zamindar was the first to be made to deposit (a security of) Rs. 2,000 in Government Treasury. The move was meant to ruin it, in which, however, it failed. Next the District Magistrate, Amritsar, demanded a security of Rs. 1,000 from the press at which the Vakil is printed, his order being grossly illegal. After remarking that the Muslim Gazette also has now been given "a sanad of loyalty," the Editor reprints a note, in which that paper reports that the Deputy Commissioner, Lucknow, has asked for a security of Rs. 500 from its press. The officer named, he adds, had no power to demand any security from the Muslim Gazette Press, seeing that he had already accepted the declaration filed in respect of it and only the Local Government (concerned) can demand security in such a case. It is surprising that Government should take no notice of the gross mistakes made by District Magistrates everywhere in working the Press Act. The Hon'ble Mr. Mazharul Haq should ask a question in the Viceregal Council on the subject.

The Zamindar and the Hindu Press.

26. The Munir (Jhang), of the 24th (received on the 30th August 1912, publishes an article headed "Fight among communal papers: Maulana Zafar (Ali) has been duped." The Millat, it says, has been writing for a long time past that Maulvi Zafar Ali has come to an understanding with the entire Hindu press generally and with Lala Dina Nath (of the Hindustan) in particular. It must be admitted with regret that there appears to be a great deal of truth in the allegation. For several weeks past the Zamindar has not only written nothing against the said press, but has made no reply to its most serious charges against Muhammadans. The Maulvi must have argued that his understanding with it would deter Hindu and Muhammadan papers from attacking the followers of Islam and Hinduism respectively. The Hindu press, however, which was not actuated by honest motives, took this understanding to mean that it was now free to write against the Muhammadan community, excepting only Maulvi Zafar Ali. It is a pity that the Editor of the Zamindar should not have seen through this. Hindu papers have seen far ahead and have hit on a plan to lay the axe at the very root of the Muslim press. They have taken advantage of the differences between the Watan and the Zamindar to back one Muhammadan (Zafar Ali) against another (Inshaullah), injury to either of whom means injury to the community. Their plan consists in first weakening the Watan and then attacking the Zamindar, which they know is more than a match for them.

Egyptian Nationalism and Pan-Islamism.

1. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 7th September 1912 :—

"There can be no doubt that Lord Kitchener is determined to put down the Egyptian Nationalistic movement at any cost. He has vigorously enforced the very stringent laws which regulate the newspaper Press of Egypt. As the result of the repressive campaign started by His Lordship the Nationalist journalists transferred their activities to Constantinople and from there carried on their work. It appears now that Lord Kitchener has given them no rest and has had them arrested in Turkey. * * * The Pan-Islamist propaganda has no more ardent and whole-hearted supporters than the Egyptian Nationalists, who are busy spreading their propaganda all over the world. Their chief demand is that the British occupation of Egypt, which was undertaken as a temporary measure, should now cease. Great Britian is not prepared to countenance this demand. It is disposed to regard it as tantamount to raising the standard of revolt against British authority and power. The prevalent opinion is that Great Britain has come to stay in Egypt. At present Egypt to all practical purposes is a Province of the British Empire. But the Nationalists are not prepared to concede this. They remind Great Britain of what British statesmen and Ministers said in 1882, when Egypt was first occupied. If Great Britain were to keep true to her plighted word, she will have to evacuate Egypt. The fact that the present Turkish Government is supporting Lord Kitchener will be bitterly resented by the Nationalist party in Egypt."

Christian Europe and the Islamic world.

2. Writing under the heading "A critical survey of the Islamic world" the Muin (Amritsar, of the 1st (received on the 9th) September 1912, says that it is now an open secret that the European powers are doing their utmost to exterminate Islam in spite of England's strong disapproval of their policy. These attacks have united Muhammadans throughout the world, for the threatened ruin of their faith naturally fills them with apprehension and rage. Muhammadans in India, China, Russia, Java, Egypt, Tunis, Algiers and such other places can only show their outraged feelings in words or by rendering some pecuniary help. Those of them indeed, who live under the British Government, enjoy so much liberty that they have held many public meetings in favour of the oppressed Musalmans of Tripoli, Morocco and Persia, and have been agitating to make their Government protect Islamic lands against aggression on the part of dishonest and deceitful Christian powers. In other countries, however, the case is different. Because of the oppression practised on them by their own Governments, Muhammadans may scarcely express sympathy with their distressed brethren. The independent Muslim kingdoms—Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan—were they to join forces, could prevent Russia, Italy and France from casting sinister glances at Islamic countries. But they are not allowed time to unite, "energetic friends" being ever ready to end their days. The war in Tripoli has, however, united the Turks, Arabs and Senoussis, the last of whom have also breathed the spirit of Islamic self sacrifice into Muslim Africa. It was owing to the differences between them that "European beasts of prey have hitherto proved successful in plunging knives into the heart of Islam in Ottoman Africa." Italian brigandage has proved a divine blessing for the northern part of the Dark continent, and has filled the mind of the "splendid Arab race" with the desire of regaining its lost heritage.

The war has also promoted union between the Turks and Arabs in Europe and Asia, but it is the Persians who constitute a sore on the body of Islam. This accursed people was not moved even by the recent Muscovite atrocities in their country and "the gross religious insult" offered to the shrine of Imam Musa (at Meshed). They stand in the way of union between two powerful Islamic kingdoms, Turkey and Afghanistan; but they may be relied upon to join forces with those countries in fighting the enemies of Muhammadanism. The Afghans guarantee the political existence of Islam in Eastern Asia. The configuration of their country renders it invulnerable to attacks even from the mightiest power of the world; the oppression of Islamic kingdoms by European powers has greatly inflamed Afghans who realise that, with the exception of England, the powers of Europe are determined to extirpate Islam. Thus the Afghans are now undertaking military preparations on a grand scale, and that in a country where every man is a born soldier. Afghans, whether subjects of the Amir or of other independent chieftains, have equipped themselves with modern European arms, and, when religious feelings and fanaticism drive them to use these weapons, there will be a terrible disturbance in the world. Russia will then find it impossible to vanquish them even with the help of Germany, Austria and France, especially if they are joined by thousands of warriors from Turkistan, Persia, the Caucacus, Asia Minor and Baluchistan. Under such circumstances England would not invade Afghanistan, and Russian oppression would be at an end for ever. Such oppression has caused a strong evolutionary movement in the Islamic world, and has breathed a powerful spirit of union among Muhammadans, arousing the independent Muslim nations. This awakening will at once change the face of the earth bringing victory to Islam and involving its enemies in ruin.

Austria, Hungary and the Balkans.

3. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th September 1912, says that it apprehended evil at the very time when Count von Brechtold put forward his "proposals." The Count himself has now explained his savage policy and openly declared that, if Europe does not consent to the independence of Albania and Macedonia, Austria will wrest both these provinces from Turkey and will annex them as she annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina. Such is the honesty of (Christian) Europe! "We" can only curse, and cry shame on, this base member (Austria) of the Triple alliance. As regards Sir Edward Grey and his colleagues, however, if they possess any political foresight, they will not allow Austria and Germany to attack Turkey in such a fearless and impudent way. If great Britain remains silent in the matter she will be cutting off her own feet with a German axe.

Pan-Islamism.

4. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 6th September 1912, has an article headed "The bogey of Pan-Islamism—I." The paper says that it has several times exposed the truth that Europe has had the extreme artfulness to invent divers excuses for executing its plans to extend its territories, &c. It would take a very long time to write in detail about European civilisation alone, in the name of which rivers of blood are being shed and scores of nations and thousands of individuals have been deprived of their freedom. The Editor proposes to examine—and that only cursorily—but one of the terrible excuses which have been hit upon by the missionary-statesmen and-statesman missionaries of Europe for ruining and ending the days of non-European races. This excuse is to the effect that three blood-thirsty wolves—the "black", "Islamic" and "yellow" perils—are after the white sheep of Christ. Whenever the holy sheep of the holy Shepherd of Galilee need some verdant pasture in the homes of the above "perils," his lieutenants—the missionaries, members of the Fourth Estate and foreign ministers—raise an outcry about the "black," the "Islamic" or the "yellow" peril as the exigencies of the times may require. Every such outcry has proved the forerunner of a large piece of flesh being torn out of the wretched and bleeding body of either the black, yellow or tawny race. The paper then goes on to say that the noise about the "black" peril has subsided owing to the majority of the black races in Africa having put their necks under the iron yoke of Europe, perhaps for ever. The "yellow" peril has also not been loudly talked about since Japan gave a resounding slap to the leading member—the Northern Bear—of the holy brotherhood of Europe. Only those can be a source of danger (to Europe) who are neither absolute slaves like the wretches inhabiting Peru and Congo—whose ears, noses, hands and feet can be cut off by civilised European for one tola of rubber—or are wholly independent like the Japanese. Europe can expect danger only from Muhammadans, who are midway between slaves and independent men, and this is why Europeans constantly raise the cry of "the Islamic peril." The impression is universal in all circles in Europe that there is only one obstacle in the way of Christianity becoming the religion of the whole world and that it is highly necessary to remove that obstacle, which is the political power of Islam, and Europe has accordingly decided to bring the remaining Islamic kingdoms under its sway. After condemning the savage villainy of France in Morocco, the satanic rascality of Italy in Tripoli, and the devilish cruelty of Russia in Persia, the Zamindar says that the attitude of Austria in regard to Albania and Macedonia is the forerunner of the day of judgment. There now remains only Afghanistan, and the Indian correspondent of the Times (London) has consequently sounded the alarm that Pan-Islamism has raised its head among the Afghans, and that the danger should be looked to without loss of time.

"Scare factories in England and India have fortunately not been at work for some time, but writing to the Times a correspondent from India has sounded an alarm about the revival of Pan-Islamism in India and elsewhere, which he looks upon as a serious danger. He thinks it is 'due chiefly to the Turco-Italian war and the British subservience to Russian policy in Persia, which has caused the worst possible impression even among the loyal inhabitants of India.' His imagination then runs riot and he suggests that the Amir, intoxicated by flattery, may one day stand forth as the champion of Islam, and start a conflagration of incalculable extent. The Times has the wisdom not to support this view and it does not think the Amir capable of playing the part assigned to him. It does not consider the Pan-Islamic movement a very formidable menace. In its opinion the Muhammadans in India should have every consideration but they cannot dictate the whole of British foreign policy. We think it is to be deeply regretted that the Times should have published the article from the correspondent in India for it is calculated to do mischief even if contradicted. It is a serious reflection upon the Amir to suggest that His Majesty may assume the role of the champion of Islam and an attitude of hostility to Christian Powers and consequently to the Government of India. The Amir is the wise son of a wise father and he knows that his best interests consist in maintaining his friendly alliance with the British Government. Even if a Pan-Islamic conflagration were started it would fizzle out in no time, for the star of Islam as a great military Power is not in the ascendant just now. Persia is in desperate straits, Turkey is in a parlous state and the integrity of Afghanistan is maintained on account of its isolation and the moral and material support it receives from the British Government. The Muhammadan revival in India bodes no danger, for the movement is thoroughly loyal, the Muhammadan leaders are wise and they are trying to regain lost ground. Their sympathy with Turkey and Persia is perfectly natural. Some indiscreet language may have been used but there is not the remotest suspicion of a menace of any kind and the nightmare of alarm does not disturb the sleep of any one. The alarmist picture drawn by the correspondent of the Times may be safely contemplated with a smile."

5. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th September 1912, publishes an article headed "Indians in Tripoli," saying that Indian Muhammadans have not proved themselves inferior to their Turkish, Arab, Egyptian and Afghan co-religionists in the matter of "national sense of self-respect, Islamic brotherhood and religious ardour" in connection with the war in Tripoli. They have collected and remitted (to Turkey) several lakhs of rupees in aid of the wounded, and some of them have even gone to the front in face of stupendous difficulties, which affords proof of their "newly born national existence." One of the enterprising Muhammadans, who have thus reached Tripoli, is Abu Said of Rangoon, who is now in the head-quarters of Enver Pasha at Darna. He posted two letters to the Editor, one from Darna on the 6th Rajab (22nd June) and the other from Cairo on the 7th Ramzan (21st August). They arrived together on the 3rd instant, although the one posted at Darna should have reached here in the month of Shaban (July and August). "But how can a letter bearing the post mark of Darna (on the envelope) reach India without delay ?" Abu Said says that he has written several letters, containing accounts of the war, not only to the Zamindar, but to the Comrade, the Vakil and the Burma Gazette also. The Editor has, however, received only two of these communications and would not, therefore, be very wrong in suspecting that the strange neutrality of the Egyptian Government or "the universal superiority of Italian resources" "has consigned (the rest of) these letters into the basket of precaution prepared by the Holy Ghost's own fingers." The Editor has also a complaint to make to the Director-General of Post Offices in India. The two letters received by him have his address distinctly written on them, and yet they were, instead of being delivered to him (forthwith), sent straight to the Dead Letter Office, where they were perhaps first subjected to a "Post Mortem" examination. He then publishes one of the letters, describing how Abu Said reached Darna, and Enver Beg had a separate tent pitched for him; and how His Excellency also deputed a soldier to serve him, and is especially kind to him and eats out of the same plate with him. Next the writer praises Enver Beg for his bravery, and says that Tripoli needs a Mehdi (? like Enver Beg) capable of protecting it against infidels.

Writing under the heading "Effect of Mr. C. F. Dickson Johnson's appeal," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 5th September 1912, publishes a letter from a lady named Rayaullah Begum. The writer begins by referring to the appeal which that gentleman, who represents the British Red Crescent Society in Tripoli, recently made on behalf of the Muslim sufferers, and reports that the (? Dowager) Begum of Bahawalpur and Mrs. Aziz Ahmad have given, at her instance, Rs. 300 and Rs. 10 respectively in response to the appeal. After remarking that she herself has given Rs. 50, she exhorts her co-religionists to render pecuniary help to the sufferers, for the misfortunes which have befallen "our Islamic brothers and sisters" have resulted from their defending Islam. In conclusion, she states that she has vowed to pay Rs. 10 a month as long as the war lasts.

Commenting on the above the Editor announces that the aforesaid contributions, amounting to Rs. 360, have been received by him.

Indian Muhammadans and Turkey.

6. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 10th September 1912, publishes a communication from "A Muhammadan of Bombay", headed "Help to Turkey and Indian Musalmans." The unmannerly Turks, says the writer, arrested their Sultan (Abdul Hamid) unawares, immured him in a desolate castle in Salonica, offered insults to his wives, and reduced his children to a wretched condition. Next they lost two large Turkish provinces at the hands of Austria, after which they managed to make Christian countries their enemies. They also parted with the King of England and made friends with the Kaiser, which was followed by the loss of Tripoli. Still Indian Muhammadans are engaged in impoverishing themselves, to render (pecuniary) help to the ignorant, unfaithful, black-hearted, ill-starred and misbehaved Turks. Certain nominal (Muslim) leaders have, solely in order to increase the circulation of their papers, been heaping abuse on Italy, on the one hand, and speaking ill of England, Russia and France on the other. Sometimes they abuse Sir Edward Grey, while at others they similarly treat the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler over the Muslim University. They also urge their co-religionists to boycott Italian goods, and even German and English manufacturers, overlooking the fact that the Turks are about to be swept off the face of the earth. They, the Turks, have no factories of their own, but buy arms from France and cloth from Italy and Austria. They have ruined their Empire by indulging in pleasure, rebelling against (Abdul Hamid) and disgracing and "sending to hell" their Caliph-Sultan. They are being punished by God and should not be helped by Indian Muhammadans.

Proscription of the Lewa.

7. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 7th September 1912, has a note headed "Discontinuance of the Lewa." The fears expressed by noted Liberal papers on the appointment as British Agent in Egypt of Lord Kitchener—called, as he is, by some of his own countrymen "The Military Autocrat,"—were, according to the writer, only too well-founded. The Egyptian police continue their activities even after the criminals concerned in the recent conspiracy have been severely punished, and the latest cablegrams show that the publication of the Lewa (a newspaper of Cairo) has been stopped. This paper recently had had no connection with the Nationalist party and was conducted by the younger brother of the late Mustafa Kamel Pasha in order to maintain Kamal Pasha's young children. Its demise will, therefore, cause but little injury to the extreme party, and will only snatch the bread out of the mouths of the unhappy orphans. As, however, his love and services for his country are admitted, the Khedive's Government ought to look after his children.

The Balkan situation.

8. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 4th September 1912 :—

"The European Powers seem to be bent on intermeddling with the affairs of Turkey. The situation in the Balkans is now much improved. The excitements caused in Bulgaria, Servia and Montenegro have practically subsided. Albania is gradually being conciliated and there is little fear of the peace being disturbed in the Balkans. But in spite of the fact that the Porte has instructed its representatives abroad to inform the Powers that Turkey cannot listen to any proposals affecting her internal policy, the Austrian Emperor, has now sanctioned the concrete proposals drafted by Court von Berchtold. Under international law no Power can interfere with the internal affairs of another, unless there is a fear of those affairs seriously affecting the internal economy of the former, or unless great inhumanity has been perpetrated by the latter towards its subjects. It cannot be pretended that the situation in Turkey is so serious as to call for intervention on any of the two grounds. Under these circumstances, Count Berchtold's proposals and their acceptance by the other Powers can have only one meaning and that is this, the continental Powers are bent on the spoliation of Ottoman lands without any excuse and in defiance of international law. We trust that Mr. Asquith will maintain the reputation of the greatest Muslim Power for once and refuse to be a party to any proposals calculated still further to weaken the Ottoman Empire."

Home Rule for India.

9. The Observer (Lahore), of the 4th September 1912, publishes the following communication from a correspondent signing himself "Pro bono publico" :—

"The full text of Lord Crewe's important speech delivered in the House of Lords on July 29th has been received in this country. His Lordship's candid and courageous explanation has, we believe, dissipated the apprehensions and misgivings under which the Congressists have long been labouring. The Congressmen have been clamouring for Swaraj or self-government or Home Rule for India. They must have now realized their mistake.

"According to His Lordship there are three cardinal objects of British policy in India. The first is to devolve on the Local and Provincial Governments as many of the functions of Government as can safely be entrusted to them. The second object of British rule in India is to employ as many Indians in the public service as can reasonably be employed. And the third object is to continue the pursuit of these two with the maintenance and permanence of British rule in India.

"The first two principles have always been successfully pursued and adhered to by the members of Government in carrying on the administration of India, and as the country has advanced in education and enlightenment these cardinal points have been expanded in accordance with the exigencies of the times. And they will likewise be extended and broadened in proportion to the needs and requirements of the people in times to come.

"It is only the third point that required elucidation and has, after all, for the first time been clearly and in unequivocal terms enunciated by the Secretary of State for India, so as to remove all haze and doubt in which it was previously enveloped. His Excellency's fearless and outspoken deliverance is both bold and commendable when he says 'that we have tried the experiment of a world-wide Empire with the members of our own race, and all the chapters in that experiment have not been felicitous. One broke down in 1776, when the American Colonies declared their independence. Since then we have learned wisdom.' This declaration of Government policy by the Secretary of State has determined the limit up to which and no further the endeavours of the Indians should be directed. Their ambition should soar above no higher sphere. They cannot and should not traverse the sacred ground, as to do so would now indisputably be disloyal. Lord Crewe cannot be blamed for this expression of seemingly selfish view, as it is natural and at the same time is calculated to lead to the good of the people of this country. Every ruling nation does naturally endeavour to keep the conquered races under its perpetual sway and to do so is often in good faith believed to be for the welfare of the latter. Lord Crewe or the British Government is not above this law of human nature. Moreover, it is essential for the betterment and the prosperity of this vast country, peopled as it is by the heterogeneous communities differing in castes and creeds, that it should have at its head a powerful hand to treat all communities alike and to defend the weak against the strong. The Muhammadan Press in this country has always held and advocated this opinion.

* * * * * * * *

"Lord Crewe's intention was to state clearly the views of the Government as he did point out on the occasion. His explanation is the result of mature and practical experience and its expression was demanded and rendered necessary by the complications caused by the terms of the Government of India Despatch and some of the official comments put upon it. Besides to keep quiet and see the Indians groping in the dark and suffer them to create false hopes in their minds cannot be conducive of any good results. On the contrary when they are allowed to entertain false hopes impossible of realization and misdirect their energies for the attainment of such expectations, the consequences can be better imagined than described. Now supposing Government grants full and complete self-government or Home Rule to India and withdraws British officials and troops from this country, leaving India entirely to the Indians, we may reflect for a moment what would be the result. Every right thinking person can well imagine that the country would fall a prey to internecine strife and racial animosities. Chaos will become the order of the day, and civil war will bring on depredation and ruin every where. It should, therefore, be the sacred duty of the Indians, each and all, to strive every nerve for the continuance and maintenance of British rule in India, because in this alone consists their own happiness and welfare."

10. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 7th September 1912 :—

India's place in the Empire.

"Mrs. Annie Besant will have us feel as much personal interest in the Empire as an Englishman will naturally do in the matter. The following strange story, not from a young British colony, but from hoary England, the 'mother of free nations,' brings into startling prominence India's honoured place in the Empire, and may be commended to the notice of Mrs. Besant. Colonel D. Warliker, a retired Indian member of the Indian Medical Service, has for the present settled down in England. He recently sought admission for his son into the Royal Military College. The Army Council informed him that young Warlikar was not eligible for admission to the competitive examination because he was 'not of pure European descent.' Young Warliker was entirely brought up in England, educated at Harrow and belonged to the Officers' Training Corps. He did not propose to enter the British Army. He wanted his name to be put down for the Indian Army. But that was not to be. His skin was darker than the English officer's. He then applied for a commission in the West India Regiments. The Army Council briefly replied that a commission in the West Indies was held to be exactly similar to any other commission in the Army. Colonel Warliker has since applied to the Indian Government to know whether anything could be done for his son through the Imperial Cadet Corps and has been waiting these six months for a reply! The Regulations for the Royal Military College nowhere state that candidates must be of 'pure European descent.' So the decision of the Army Council is purely arbitrary and is the outcome of sheer colour prejudice. When such is the case in England itself, where is India's place in the Empire?"

11. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 7th September 1912 :—

Indians and their rights of British citizenship.

"Indian discontent is not yet so acute and so widespread as Irish discontent to demand immediate grant of home rule or self-government, although doubtless Indians are steadily working to reach that goal in spite of Lord Crewe's repudiation of the promise given on a solemn occasion. For the present we are concerned with the satisfaction of our immediate wants such as the exercise of the rights of British citizenship at home and abroad. At present Indians find the doors shut against them for honourable careers in their own country, irrespective of merit and qualification. Indians also find their rights of British citizenship flouted in foreign countries. Both these should be the objects of solicitude for the Government. Sir Wilfred Laurier said in a debate at the Imperial Conference on the Subject of Naturalization Acts that Civis Britannicus should be Civis Britannicus not only in the country of naturalization but everywhere.' We are not aware whether this definition was given by Sir Wilfred with reference to the white races only. But we know that Civis Britannicus does not apply to Indians in their own country, not to say of other British possessions. In the reprint of the discussion started by Mr. E. B. Sargant on British citizenship there is much food for reflection for people and Government alike. Eminent men like Mr. Bryce, Professor Westlake and Sir Samuel Griffith are not agreed in defining British citizenship. That being so, it may not be easy to induce British statesmen to take a practical step to get a recognition of British citizenship for Indians in British Colonies and foreign possessions. Indians have, therefore, to be prepared for a long and arduous struggle to get their legitimate rights recognised.

"It is contended by those authorities who are not disposed to subscribe to Sir Wilfred Laurier's definition that previous to the edict of Caracalla even Roman Empire could boast of no actual uniformity of citizenship and that uniformity was the ideal to which Roman Empire aspired. This does not surely mean much for the progress made by the civilised nations since the edict of Caracalla. But in the twentieth century in the British Empire even this aspiration of early Roman Empire seems wanting. In fact it is flouted by some of the Dominions. Indians have therefore good ground to feel intensely dissatisfied with the position and status assigned to them as British citizens. Not to go so far as foreign possessions and colonies, even in England Indians are viewed with jealousy, and facilities are being gradually withdrawn from several educational and other institutions. As a sop to Cerberus it is now proposed that Indians should be given facilities for education and training in their own country. Possibly it is also contemplated to create opportunities of employment to such of those who are now attracted by colonies and foreign countries by the offer of high wages. These efforts may or may not obviate the necessity of travel and residence in foreign countries. Nevertheless they are to be heartily welcomed, if not as a permanent remedy, at least as a temporary makeshift, to allay the growing discontent in the people who, hampered by the erection of a colour bar in their own country, are not unnaturally subjected to endless forms of humiliation in British possessions and foreign countries alike. Everything that is conducive to the amelioration of the lot of a subject population in their own country enhances their self-respect at home and improves their position and status abroad.

"Nothing goads a nation to desperation so much as its sense of humiliation in the eyes of the civilized nations of the world, and Indians with brilliant past are but human, if by the serious disabilities to which they are now subject they are constrained to compare and contrast the treatment given to the rest of the British citizens. A warlike people, like the band of Panjabee labourers driven to foreign countries by the glowing accounts of opportunities of lucrative employment and sent adrift by an illiberal interpretation of the rights of British citizenship, foster discontent in the country much more than the English educated class who are conscious of national and international limitations. The classes from whom soldiers are recruited are much more susceptible of national pride and national prestige than the English educated classes. We hope this aspect of the question will receive the attention of the Government of India as well as the other which concerns the purely educated section of the community. The discontent is fast becoming deeper with the return of every batch of self-exiled Indians who find that their rights of British citizenship are very few indeed outside the land of their birth."

The Hindu as Nation-builders.

12. The following excerpts are from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 7th September 1912 :—

* * * * * * * * *

"The Gospel of Inaction has been the bane of the latter-day Hindu cult. It is comparable only to a certain African drug which paralyses the body but makes the mind more active!

"Then why did the Hindus fight the Greeks out of India and resist Moslem invasions for six hundred years? Was it not love of independence? Unfortunately, no. It was the Hindu Kings who, to protect their properties, collected armies that fought the invaders. The general Hindu society, as a rule, 'saw the legions thundering past, and plunged in thought again!' In fact, the general Hindu community have never been 'conquered' by foreign invaders. For they have never fought them. A foreign conqueror has only had to take possession of the Throne to draw the instant homage of Hindu society. It did not matter whoever ruled so long as he ruled well and kept peace in the land.

"The natural consequences of this inaction, this indifference to physical surroundings, bring us to the next potent cause of the long political subjugation of the Hindus, viz., want of unity among themselves, want of a common ideal so far as this world is concerned, want of all ideas of Nationhood.

* * * * * * * * *

"Only twice in modern history attempts at nation-making were made by the Hindu. One by Sivaji. Within a few years almost all India lay at the feet of United Maharashtra. The magician died, and the golden edifice crumbled to pieces. The next attempt was made by Ranjeet Singh. Within a single generation the Khalsa became a terror to the Afghans in the north and the British in the east. The magician died, and the Khalsa vanished into thin air. Under British rule the Hindus are fast assimilating ideas of nationality as it is understood in the West. Consciously or unconsciously, through good or through evil, the English are helping them into a nation. They cannot do otherwise. It is their God-appointed task."

Cameos of Indian Crime by Mr. H. Hervey.

13. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 10th September 1912 :—

"The Government of India have very freely applied the powers given under the Sea Custom Act to prohibit the importation of objectionable books, pamphlets and newspapers containing seditious or abusive writings on races and castes. The Press Act also facilitates the seizure of such writings, but in not a single instance has this summary process been applied to the advantage of India and Indians who are abused by a number of Anglo-Indian writers. The Daily News and Leader of 21st August contains a review of book entitled 'Cameos of Indian Crime' by H. Hervey, who is said to have had 35 years of Government service in India. He has a very contemptuous opinion of the Indian people and describes them 'as a race of degraded beings, given over to gross living and to the unreliable practice of lying, petty theft and swindling, cruelty, extortion, and every imaginable form of corruption.' That is what the reviewer says of the book and apparently it is written to order, if not for the delectation of some Anglo-Indians who have learnt the delicate art of blackening India. Is the importation of this book less dangerous to the peace and mental health of India than of the scores of prints which have been proscribed? Indians can also write books to order painting European races black by taking the worst specimens as the average. But the unfairness and injustice of the step is apparent. How can books of this type and writings of this description be stopped in free England? Cannot the India Office withhold paying the pension to the villifier of Indians who finds a safe pastime in his retirement? The man still eats Indian salt and is not ashamed of his libel!"

Kashmir affairs.

14. The Rajput Gazette (Lahore), of the 31st August (received on the 5th September) 1912, publishes a communication headed "The rights of Rajputs and (other) subjects of the Jammu and Kashmir State are in danger." The writer—Thakur Bijai Singh, B.A., Pleader (Lahore)—says that the Darbar recently promulgated or re-issued a circular to the effect that any person who has resided in Jammu and Kashmir for ten years shall be regarded as a State subject. It is, however, preposterous that the State subjects, who have been residing in the Happy Valley from time immemorial and have rendered Military and pecuniary help to the State on critical occasions, should have no more rights than persons with the qualification referred to. If efforts are not made to have this Nadir Shahi circular withdrawn persons of the above description will grow so numerous in the State in a short time that the State subjects, especially Rajputs, will have no rights left.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 11th September 1912, publishes a communication headed "The requirements of Kashmiri Muhammadans and a petition to His Highness the Maharaja." The writer says that the Pathar mosque at Srinagar has long been occupied by His Highness (? the State) and that nothing has as yet come of the numerous petitions submitted by Muhammadans for its restoration to them. The local Anjuman-i-Nusrat-ul-Islam also has several times petitioned the Maharaja to allow it to use the mosque as a boarding-house for its High School. No reply has, however, been vouchsafed to the Anjuman up to the present, and His Highness's officials have recently ordered the mosque to be converted into a pagoda. In other words, the building is to contain a Hindu orphanage called the Gajadhar Orphanage, "Gajadhar" being an idol kept and worshipped in the Maharaja's palace. After remarking that idols will assuredly be worshipped in the mosque, the writer complains that the Maharaja's Government has deprived the zamindars (who are exclusively Muhammadans) of proprietary rights in land; that 14 villages on the Hardan (?) nulla were compulsorily evacuated by order of Government, the inhabitants keeping quiet, although the police disgraced them and burnt their houses before their eyes. Again, while Muhammadans, especially the zamindars, are oppressed even by the pettiest officials, their Hindu fellow subjects are exempt from begar.

The Political Agent and the Income-tax in Bahawalpur.

15. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 6th September 1912 :—

"As has already been observed in these columns Mr. C. H. Atkins, Political Agent, contented himself to be a mere medium of communication between the Durbar and the Government in the introduction of a new, unnecessary and unpopular tax in Bahawalpur during the minority of the Prince When a deputation waited upon him at Chail praying for an examination of the whole question from the peoples' point of view, he was pleased to speak to them encouragingly; and, as the deputation then understood he seemed extremely sympathetic and promised to consider over the matter. On his arrival at Bahawalpur a large number of leading men waited upon him at 'Nur Mahal' to present a supplementary petition; but most unaccountably not only were they prevented from presenting the petition but were refused permission even to submit a written memorandum. It is quite conceivable that in a Native State the Ruling Prince, and during his minority, the Council of Regency is the proper authority to be approached In theory the Political Agent is no more than a political adviser, having nothing to do with administrative matters. If the Council of Regency had received the petition intended for the Political Agent and heard the deputation also there would probably have been no justifiable complaint on the part of the people. In that case the petition would have been placed before the Political Agent and finally before the Punjab Government in the ordinary course. But this was exactly the thing which was not done, and in the presence of the Political Agent, who was a silent spectator, the deputation was told that no petition could be received and that nothing but verbal representation could be heard. Why anybody should have entertained so much unreasonable dread of a written memorandum or petition we fail to understand. Much more incomprehensible is the sudden change in the attitude of Mr. Atkins who felt constrained to be no more than an eye-witness of the utter helplessness of the tax-paying units whose right of petition was flouted in his very presence. Time was when Political Agents of Bahawalpur were the greatest champions of the rights of the tax-paying units. During the Governor-Generalship of Sir John Lawrence Mr. William Ford was the Political Agent of Bahawalpur and it fell to his lot to prepare a memorandum on the comparative merits of British and Native Administrations. In paragraph 2 of this memorandum he emphatically stated that the British Government should be no party to what the people might consider oppressive. In paragraph 14 referring to the natural fear of the people in Native States to wear white dress (which was deemed to be an invitation to officials to plunder) Mr. Ford wrote: 'The license tax has this objectionable tendency; a system of inquiry will expunge as to ways and means which make a man begin to doubt as to whether the British system is not approaching that in force in Native States (sic).' Much has been said about the inquisition of the income-tax officials in British India. But what part his fellow-official is likely to play in Native States like Bahawalpur it does not require very great imagination to say. But the twentieth century occupant of the chair vacated by Mr. Ford has deemed it prudent to maintain silence with regard to the future consequences of such a levy in Bahawalpur. We cannot compliment Mr. Atkins on his acquiescence in this matter considering that during the Regency he is the de facto ruler of the State and as such is bound to defend the interests of the tax-payers against powerful outside influence."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

An invocation to Krishna.

16. In its Krishna number, dated the 5th September 1912, the Hindu (Lahore), publishes some verses headed "Help, Krishna, this is again the time for help." Writing about Krishna, the poet—Lal Chand, Falak—says that, although India has witnessed numerous revolutions, which have wrought the ruin of "the Aryan nation" and deprived it of the sceptre, still "we" have not forgotten "you," and are devotedly attached to "you." "Help, O Krishna, this is again the time for help; the members of the nation have been reduced to a wretched condition." They are plunged in sorrow, are utter strangers to patriotism and do not exert themselves to promote the welfare of their country. "Come, lead us to-day, just as you encouraged Arjun to engage in war."

The Arya Samaj.

17. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 3rd September 1912, publishes an article headed "Mountain of trouble on the Arya Samaj." The condition of the Arya Samaj, says the paper, resembles that of a child who has had to suffer troubles and difficulties from his birth. Rishi Dayanand died before he could place the Arya Samaj on a firm and solid foundation. His mantle fell on persons who undoubtedly did their best to protect the Arya Samaj, but the spirit of Dayanand would have proved a veritable blessing for the Arya Samaj, if anybody had, during his lifetime, charged it with being hostile to Government, and thus afforded him an opportunity to give a crushing reply to the insinuation. The servants of the Arya Samaj, relying on God, the Protector of all, have served the institution to the best of their power, but in spite of all its difficulties have not yet ended.

The Aryas of Khairpur, Nathan Shah, for instance, are in these days face to face with great difficulties; and it is the duty of all their co-religionists to come forward to help them, so as to let the country know that the Aryas are, one and all, bound together by the ties of religion. The Secretary of the Khairpur Arya Samaj declares in two letters of last month (which are published) that the Aryas of the locality have incurred the implacable hatred and enmity of their Panch and that the Hindus of the town are employing every means to destroy them—they have collected thousands of rupees for conducting cases against Aryas in the courts, while the Aryas have not even so much as a hundred rupees for their defence. He, therefore, appeals to Aryas for monetary help, deplores their dilatoriness in meeting his appeal, and asks whether they cannot give money to protect their own religion. Commenting on this the paper says that the ties of religion demand that Aryas should help each other in times of trouble and difficulty and that they should therefore send contributions to the Secretary, Arya Samaj, Khairpur Nathan Shah, Larkana district, Sind.

The Aryas of Khusropur, Patna district, are also in trouble. In Khusropur nightsoil has been thrown on the Vedas and Rishi Dayanand has been insulted. The Aryas in Khairpur should take heart, seeing that not they alone are oppressed.

The Deputy Commissioner, Naini Tal, has prohibited the Aryas from singing their hymns according to custom in the Samaj Mandir at Naini Tal, because two Muhammadan tailors, who have shops near the Samaj Mandir, do not wish to go and read their prayers in a mosque, but wish instead to pray in their shops. The Deputy Commisioner's order in question, could have some meaning if the Arya Samaj had held its meeting in the open bazar, but the prohibition of the Aryas from singing hymns in their own Mandir is an order which only the District Magistrate, Naini Tal, can justify.

There are half a dozen Aryas in Amb, Hoshiarpur district, none of whose income is more than Rs. 20 per mensem, and yet six or seven surrounding villages consisting of about six thousand persons have turned against them. This feeling of enmity has grown in intensity since the 6th April 1911, since when none of the six Aryas have ever drawn water from their village well. There are two cases pending, one civil and the other criminal, in which the Aryas and the Sanatanists are ranged against one another. Meanwhile, every Sanatanist is doing his best to sweep the six Aryas from the district. Commenting on this the paper praises the Aryas of Amb for their firmness and perseverance in the face of difficulties and predicts their ultimate success.

The troubles of the Arya Samaj, Ambala, commenced from the time when same wretched person placed a bomb in the bungalow of the Deputy Commissioner. In those days the Aryas were also being prosecuted for sedition in Patiala. The Arya Samaj, however, escaped from being held guilty, although some of its enemies did their best to implicate the Samaj in sedition, prevailing upon the police to search the houses of certain Aryas. Of course, nothing incriminating was found in the course of the search, but the Arya Samaj continued to remain under suspicion. As a consequence, any Arya going to Ambala is at once shadowed by the secret police. Nor is this all. Pressure is brought to bear on Arya officials, so much so that some Aryas, who used to take much interest in Samajic affairs, have resigned their membership.

An Arya writing from the Sialkot district says that the Aryas living in a village in the district, which is mostly inhabited by Muhammadans, have incurred the latter's hostility on account of the head-quarters of the preacher of the Megh Shuddi Department (of the Arya Samaj) being located in the same village. In order to prevent Aryas from drinking water from the village well, the Muhammadans threw, some time ago, a dead dog into the well. The Aryas are also afraid that a dacoity may take place in their village.

Such troubles are, says the Editor, bound to be experienced if the Samaj is to be a living institution.

European visitors to the Juma Mosque, Delhi.

18. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 6th September 1912, has some verses headed "The Mosque and the boots." The poet (the Editor) states that one day he enquired from the Imam of the Juma Mosque, Delhi, why that place of worship was "trampled under the boots of Europeans, morning and evening." The Imam in the poem returns the following reply :—

"It is because of these boots

"That I have obtained title and property.

"May these boots endure till the day of judgment.

* * * * * * * *

"My forehead is worthy only

"Of coming into contact with their soles."

The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 11th September 1912 :—

"Few days ago the Comrade expressed righteous indignation at finding European visitors to the Juma Masjid at Delhi walking about the precincts and in the court yard without removing their boots or putting on boot coverings. The explanation of this was that at the time of the restoration of the mosque to the Muhammadans the Government did not allow the managing body to compel European visitors to follow the custom observed elsewhere. We are given to understand that the Government still refuse to enforce the special regulation insisted upon by the Managing Committee. Our contemporary observes that 'even a Viceroy like Lord Curzon who was so particular about certain matters could not see his way to do more than forbid the wearing of boots inside the roofed portion of the mosque.' We are afraid this is an act of sacrilege and may rouse a feeling of indignation amongst the Muslim public. Henceforth Delhi will attract more visitors. We hope Lord Hardinge will direct that the Juma Masjid should be treated like other places of Muslim worship, when His Excellency goes to Delhi, and that proper reverence should be shown for old religious buildings by all visitors, irrespective of caste, creed or nationality."

A prayer.

19. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 10th September 1912, publishes a letter from Husain Nizami, of Delhi, who reports the text of a prayer offered by him at a religious meeting, recently held in the new Metropolis. The writer complained to God that the disobedient followers of Christ had been uniformly harassing Muhammadans, and beseeched the Almighty, on behalf of Indian Muhammadans, to vouchsafe victory to their co-religionists in Tripoli and Morocco, and to teach the Prophet's followers in India to eschew strife and discord, to value the Pax Britannica, and to bend their knees to God alone.

VI.—Legislation.

A suggestion.

20. The Army News (Ludhiana), of the 7th September 1912, has a note headed "A good law." It suggests that the law recently passed by the United Provinces Legislative Council to prevent the adulteration of ghi should be made applicable to the whole of India.

The Panjab Samachar (Lahore), of the 7th September 1912, writes to the same effect.

21. In the course of a leader on the revision of the Council Regulations the Observer (Lahore), of September 4th, 1912, makes the following remarks :—

The Council Regulations.

"Indeed, altogether it is not improbable that some material modifications may be made in the Council Regulations. It remains to be seen how Muslim interests will be affected by the changes. We are, of course, sanguine that after the repeated categorical and authoritative assurances, so frequently given to us, the right of separate representation conceded to us in all the Councils, excepting the Punjab, will not be taken away from us; though after the bitter experience in another matter, it is natural to feel great diffidence even on this point. However, the issues involved are of the highest moment and the revised Regulations can give satisfaction only if no attempt is made to play fast and loose with Muslim rights, and the Musalmans are left in enjoyment of the dearly valued privileges of separate and adequate representation on the Legislative Councils."

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

22. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 5th April 1912, publishes a note headed "A Muhammadan Judge has not been appointed to the High Court, Bombay." The paper contends that it is highly necessary that there should be a Muhammadan Judge on the bench of the Court. The Government of Sir George Clarke, however, has always treated Muslim claims and interests with indifference in this respect. It confers every vacant Judgeship on some non-Muhammadan and has only recently appointed a Hindu Vakil as a temporary Judge for six months, although several competent Muhammadan Vakils and Barristers were available in Bombay and other provinces.

Muhammadans and the bench of the High Court, Bombay.

23. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 11th September 1912 : —

The Khan of Hoti Mardan's case.

"On Saturday last a blue-book containing 'correspondence with His Majesty's Secretary of State for India relative to certain criminal proceedings instituted against Khan Bahadur Kwaja Muhammad Khan of Hoti Mardan in the North-West Frontier Province' was published at Simla. The correspondence consists of a despatch from the Government of India to the Secretary of State for India dated the 11th July 1912, the rest being enclosures relating to the proceedings at Bombay and Peshawar and correspondence between the Government of India and the North-West Frontier Administration. After the case had been concluded in the Bombay High Court and the Khan and the other two accused, Mr. and Mrs. King, had been acquitted 'without a stain on their character' typewritten and printed histories of the case were circulated broadcast in India and England. The entire Indian Press, considering the extraordinary nature of the case, commented on it at length and several English newspapers followed suit. Numerous questions were asked in the House of Commons and the Secretary of State called for a full report from the Government of India. The latter put themselves into communication with the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province and the replies received from him and other officers concerned are included in the blue-book under notice. The Government of India have made a full enquiry into the matter and the result is contained in the despatch addressed to the Secretary of State for India.

"The contents of the despatch may be broadly divided under three heads, first, the questions asked in the House of Commons, second, the order of Mr. Justice Davar of the Bombay High Court, and third, the comments in the Press. In the House of Commons questions were asked by Messrs. MacCallum Scott and Keir Hardie and the Earl of Ronalshay. It is assumed that those questions were based on the comments that appeared in the Indian Press. As a matter of fact similar comments appeared in India, in the Manchester Guardian and some other English papers, and among Anglo-Indian papers the Indian Daily News followed the same lines. Besides, members of Parliament had in their possession the summarised history on which all comments were based and hence, in framing their questions they were quite independent of newspaper criticism. No coaching was needed to obtain information which was public property. Members of Parliament are the guardians of the whole Empire and when they believe an act of injustice has been done it is their duty to seek information which may lead to the righting of a wrong. Thus questions in Parliament cannot be condemned even when based on insufficient or inaccurate information. It must also be remembered that the majority of the questions were framed not on the strength of newspaper comments but on the judgment of a learned and distinguished Judge of the Bombay High Court, whose pronouncement cannot be called irresponsible by any stretch of language or imagination. The history of the case itself is so fresh that there is no occasion to recapitulate it. It was finally decided by one of His Majesty's Judges, who is not in the habit of using severe language. And yet the fact is undeniable that in this case he did make grave reflections on the procedure that had been followed. These remarks are categorically enumerated in the letter of the Government of India and are examined and commented upon. Besides his order the Hon. Sir Dinshaw D. Davar gave his note book to the Government and extracts from his notes are also published.

"The criticisms of the learned Judge are summarised under four heads:—(1) That in Upper India the Khan Bahadur was subjected to a great many indignities. (2) That the procedure followed by the authorities in Upper India was 'understandable' (sic). (3) That the statements of the girls, even if true, afforded no sufficient grounds upon which action should have been taken. (4) That the Khan Bahadur was arrested on nobody's complaint and was asked to go down to Bombay to answer a charge when there was no charge whatever pending against him. The whole procedure is characterised as 'most irregular and arbitrary.' As regards the first finding of the Judge the Government of India after detailing the facts as ascertained by them arrive at the conclusion that 'unless it is held that a person of the standing of the Khan Bahadur is to be regarded as exempt from the ordinary operation of the law, we are quite unable to hold that the alleged 'indignities' attaching to his arrest have any existence in fact.' With the profoundest deference that must be shown for the high authority of the Government of India we feel constrained to say that it is a grave reflection upon the Judge to suggest that he is capable of stretching or restraining the operation of the law in respect of any individual, no matter what his position. No one had ever suggested any consideration for the Khan except what in law is due to the humblest subject. With regard to the next opinion of the Judge about the trifling nature of the familiarities complained of, the Government of India say:—'We regret that we are entirely at variance with the views expressed by the learned Judge in this connection . . . . We cannot but consider that the Honourable Judge has seriously misapprehended the significance of the acts alleged.' The action of the Rawalpindi police stand on a separate footing and the Government of India may be right in saying that they had no interest in the prosecution. As regards the last opinion of the Judge the Government observe:—'We are unable to accept as accurate the theory that the Khan Bahadur was arrested on 'evidently nobody's complaint.' In other words, the Government of India sit as a court of appeal and reverses all the findings on facts of Mr. Justice Davar, employing language which is scarcely complimentary to the learned Judge.

"The Government of India hold the view that the questions put in the House of Commons about the Islamia College are based upon information derived from the Press, whereas we have already stated that it will be found in the pamphlet which was widely circulated both in this country and in England. The Government of India have honoured the Tribune by mentioning it in this connection and including extracts from it, regarding it as 'typical of others.' The first is the letter addressed by two Muhammadan gentlemen to the Khan for subscribing to the College. This letter appeared in all papers not only in the Punjab but all over the country, but the Tribune was readily chosen as the whipping-boy for the whole Press. To be singled out for appreciation or correction by the Government is such an old experience, so far as we are concerned, that we have lost the feeling of elation in the first case and depression in the other. Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick sent us an acknowledgment in connection with the Multan beard-clipping case; in his Minute on the Resolution of the House of Commons on Simultaneous Examinations he paid us a compliment which we are too modest to recall at this distance of time. The Murree settlement was extended from ten to twenty years on account of the agitation that we set on foot. Numerous press notes and communiqués have followed on our writings. The decision about indigenous architecture in new Delhi is due mainly to our agitation. We are bound to accept whatever comes as part of the day's work and reward. We have no complaint to make nor do we feel that we are called upon to make any reply. The Government of India have defended their officers. We find ourselves in the excellent and distinguished company of a Judge of the Bombay High Court and three members of Parliament, to say nothing of the entire Indian Press and several important English newspapers. We may respectfully add that we are quite prepared to err again with a Judge of the High Court."

"The Gazette of India contains the full text of the Government of India's Despatch to the Secretary of State on the Hoti Mardan Case and the irregularities connected therewith. It occupies 80 pages of printed matter and the length shows the utter weakness of the defence. It may be said that the whole thing has been practically whitewashed, that the Bombay High Court Judgment is practically set aside, and the executive actions and proceedings are all approved. The action of the police officers is said to be perfectly justified in view of the seriousness of the complaint concerning two inexperienced girls. It seems that the Government of India have been moved more by considerations of policy and prestige than by strict judicial considerations. Because the Khan of Hoti Mardán was rich, the public ask for considerate treatment. So says the Despatch! No. The fact is that if the Khan of Hoti had been poor, there would have arisen no trouble and all the numerous irregularities would not have cropped up. We are sure that the explanation will not convince 9 out of 10 Indians and the impression left is that Judges may err, but the Indian executive errs not. It is the vindication of the omnipotence of the local officer and the executive procedure and the feebleness of the judiciary. We need hardly say that this is a most regrettable conclusion.

"The moral of the big Hoti Mardán case is 'don't be rich in a backward place. The Government of India Despatch in answering the charges of the indignities offered to the Khan of Hoti Mardan says: 'Unless it is to be held that a person of the standing of the Khan Bahadur is to be regarded as exempt from the ordinary operation of the law, we are quite unable to hold that the alleged indignities attached to the arrest have any existence in fact.' But we desire to ask, can any one of the police and executive officers who handled the Hoti Mardan case say that, had he been a poor man with 'three acres and a cow', his offence in having put his hand on the two girls would have been considered so seriously, and led to all the proceedings whose alleged errors form the subject of 88 pages of a special Despatch? Every one of the alleged irregularities brought by the public has been explained away by the Government of India, who say that 'they are not prepared to blame their officers.' Even the suppression of the telegrams and their final disappearance have been justified and it seems hopeless to consider that there might have been some small indiscretion or slight error in any one of the officers blamed. The only persons that err inordinately are those of the highest courts and Sir Dinshaw Davar has been sufficiently chastised for his errors!"

(b)—Police.

Crime and Police in the Punjab.

24. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 5th September 1912 :—

"In our leading article to-day we have discussed at some length the question of the relationship of crime to the respect of the people for law and order. It is most unfortunate that there should prevail anywhere in the Province contempt for law and order to such an extent as to call for strong criticism even from the present Government. But it is permissible to inquire what has been done by the department or by the Government to promote respect for law and order. Crime and its causation admit of a two-fold treatment, retributive and remedial. A system which is based on the ancient and out of date conception of punishment for crime is unsuited to the twentieth century. Even in the early years of British occupation of the Punjab what commended it to the people of this Province was the spirit of impartiality and absolute justice which dominated the rulers. Nothing that is less than just either as a punishment or as a remedy can ever command respect. It is the system of the department that is at fault and that fails to command respect from the classes with which it deals. There are certainly cases and circumstances in which crime is the all important factor. In such cases crime should be dealt with as crime from a retributive point of view. But it is a mistake to confine the activities of the police to such a treatment of crime. The criminal should receive as much attention as crime and the character and motives of the criminal constitute relevant subjects of study for the limbs of the law and order. What has the department or the Government done so far to study the effect of punishment on the criminal? Have we any authentic record to show the effect of punishment or non-punishment on criminal classes? It is customary to blame the magistracy for acquittals or for light sentences. But what are the effects of heavy and deterrent sentences? We wish the Government called for a special report from the Inspector-General of Police on crime and punishment with special reference to remedial action and individualization of punishment. Such a report would afford some data as regards the contempt or respect for law and order which the police may be courting by their methods."

Recruitment for the Police.

* * * * * * * *

"We have maintained again and again that, so long as the officers of the Police force will continue to be recruited from the ranks of the illiterate and the uneducated, little or no real improvement will be effected in either the ability of the police to cope with crime or in their morale. There is no lack of educated men with the requisite physical qualifications among educated men of all communities in the Province and there is no reason why any appointments to the upper subordinate ranks of the Police should be made from among the illiterate. There is no lack of men of good social status among the educated who would make excellent police officers. The difficulty that presents itself, however, is this. How is the promotion of men at present serving in the ranks to be managed? They are most of them possessed of little or no educational qualifications and the question is should their promotion to the upper subordinate ranks, i.e., as Sub-Inspectors, be altogether stopped? Among the present Sub-Inspectors also there are not a few who are uneducated and the question is should they or should they not be promoted as Inspectors? It will, of course, not be possible to stop their promotions altogether, but their number might be reduced with advantage. At least two-thirds of the vacancies in the ranks of Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors should be filled up by the direct appointment or promotion of men of education."

(d)—Education.

Indigenous system of Elementary Education.

26. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 6th September 1912:—

* * * * * *

"For the sake of the general Sikh public and for the consideration of the members of the Educational Committee we offer some suggestions for working out a scheme of uniting the Dharmsala schools into a system to carry on the early education of our people.

"(1) First thing to be done is to compile a complete list of Dharmsalas, etc., where Gurmukhi (Punjabi) is taught for each tahsil giving the name of the place, the name of the Bhai, the number of scholars, the ownership of the Dharmsala, the sources of income and interests of the Dharmsala, some brief remarks about the capability of the Bhai.

"Also a list of Dharmsalas and places where schools of the above type can be opened or should be opened with information about income and local influential persons willing to co-operate.

"(2) Training of the Bhais for teaching work of infants and little children is the next important matter to be looked into. We are glad to note that already a class has been opened at Tarn Taran at the cost of the Educational Committee. There the Bhais should be trained for about two years at the cost of their respective Dharamsalas or of the people who usually support them; and in special cases at those of the Committee. There should be a primary model school in connection with the Training class at Tarn Taran under the supervision of some trained men where these pupil-teachers can practise.

"(3) Small allowances of Rs. 3 and Rs. 5 may be given to the Bhais who are willing to bring their Dharamsalas under the system and ready to undergo a training, according to the number of scholars and attendance, in addition to what they can earn otherwise.

"(4) To create a supervising staff is the next item. All this should as far as possible be honorary, and we think any Matric. student or a man with ordinary acquirements will do. A Book should be brought out for the guidance of Bhais and the tahsil supervisors regarding the art of teaching, etc, and the subjects and extent of teaching in each standard. A few paid servants to supervise the whole scheme may be engaged as the system expands.

"(5) The curriculum and School Books require mature wisdom and expert opinion. General outlines of the whole curriculum for about four or five years for children of both sexes beginning with the age of 5 years and ending about 9 or 10 years is to be decided upon by the Committee. The details of the curriculum, that is the extent and scope of each subject of instruction in each year and their method of teaching, should be left to the experienced teachers and specialists in the science of Education. Books to be written on this accepted outline—by Sikh trained teachers and Professors. Religious education to be all verbal. The Japji and Rahiras to be taught to elder children by word of mouth only, also a little arithemetic, mental as well as written, as be useful for bazar and agricultural purposes.

"(6) For carrying out of the scheme some zealous men in each district to be selected and entrusted with the work of bringing these Dharmsalas into the system. Of course general instructions for the guidance of all such men may be published. These selected men will form important factors in arousing the local interest in the project and also give material help in the supervision of these schools to the officers of the Committee.

"We, in conclusion, hope that work begun now on some such lines as suggested above will enable the Committee to lay a definite scheme of Elementary Education complete in all details before the Panth for its approval at the next Conference at Ambala. Then next year they can very well make a start with the funds at their disposal."

27. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 6th September 1912, has a leader headed "How the money collected for the Muslim University should be spent," being a criticism on the communication on the subject, published in the columns of the Aligarh Institute Gazette by the Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan, B.A., (Cantab), Barrister-at-Law, Honorary Joint-Secretary of the All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference. It is not only unnecessary, says the paper, on the part of Muhammadans to raise the above question, but the very fact that it should have been raised at all is calculated to deny to Muhammadans that lofty courage and communal feeling with which their name is known to be associated. Besides, nobody, not even the members of the Muslim University Foundation Committee, has the power to spend even a farthing from the Muslim University Fund for any other object than the establishment of the Muslim University, however necessary and useful that object might be in the interests of the community and the country. As regards the refusal of the Secretary of State for India to grant a University corresponding to the Muhammadan ideal, it should be borne in mind that this ideal has a great deal of poetic exaggeration about it and that the organisers of the proposed institution can in no way be held responsible for this. A similar mistake is being committed now in regarding a limited University as useless. Nor is this all. Some newspapers and their correspondents are employing all their powers to use the decision of the Secretary of State for India to create feelings of intense sorrow and disappointment in the minds of Muhammadans, although this attitude on their part is as impolitic as it is unwarranted.

The Muslim University.

The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 5th September 1912 :—

"A large majority of the Mussalman papers are violently opposed to the conditions under which the Government of India are prepared to charter the new Universities. Judging from the tone and temper of the writings published in their columns it would seem that as a community they would either have the scheme on their own terms or would have none of it. This is a most injudicious and wholly untenable view to take. For the reputation of Muslim loyalty we hope better counsels would prevail. It is not desirable to create the impression that any section of the Indian community refuses to be loyal to the Government except on its own terms even as Ulsterites are threatening to do. It is absurd to contend that the Muslim University will be efficient enough at its very birth to undertake the responsibility of supervising mofussil Colleges so as to assure the maintenance of a high standard of training. The threat of suspending further activity and investing funds for other educational purposes in which some papers indulge, though mischievous, ought not to be taken seriously. It may represent the views of a class of sentimentalists who do not hesitate to sacrifice future good for a temporary gain. But we believe that beneath this frothy exuberance is to be found sound common sense which has helped the Muslim to be a practical politician."

"A number of Moslem papers announced as early as January and February 1912 that it was understood by the Aligarh authorities that the Secretary of State would not allow affiliation of mofussil colleges. But this news was somehow contradicted by one of the Aligarh authorities, apparently with a view to facilitating collection of subscriptions or because attempts were made to prevail upon the Government to reconsider the decision. Anyhow there was considerable doubt as regards affiliation and all knew that the Government of India might refuse. Where then is the surprise and the alleged breach of faith? If the subscribers had been led to understand that every mofussil Moslem college and school would be linked with that of Aligarh and a sort of Islamic Education Department would be established with the new University at its head, it was entirely the fault of the leaders who gave the programme to the collecting body. What appears to us as even more probable is, that the Muhammadans in India have for some time past been feeling about Persian and Turkish affairs and, as they were strictly enjoined to keep neutrality by His Majesty's Proclamation regarding it issued at Simla on the 3rd November 1911, they had no means of expressing their political discontent. The disappointment in connection with the Aligarh University formed a subject of convenient and safe outlet to all the pent-up sorrows and sighs of Moslem India. The more unbending builders of Mussalman nationalism decided that the University on the Government of India terms should be summarily refused and that the Pan-Islamic discontent in the convenient guise of an educational protest started and fed with all the sympathies that educational longing would bring from everywhere and with all the inconveniences avoided which Indian nationalism encountered before. This may be a fine stroke of machiavelism, but there is no chance of success for the conflagration now kindled. It must get extinguished from want of real fuel and we note with satisfaction that the Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan recommends the acceptance of the University on the present terms in the Aligarh Gazette. All this leads to the conclusion that the Muhammadan leaders who spoke strongly at the constitution meeting assumed too much about the injustice they were suffering and their fighting zeal is only wasted if directed against the Government. The same energy when directed to show sound results in Aligarh will earn more appreciable rewards in times to come."

"On perusal of an article just contributed by the Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan to the Aligarh Institute Gazette, we confess, we are divided between surprise and alarm—surprise at the spirit of easy-going accommodation which runs throughout the contribution, and alarm at the prospect of the promoters of the Muslim University scheme climbing down from their predestal and accepting a settlement of the question of affiliation which is opposed to the general sentiment of the community. Put in a nutshell, the Hon'ble Sahibzada advises his co-religionists to relegate to the background the point of the affiliation of outstation colleges and to devote the funds collected in improving and extending the M. A.-O. College, deducing his conclusions by a process of reasoning which is as unconvincing as it is insulting to the intelligence of the average Indian Musalman. For, we think, we shall not be performing our duty if we fail to tell the writer that greatly as the Indian Muslims respect his views and highly as they honour him for his self-sacrificing efforts in the national cause, his last pronouncement will create the profoundest disappointment, not unmixed with a feeling of resentment at the way in which he urges the trustees of a national fund to ride roughshod over the general feeling of the community and to commit a breach of trust by diverting the money to a purpose for which it was never subscribed."

The proposed Morley scholarships for the study of History.

28. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 6th September 1912, has a note headed "Memorial to Lord Morley and the Hindu community." Referring to the late Mr. Malabari's proposal to found scholarships for the study of History as a memorial of Lord Morley, the paper observes that His Lordship is the author of the Reform Scheme, in which Muhammadans have been acknowledged to be superior to Hindus in political importance and the latter have been humiliated for all time to come. The question, therefore, arises whether the followers of Hinduism should contribute money towards raising a memorial to such a "kind" friend.

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

Zamindars in the Punjab.

29. Writing under the heading "The future of zamindars" the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th September 1912, complains that, while other communities in India have been making surprising progress, luckless agriculturists do not even know that, as human beings, they also have some rights, to try to secure which argues life on the part of a people. After referring to the wretched life led by them, the paper enquires whether such a community can ever be expected to move onwards. (It is true that) the Alienation of Land Act has prevented the passing of their holdings into the hands of Sahukars, while Government has also laid them under obligation by establishing agricultural banks for their benefit. All this is, however, a mere drop in the ocean. Some discerning people are of opinion that the passing of the above Act and the opening of the said banks are intended specially to safe-guard the interests of Government, and that it is only incidentally that these measures have proved advantageous for zamindars There can be no doubt that, if money-lenders had continued to grab (land), zamindars would have given up agriculture and turned labourers. This would have very injuriously affected the Government exchequer, and so this great danger was averted, (by the Act named). To tell the truth, the Act has not benefited agriculturists to any great extent, nay, the poor wretches have gone from the frying pan into the fire. Government has, by passing it, exercised on them an "effect far stronger than even Mahajans and Sahukars." Their land has undoubtedly been secured to them, but they have not been given the fullest right to profit by its produce, from 60 to 70 per cent. of which is taken away by Government and others. The paper then goes on to say that the ignorance of zamindars makes them the target of undeserved oppression from both officials and private individuals. They form the most useful section of the population, but their condition is the most wretched and pitiable. Government does not pay sufficient attention to their education, and some people think that it does so with a set purpose, under the impression that if they were to receive education, zamindars would loudly demand their rights and Government would lose "a golden sparrow." The Editor, however, feels convinced that the existing state of affairs cannot last long. Zamindars have begun to realise their degradation and wish to put forth efforts to better their lot. Government had better lend them its support and enable them to stand on their own legs. The desired result can be achieved with the aid only of education, and Government should, therefore, devote at least half of the recent Royal Educational Grant to the Punjab to the education of zamindars.

Hari Chand, Mujrim, of Rawalpindi.

30. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 6th September 1912, has a note headed "Lala Hari Chand, Mujrim." The paper says that the Lala, certain articles from whose pen have led to the confiscation of the security of Rs. 2,000 deposited by the Panjab Advocate, has sent it a long letter to clear his position. He writes that the Frontier Police have been hostile to him since he wrote and published his Gurmukhi book "The Loot of Peshawar" and have kept him under surveillance. He, however, acknowledged the blessings of British rule even in this publication, and admits even now that the present regime is a priceless boon for India, especially Hindus. He adds that his articles in the Panjab Advocate were written in good faith, and that he praises at heart Sir George Roos Keppel's statesmanlike administration.

I.—Politics.

Is Persia going to be partitioned.

1. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 18th September 1912 :—

"On another page will be found a strong article on the Persian situation published in the mail week by the Nation of London. It will show that the spirit of true liberalism still lives in England and that righteous Englishmen are not prepared to endorse every detail of the policy of Sir Edward Grey. The Times, after repeatedly defending the Anglo-Russian Convention, an Agreement professedly designed to secure the integrity and independence of Persia, now urges the British Government to partition the ancient kingdom. 'Northern Persia,' writes the leading English journal, 'has become, and must continue to be, a Russian dependency' whilst the British policy in the south 'is leading inevitably to occupation.' It, therefore, suggests measures for the partition of Persia by Great Britain and Russia 'with the minimum of friction and the minimum of danger.' We sincerely hope that the Nation is wrong in regarding the Times article as inspired by the Ministry, and trust the latter will not be allowed by the English nation to destroy a kingdom whose integrity it is in honour bound to defend. That Great Britain can even now bring Russia to a righteous frame of mind by threatening to close the French and English money markets to her is palpably obvious. What is required is a little assertiveness on the part of Sir Edward Grey. If England does not assert herself now, Persia will have vanished as an independent kingdom and with it the reputation of England for defence of the weak against the strong."

(b)—Home.

Lord Crewe's Indian policy.

2. Writing under the heading "Lord Crewe's unwise policy," the Muin (Amritsar), of the 8th (received on the 17th) September 1912, says that, since His Lordship's appointment to his present post, the political horizon of India has been growing darker from day to day. He has formulated (in regard to this country) a policy which clashes with the democratic principles and statesmanship of the British Government, and with the conscience of the British people, and has made the whole of India uneasy. His Lordship began by reversing the Partition of Bengal, a proceeding that shook the very foundations of the people's faith in Government. Next he declared in the House of Lords that this country could not be given the colonial form of self-government even in the remotest future. The sentiments expressed by him in his second speech on the subject cannot but lacerate the hearts of the King Emperor's 30 crore Indian subjects; they argue entire distrust of Indians. But Lord Crewe should bear in mind that the sole guarantee of the might and permanence of British rule in Asia lies in reposing confidence in the 300 millions of British subjects in India. Next the paper takes exception to His Lordship's attitude towards the proposed Hindu and Muslim Universities, asking him to abandon his present policy and to make the future of India splendid by sanctioning their establishment and granting certain other concessions that would show his confidence in Indians.

The Royal Commission on Indian Services.

3. Writing under the heading "The Public Service Commission," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 13th September 1912, states that it has been announced by the Home member, at the recent meeting of the Supreme Legislative Council, that the Government of India is not prepared to propose any addition to the number of the Commission's members. The announcement will deeply disappoint the Indian public, especially Muhammadans, for the reason that the number of independent Indians and non-official gentlemen on the Commission is extremely small. It has been fully proved by Islamic societies, and newspapers in particular, that the Muslim community is most inadequately represented on the Commission; a fact which has been admitted even by the Anglo-Indian press and some members of Parliament. The Government of India ought to have attended to the matter.

The Nicholson Committee.

4. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 12th September 1912, has a note headed "Reduction is to be effected in the Army." An Anglo-Indian paper, it states, learns that the Nicholson Committee will probably recommend the disbanding of 27 native regiments. The news has caused feelings of uneasiness in different quarters, for the contemplated action is likely to snatch the bread out of the mouths of thousands of young men. The disbanding of 27 native regiments cannot, besides, result in any appreciable reduction in the military expenditure. This can only be brought about by cutting down the number of European regiments, every member of which costs as much as a number of native soldiers.

The pan-Islamism.

5. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 11th September 1912 :—

* * * * * * *

"Indian Muslims would not be true to their salt, indeed, they would not be Muslims, at all, if they were not inspired by the legitimate wish to rise in the scale of nations, to sympathise with the afflictions of their brethren in faith, to rejoice in their rejoicings and to share in their sorrows. This is enjoined on them by their religion, and all worldly considerations combined will be of no avail in effecting in them the slightest change in this respect. If a pan-Islamic movement does not signify anything more than this, then the Musalmans of India must at once plead guilty and also admit that they have no mind to mend. But it is difficult to see how non-Muslim races can take exception to such legitimate sentiments. If, however, the Musalmans are charged with anything else—if the movement is tantamount to any desire of aggression against non-Muslim peoples, a fanatical longing and thus a corresponding effort to revive the territorial supremacy of Islam by force, an organised attempt to revolt against the peaceful order of things now prevailing over the greater part of the East—if that be so, then all that we have to say is that Muslim India, and for the matter of that, the entire Muslim world, is a complete stranger to the idea which lives only in heated brains and forms no part of the future programme of the followers of the Arabian Prophet. We shall not here peep back into the pages of history, nor think it is necessary to vindicate Islam against the charges of aggression and fanaticism, which are so freely levelled against it by perverse ignorance and base prejudice. Confining ourselves to the present, we make bold to hold that if anything Islam is the aggrieved party, rather than the aggressor; and yet the fact is incontrovertible that the innermost desire of every true Muslim and of all Islamic peoples is for peaceful life, for the continuance of the settled order of things, for the universal acceptance of the maxim of living and letting others live. Besides, in India, for better or for worse, the Musalmans have come to identify themselves and their fortunes with England; and he is no friend of either Great Britain or the Muslims who would sow the seed of bitterness between her and and her most loyal subjects, who would touch the Musalmans at their tenderest point and accuse a loyal and peace-abiding nation of harbouring designs which, whatever the remote past, have now passed out of the region of practical politics and cannot therefore be expected to exercise the smallest influence on their national ideals.

"The reference to the Amir shows the writer to be steeped in such gross ignorance, tinged with a spirit of so fanciful a bravado, that it has not failed to call forth a rebuke even from the Times. We wish the rebuke were sterner and the exposure of the mad day-dreams of an anonymous ignoramus more complete. Is this the Amir's reward for the faithfulness with which he is discharging his obligations towards England? Were it not for the irresponsible character of the critic and the unsubstantial nature of his criticism, it would fill a proud potentate with righteous indignation; but as it is His Majesty can well afford to treat the remarks with supreme contempt and pay no heed to the ravings of one who has not the courage to reveal his identity.

"We cannot conclude without thanking the Times for the advice that the 'Muhammadans of India should have every consideration,' though one cannot say how far the leading paper is, in this matter, a reliable exponent of the British foreign policy of recent times. We know with the Times that the Indian Muslims 'cannot expect to dictate the whole of British foreign policy'; nor are they so presumptuous as to wish for it. At the same time, they expect,—and we think, as tried loyal subjects of His Imperial Majesty the King Emperor and as forming an integral part of the mighty British Empire they have a right to claim—that their wishes will not be altogether ignored by the statesmen of England in formulating her Imperial policy. And we fully recognize the consideration that has been not infrequently vouchsafed to Muslim wishes and for this are deeply grateful to our rulers. It is, however, only natural that there should be some dissatisfaction and irritation when there is no evidence of the principle laid down by the Times being duly kept in sight. Does this afford an indication of the working of a lawless movement? None but the blind or insane can interpret it as such."

Rulers and ruled in Hindu India.

6. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 14th September 1912 :—

"In a lucid interval the London Times once showed remarkable insight regarding a national characteristic of the Hindu. It said that it believed in at least one thing concerning the Hindu. It was that the loyalty of the Hindu to the Sovereign had become so ingrained in his nature that even a Hindu anarchist would instinctively shrink from the idea of lifting his hand against one of royal blood, not to mention the King himself. A Hindu anarchist, one might as well add, would even lay down his life to protect the King. 'The people,' enjoin the Shastras, 'should first and above all think of the King and the King only and protect him by all means.' No teaching of the Shastras has found more permanent room in the Hindu mind.

"The sentiment, which Time has converted into an instinct, is as old as the Vedas. O King,' says the Rigveda, 'we place you on the throne! Be thou the lord of this country! Let all the subjects adore you!' When Marich was ordered by Ravana to decoy Sri Ram Chandra in the shape of a golden deer, and thus help the Royal Rakshasha in his sinful object, saw at once that he was being driven to certain death. But hark what he says:—'Kings are the originators of all peace and of all religious duties. So to serve the King under all conditions should be the bounden duty of all subjects.' The Mahabharata calls it a sin to talk lightly of the King, because 'the King is the earthly god.' The Hindu ideal of Kingship would hardly be understood outside India except in Japan. 'Even if the King is unmindful of his duties,' say the Shastras, 'the subjects should not be dissatisfied.' Good or bad, the King has always received the homage of Hindu society. There has never been an exception to this rule. Rajdarshan—seeing a King—washes away the sins of a Hindu according to his Shastras and his own honest belief. The Moslem Emperors of India respected this sentiment and made it a point to show themselves to the people every morning at the Jharokha in the Delhi Fort. Rajdarshan at the Jharokha had almost attained the sanctity of a religious rite with a Hindu. Certain Brahmans were so strict in the observance of this rite that their descendants are still known as Darshani Brahmans in Delhi. Even Aurangzeb had not lost his sanctity as King in the eyes of a Hindu and never ceased to receive the usual homage at the Jharokha. During King George's visit to Calcutta a blind Hindu woman tearfully said that she did not know until that moment how great a curse blindness was.

"It is not the subjects alone who are enjoined by the Shastras to adore the King and look up to him as God upon earth. 'The King,' says Manu, 'should treat his subjects like his sons—as a father treats and protects his subjects.' 'You should perform those acts,' said Bhisma to Yudhisthira, 'which lead to the benefit of the people, though it may interfere with your desires and pleasures.' Says the Agni Purana:—'As a mother forbears all luxury for the sake of the child in her womb, so should the King do for his subjects which are under his protection.' And instances are not rare in Hindu history of Kings coming up to the Hindu ideal of Kingship quite as thoroughly as set forth in the Shastras. Despotism—in the sense in which it is applied to Eastern royalty in Western parlance—was unknown in Hindu India. It was, as a general rule, no relation of tyrant and victim but of father and son. It may be a news to modern Horatios that the ancient Hindu Kings consulted their people and sought their help and support in every important detail of administration, and that under their truly paternal rule public opinion found more effective scope for expressing itself than perhaps it does in the modern world with its Parliaments and votes.

* * * * * * *

"It will thus be seen that the ancient Hindu 'despotism' hardly afforded less scope for the exercise of popular wishes than the highly complicated administrative machinery of the modern world. Sri Ram Chandra banished Sita against his own conscience out of deference to public opinion. Ten thousand years or more have rolled by since that heart-rending tragedy convulsed the Empire of Koshala, but the Hindu has never forgotten Sri Ram Chandra. He is the breath of his nostrils. Sri Ram Chandra rules Hindu India to this day as he did ten thousand years ago. There is no parallel in the world's history to this Hindu loyalty to a just and popular King."

The Governorship of Bombay.

7. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 17th September 1912 :—

"The Times received this week confirms the report that Sir George Clarke has been granted six months' extension of Governorship and that it would be officially announced shortly. It says that there is no question that the improvement in the political firmament in the Western Presidency has been brought about largely by 'Sir George's firmness in repressing sedition—notably in his prosecution of Bal Gangadahar Tilak in 1908—and his sympathy with the legitimate aspirations of the educated classes.' This remark, which has about it a genuine Chirolean ring, shows that the Times would not be happy without a fling at Mr. Tilak. But it almost suggests that the extension is a reward for the successful prosecution of Mr. Tilak. Apparently it would not be Times like to admit that the improvement not only in Bombay but all over the country is due almost entirely to Lord Morley's reforms. However, the six months' extension to Sir George Clarke is a precedent against which Indians should strongly protest. Again, Bombay would suffer by this extension quite as much as India did by the extension granted to Lord Curzon and there could be no mistake about it. We shall have no objection to an all-round increase in the tenure of office both for Governors and Lieutenant-Governors. But extensions produce a most undesirable effect on the administrative policy of the Local Governments and are hurtful as much to the high personages concerned as to the general public."

The Delhi State Entry.

8. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 20th September 1912 :—

"After many tentative statements it has been finally announced that His Excellency the Viceroy will make his State Entry in Delhi on the 23rd of December. This cannot be said to be a surprise as it was in the fitness of things that the Viceroy's official entry to the new capital should be attended with some public ceremonial. We were prepared for the announcement that all the Punjab Chiefs will have to attend the Viceroy's State Entry. The Empire has written indignant but closely reasoned articles relating to the State Entry and observes that it would be a great public scandal if the Punjab Chiefs are forced to attend it and thereby involve themselves in further financial difficulties. The Durbar of 1903 was in connection with the Proclamation of King Edward. Whatever Lord Curzon did to make the occasion remarkable, its memory has been eclipsed by the infinitely grander and more glorious Coronation Durbar of last year and the loyal gratification of the Indian people at the memorable visit of Their Imperial Majesties.

"No little surprise will be created by re-calling the fact that although the preparations during the Durbar of Lord Curzon were on a smaller scale than those of the Coronation Durbar, it was stated at the time that a number of Chiefs in the Central India and Rajputana Agencies were almost reduced to bankruptcy on account of the expenses they had then to incur. It is difficult to say whether their financial position is now better. But leaving this dubious point alone, we have to face another problem, namely, the effects the last Durbar. As the preparations for the Coronation Durbar were more elaborate and grander than of the Durbar of 1903 it may be reasonably presumed that the expenditure incurred by all the Princes of India must have been greater. Whatever may have been the expenditure it was cheerfully incurred, for the occasion presented an unprecedented opportunity of doing loyal homage to Their Imperial Majesties the King Emperor and Queen Empress. It was a supreme call of duty. Expenditure on such an occasion is certainly justified. The suggestion that the Punjab Chiefs will be called upon to join the Viceroy's State Entry into Delhi in December this year may be very appropriate. We do not know the exact amount of the expenses incurred by the different Native States in the Punjab last year but it must have been a very heavy strain on the resources of these Princes. Their attendance in Delhi during the Viceroy's State Entry will again necessarily involve them in some expenditure. The State Entry may not be a Durbar, but it means expense and there is no reason why the Punjab Chiefs alone should be selected because Delhi happens to be in the Punjab. It may be argued that no specially expensive equipment will be necessary for these Chiefs to enable them to attend the State Entry this year. But they will have to make all preparations afresh. Assuming that the State Entry will be over in a few hours the fact remains that the visit of the Punjab Chiefs to Delhi and their stay, however short it may be, will involve heavy expenditure which can in no way be overlooked. Year before last when His Excellency Lord Hardinge came to Lahore he held a Durbar in the Fort. Almost all the Punjab Chiefs had to be present and though they have their own houses in Lahore they had to incur considerable expense all the same. Last year there was the great Imperial Durbar and, though all Princes had to attend it, it seems somewhat unreasonable that the Punjab Princes should have to spend every year while other Princes have to do so only occasionally. In December Delhi will no longer form any part of the Punjab. It may therefore be very properly asked why the Punjab Chiefs alone are to attend the Viceroy's State Entry into Delhi. Delhi is directly under the control of the Imperial Government, and if it is thought desirable that some of the Indian Princes should be present during the Viceroy's State Entry into the new capital the Government should invite a select number of the principal Ruling Chiefs in India and not the Punjab Chiefs alone. It may be said that they are nearer to Delhi than the other Princes. True, but is that a sufficient reason why the choice should fall on them alone? Government have not taken into consideration any question of economy in the transfer of the capital and the building of the new city. The proposed State Entry of the Viceroy is undoubtedly a function connected with the transfer of the capital. If Princes are to be present they should come from all parts of India. Besides, we cannot reasonably call the Viceroy's State Entry this year the real State Entry into the new Imperial city. The site of the new city is still the melancholy site of the ruins of many empires. The temporary Delhi is but the temporary official winter headquarters of the Imperial Government. It is a mistake on the part of the Imperial Government to associate its temporary lodgings with a State celebration and specially when the celebrations in connection with the Royal visit are still so fresh in the public memory.

"The real State Entry into the new Imperial capital should be a memorable occasion and should be made when the new city is partly, if not completely, built. There is already a strong probability that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will visit India in the course of another five years. The new capital, it may be expected, will be partially constructed by that time, and it is very desirable that the State Entry into the new capital should be led by the future Emperor of India. We all appreciate Lord Hardinge's desire to celebrate his arrival in Delhi by a State function. But we think that it should be done in a quiet way, without involving any of the Native Princes, particularly the Punjab Chiefs, in unnecessary expenditure."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Muslim League, London, on Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

9. The Millat (Lahore), of the 6th (received on the 17th) September 1912, publishes a letter headed "Cow-killing and the Urdu language," in which the writer—Saiyid Ahmad Hasan, Shaukat, of Meerut—ridicules the proposals of the Muslim League, London, to unite Hindus and Muhammadans. The League, he says, ask Hindus not to oppose Urdu, a language, which, as a matter of fact, it is simply impossible for them to do without. It is equally impossible for cow-killing (which the League wishes Muhammadans to abandon,) to be put down, the British Government itself being powerless to end it. The anti-cow-killing agitation is, moreover, distasteful to the powers that be.

The Hindu Sabha in its true colours.

10. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 13th September 1912 :—

"We have times without number exclaimed in concert with Sanatanists that Hindu Sabha is not a Sabha of Hindus but of Samajists. The Arya Samajists, under the veil and cover of Hindus, are leaving no stone unturned to reach their goal—a goal which is no other than the amalgamation and convertion of Hindus and Sikhs into Samajic circles. Various baits are put in public places to allure the unwary victims into their society. All sorts of flags and colours are set up here and there to entice Hindus and simple Sikhs into Samajic fold. We are not at all surprised to see their movements, as is natural, for increasing their numbers, but what pains us most is when crooked means and ostensible measures are adopted for a noble cause, as it pretends to be, by a body which is described all round fair and religious. No religion allows the sanctity of hypocrisy and playing in masquerade, if it is not the Arya Samaj—a name which has been ostensibly taken up, to all intents and purposes, not for religious cause but for political propaganda. In the elementary stage the Punjab Hindu Sabha took up the cause of Punjabi (Gurmukhi) among others alongside of Hindi, and imposed upon the well-wishers of the Punjabi specially upon Sikhs that the members of the so-called Hindu Sabha will rise equal to the wishes cherished by the protectors of the mother-tongue Punjabi spoken all over the Province. They, at first, with the ulterior motives of entrapping a number of silly birds into their nets, nominally took up the cause of Punjabi and uttered of its beneficence only so far as harangue and eloquence is concerned in the first two sittings of the Hindu Conference. They even went so far as to elect Hon'ble Baba Gurbukhsh Singh, Bedi, whose innocence was afterwards made a target for all sorts of jokes and taunts, as president of the Second Hindu Conference held at Multan and pass resolutions to the effect that the use of Hindi and Gurmukhi should be encouraged. This was with the obvious purpose of attracting such vacillating Sikhs, who were simple enough to play into the hands of Arya Samajists. Similar superficial resolutions have been before and after the sitting of the said Conference framed merely to please the few Sikh who were so imprudent as not to live up to the holy and lofty principles of the Gurus. We at that time warned Baba Gurbukhsh Singhji and men of his ilk to be on their guard lest they should be taken advantage of their simplicity and innocence. But they heeded us not and joined the Conference enthusiastically in spite of our timely words of caution. Arya Samajists, who are well-known for their tactics, let them to float upon the sea of glory and pride by uttering lip professions in favour of Punjabi and passing resolutions to encourage it as said above. They even promised to work shoulder to shoulder with the Sikhs to effect a recognition of the true position of Punjabi, the mother-tongue of the people of this province. But all that was vision and dream, as it would not be less than a suicide for Arya Samajists to hold such a risky ground, as they think, for a longer period than is absolutely necessary.

"Lo! our predictions and anticipations are being proved to the letter. All the leaders of the Hindu Sabha with Lala Lajpat Rai at their head have gird up their loins and made it their point to disseminate the seeds of Hindi (a foreign tongue) throughout the country, wishing to throw Punjabi in the back ground. They have openly declared themselves the champions of an alien language. Very recently the Hindu Sabha have framed rules and regulations for awarding prizes to the best essays written in Hindi Bhasha by the fresh graduates of the Punjab University of not more than 3 years standing; and this is to encourage the spread of that Bhasha alone in the Punjab. We never entertain the idea that the efforts of the Punjab Hindu Sabha to encourage Hindi are ignoble in themselves, but we simply ask where are the much-trumpeted and lip resolutions at the Conference to encourage Punjabi? Were those resolutions to be only put in black and white and not to be given effect to like those of Hindi? We emphatically say it was so. Then why not cease in future from taking up false colours and call the Punjab Hindu Conference a conference of Arya Samajists, because a majority of Hindus are in favour of Punjabi instead of Hindi. It is high time for Baba Gurbukhsh Singh and his collegues that they should realise the ridiculous position they occupy and stand at arm's length from the Samajists, who have pledged themselves to terms of hostility even with their mother-tongue."

The Hon'ble Baba Gurbakhsh Singh Bedi and Sikhs.

11. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th September 1912 :—

"At a meeting of the Sikhs of Campbellpur and Hazara held on the 21st ultimo, a resolution was passed to the effect that the 'Hon'ble Baba Gurbakhsh Singh Bedi, C.I.E., be not regarded as a representative of the Sikhs as he has shown both by word and deed that he is a Hindu.' The gentlemen who were responsible for passing this resolution should be considered both unwise and indiscreet. Baba Gurbakhsh Singh Bedi was selected by the Government to represent the Sikhs and it is an affront to the Government to state at this distance of time that the Sikhs disapprove of the choice. Surely the Government itself is not unsympathetic towards the Tat Khalsas who have been clamouring for separation. We do not deny that the Sikhs are entitled to their share of representation and patronage. Whether as part of a whole or as a separate unit, the community has every right to ask for its share of representation. But where will the Sikhs be if they go on disowning every member of the community who claims kinship with Hindus? There is a limit even to separatist agitation and wise men should recognise it."

The Hindu-Muhammadan question in the Punjab.

"The Hindu-Muhammadan question is the question of questions in the Punjab at the present day. It has taxed all the energies and the resources of our rulers and has still been baffling treatment. It has been the bane to the well-ordered progress of the Province and the despair alike of the peace-loving citizen as well as the patriotic worker. And the most regrettable part of the business is that this feeling of tension is far from being on the wane. On the other hand, it is growing. There is, of course, some reason why this feeling finds a congenial soil in this Province. The tradition of antagonism, it may be, still hovers round the Province, which has for ten centuries and more been the theatre of conflict between the aggressive hordes of Islam and the defensive forces of Hinduism. It is no doubt difficult to wipe away altogether the memory of the ancient antagonism but it was to be expected that the contending parties would at any rate have the good sense of letting Time do its healing work. In fairness to the parties, it has to be said that they were, till a few years ago, quite content not to interfere with the healing influence of time, and the result was that the old animosities faded away a good deal. The relations between the two communities were, even in places where the tension at present runs high, not only pleasant but cordial only a few years ago. The older residents of the Province can recall innumerable instances of real friendship between the leading men, Hindu and Muhammadan, of the generation that is passing away. As a matter of fact, the present tension in spite of ancient memories and traditions, is in its existing phase not of a very respectable antiquity. During the last few years, persistent efforts have been made in some places not only to re-open old sores but to create fresh injuries. The mongers of mischief have been hard at work in the Province and the result has been that almost every public question, however trifling, is overlaid with its racial phase. This is indeed a very deplorable state of things, but in order to bring about an improvement it is useful to indicate some of its symptoms. This we propose to do here briefly.

"One of the familiar methods of these mischief-mongers is to make offensive and malicious insinuations against any judicial and executive officer, not on account of any lapse from his standard of duty but simply because he happens to belong a religious persuasion different from that of his perverse critics. These methods are not the monopoly of one or other of the communities. Every fair-minded observer will, however, admit that in this respect the Hindus are much more sinned against than sinning. It is only in a particular section of the press that one finds generally the cry of a Hindu swaraj whenever there is a preponderance of Hindu officers in any station. One may also remember the silly and annoying placards that were set up at Ludhiana on the occasion of the Lieutenant-Governor's visits only a few years ago, when Diwan Tek Chand to whom the town was indebted for its water-works, held the charge of the district. It may be remembered that the Lieutenant-Governor administered a sharp rebuke to the mischief-makers by paying a handsome compliment to the Indian Deputy Commissioner. A similar attack, we are told, is being made against Diwan Bahadur Diwan Narendra Nath, the popular Deputy Commissioner of Multan, and a petition containing some non-descript Muhammadan names and thumb-impressions (as the signatories happened to be illiterate) urging the transfer of the Diwan Bahadur has been sent to the Government. It is a pity that the real actors, who are pulling the strings from behind, manage to hide themselves in the background in the cases, while ignorant and illiterate men are made the cat's paw of their machinations. Such attempts by whomsoever made are reprehensible. In the first place, it is not for the people to dictate the policy of the Government and to dominate the interests of the public service by applications of this kind. It would have been quite another matter if the officer complained against were dishonest or corrupt or incompetent. In that case, it is the bounden duty of the people to submit their representations to the Government and help it to purge the public service of its black sheep. But nothing can be more mischievous or foolish than to allege difference in religion as a ground of complaint against an officer, specially an Indian officer. Carried to its logical conclusion, it will mean that no Indian officer is fit for being posted in any office of trust or responsibility in a Punjab district, nay, it will mean that even such minor appointments as that of Sub-Inspectorship or Naib Tahsildarship should not be conferred on the children of the soil. It is a pity that these disseminators of racial bigotry do not realise that their wantonly aggressive tactics will provoke reprisals on the part of the rival communities. Thus they are like birds fouling their own nest. Not only do they make a dead set against their own people, but they make the work of administration impossible.

"The London branch of the Muslim League has recently formulated some plans for a rapprochement between the two communities. The scheme is really a continuation of the work of the Peace Conference inaugurated after the last Allahabad Congress by Sir William Wedderburn. If work is begun on the lines suggested by the London League, we have good reason to hope that the unseemly controversies about jhatka and halal meat, which are a prolific source of tension in this province, will soon disappear. There is, however, one danger to the permanent establishment of peace and good will, which is not noticed by the London League. The prevalence of separate electorates in some twelve municipalities of the Province is not often attended with happy results. As His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor observed in the last Municipal Administration Report, separate electorates often promote the return of men of extreme views to the local bodies and thereby give them an ascendancy in parochial politics. This aspect of the question deserves the attention of all well-wishers of the Province and the country."

VI.—Legislation.

Attachment of Military Officers' pay.

13. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 15th September 1912:—

• • • • • • •

"The fact does not seem to be very generally or widely known that the salaries of military officers up to Rs. 500 a month are free from income-tax, in other words the minimum of taxable annual income is over Rs. 6,000 instead of being Rs. 1,000 only. In addition to this to grant the salaries of military officers immunity from attachment in execution of decree by civil courts is not only a grave injustice but a public scandal. Members of the Indian Civil Service are forbidden to incur debts within their own jurisdiction on pain of dismissal. Why should not military officers be directed to purchase nothing on credit and to have no accounts with tradesmen, if their salaries are not liable to attachment? The legislature can do nothing less than place civil and military officers on the same footing. If that is not possible, then in any case section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code should be amended so that one moiety of the salaries of military officers shall be liable to attachment in execution of decrees by civil courts."

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

The Midnapur bomb case.

14. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 13th September 1912, has an article headed "A great political meeting at Calcutta." It reports the proceedings of the public meeting recently held in the Town Hall, Calcutta, to protest against the adverse criticism passed on the local High Court by the Anglo-Indian Press over the Midnapur bomb case. Commenting on the same, the paper remarks that the meeting will be remembered for the enthusiasm that prevailed at it. It also shows that Bengal is the only part of India in which there still exists anything of political life. As regards the Punjab, certain short-sighted people have so embittered Hindu and Muhammadan relations that politics have been pushed into the background. The time seems far off when Hindus and Muhammadans will assemble on a common platform for the futherance of their political interests.

The Khan of Hoti-Mardan's case.

15. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 12th September 1912:—

"Public opinion throughout India on the despatch of the Government of India on the Hoti-Mardan case has yet to be gathered, but there is no room for doubt that only an infinitesimal minority will support the Government. No one can conscientiously approve of the manner in which a Judge of the Bombay High Court has been assailed not for any extra-judicial pronouncement or an obiter dictum but on findings of fact in a case in which he recorded evidence and which findings can only be upset by a higher court of appeal and not by the executive Government. Is it possible under any circumstances to believe that the same thing could happen in England? If a Judge there in the course of a judgment were to make some reflections upon some public officers on the strength of the evidence before him, would the Cabinet ever think of issuing a blue or white book criticising the Judge and traversing his findings? Public opinion would make it impossible for such a Government to remain in office. The mere fact that the Government of India have had to reject the findings of a Judge of the High Court shows that the case for the defence is not at all a good one."

Merits and demerits of the Jirga system.

16. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 12th September 1912 :—

"In his review of the Punjab Police Report for 1911-12 the Lieutenant-Governor says that in a wild and broken tract where the formation of large gangs of dacoits with the connivance or acquiescence of the bulk of the people is still possible our proceedings and procedures should not be the same as in a settled and civilized community. His Honour therefore seems to prefer for such tracts in Jhelum and Shahpur the Jirga system which has been tried successfully in the district of Mianwali. Further, His Honour considers that it is unfair to criticise the Jirga system on the ground that the number of persons convicted is small. The merits of the Jirga system as stated by His Honour may be readily admitted, but at the same time it may be pointed out that it differs greatly from the jury system. It tries to hang some one for an offence in order to secure peace to the tribal head. More often than not the Jirga condemns the wrong man while it allows the leader of the gang to escape scot free. Only lately there was a complaint against the findings of the Jirga in the Sadhu murder case in Dera Ismail Khan in which evidence against the man who was acquitted was as strong as against the other who was convicted. If some effort is made to impress upon the Jirga their sense of responsibility, we should certainly prefer it in Attock, Jhelum and Shahpur to our own legal procedures."

(b)—Police.

Police administration of the Punjab.

17. Writing under the heading "Police administration of the Punjab," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 18th September 1912, says that Sir Louis Dane has not endorsed the imaginary reasons assigned by Colonel Dennys for the sudden and extraordinary increase in crime in this Province. His Honour's own reasons, however, are not more convincing. He ascribes the evil "to a growing contempt of our judicial procedure generally and to drink in certain districts in the Central Punjab." But this, in its turn, raises the question as to what causes the former state of affairs is to be attributed. As for the Lieutenant-Governor's remarks about the murder of Ilakadar Habib Khan, His Honour's sense of Christian mercy should place him far above letting his displeasure pursue a person—although he should be a murderer—after death, depriving the latter's soul even of the immaterial satisfaction of prayer for forgiveness (of sins). Besides, the efforts of Habib Khan's neighbours to prevent his house from being burnt down prove conclusively that these people did not approve of the conduct of the incendiaries and murderers. And, if they attended the funeral of one of the offenders, they did nothing reprehensible according to the laws even of Christianity, let alone Muhammadanism. Thousands of European murderers are hanged daily, and priests pray for God's mercy to them before their execution. Does this prayer constitute contempt of law that Sir Louis Dane has condemned the conduct of the Jhelum Pir in having officiated at the above funeral? The paper then reverts to its question as to why respect for Government's laws is daily on the decrease in the minds (of the people). It believes, and has frequently voiced its belief, that Great Britain rules the hearts and not the bodies of Indians. The time will be highly inauspicious for her and fatal to this country when her rule here rests on the sword. If Sir Louis Dane is right in his diagnosis of the increase of crime in the Punjab, it must most regretfully be admitted that the sword and gun are about to become more powerful (lit effective) than kindness, justice, honesty and morality. Continuing, the Zamindar remarks that His Honour expresses surprise at the sudden increase in serious offences in the Land of the Five Rivers. Similar feelings were recently expressed by Sir John Hewett over the appearance of the same evil in the United Provinces. After remarking that this outbreak of lawlessness is ascribable to the spirit of the times, the paper observes that the increase in crime in the Central Punjab may, as the Lieutenant-Governor says, be due to the drink habit. But how much brandy and vodka did the King of Italy and the Czar of Russia respectively drink, that the former's myrmidons have butchered 5,000 friendless Arabs in Tripoli and the latter's satanic forces have committed diverse atrocities in Persia? Again, how many glasses of champagne has the President of France taken, that the Muhammadans of Morocco are being butchered in a heartless manner? How much whisky, moreover, has Sir Elward Grey drunk, that he sees all this and still keeps quiet? When such highly-placed sovereigns and statesmen—who are enlightened, know philosophy and make laws—justify international dacoity, promise-breaking, homicide and wrong-doing on such a large scale, what condemnation can the poor Punjabis, who are strangers to both civilisation and philosophy, deserve for the daily increase in dacoities, thefts and robberies in their midst? The evil is due wholly to Western civilisation The pupils (Indians) see the teacher (Europe) commit thefts and dacoities, kill innocent people, "harass the oppressed" and plunder the weak. Why should they not, then, do the same things themselves? Even if it is true that the Jhelum Pir officiated at the funeral of the murder of Habib Khan in order to spite law, he cannot deserve greater condemnation than Sir Edward Grey, who has vigorously patted on the back the murderers of thousands of Muhammadans in Morocco, Tripoli and Meshed. If Great Britain wishes that her subjects should defend the rights of man and look upon the commission of crime as a moral offence, she herself should defend these rights "in international assemblies."

Lawlessness in North-West Punjab.

* * * * * * *

"His Honour has no doubt that, if the 'proposal to supply selected villagers with the means of self-defence were adopted, public opinion, which now hesitates to express itself, would assist in leading to a rapid suppression of this serious form of crime.' We think that the Government of India have not acted wisely in refusing their consent to the proposal made by the Punjab Government, that selected villagers might be permitted to keep weapons for self-defence. The proposal in question was the best calculated to deter the outlaws and the raiders. At present they know that the people can do nothing in self-defence. They themselves are armed and can commit the raids with impunity. May we hope that the Government of India will be induced to reconsider the matter? We think it might form the subject of a question in the Imperial Legislative Council."

Defects of the Punjab Police.

* * * * * * *

"Does it occur to anybody to ask why the policeman in the Punjab is despised by the criminal and dreaded by the innocent? Go to any village or town in the Punjab and ask any ten men whether they have any respect or wholesome fear for the local policeman, who is appointed by Government to protect their life, property and honour. The reply will be worth recording in the Panjab Gazette for the information of all. The people are not such fools, as not to know their friends and protectors as distinguished from their foes and covert enemies. In some cases they might err. In others they may have prejudices. But on the whole the police have done very little to deserve their confidence and esteem. It is from this point of view that the real efficiency of the police force should be looked at. They are brilliant recording angels at present. When a crime is reported they will set about to record the details in a book or paper and spend hours over it, requiring the attendance of a dozen men. If they spend half the time they spend with pen and paper, to look about the scene of crime, the persons thereabout, and if they search for intelligent clues, links and connections and if they also act promptly upon the clues, we might expect reasonable success in their efforts. But in most cases they are slaves of the pen and get people to say and affirm statements as they are likely to be useful in a court of law. And really the agony of recording and the heaps of paper files and registers exhaust much of the energies of the men and leave little time to think of detection. In most cases they take action days after the report of crime—even in the most serious cases. Immediate action is practically unknown and the Demon of Registers and Diaries must first be appeased by voluminous scribbling before they lift a finger and lay it on a suspected criminal who, doubtless, profits by the ample start given him and plans for effectual concealment. And then men are after the criminal and lay their hands in nine cases out of ten on wrong persons and spend a lot of ingenuity on getting them to state something likely to mix them up in the affair somehow. And the wiser heads above dealing with crimes on records and papers, examine them with legal lore and a case is made out anyhow. Investigation of this sort is out of date and very rarely do we hear of personal skill being employed and prompt action taken in the detection of crime. There are doubtless able and clever men in the force, but their example is hardly held up to admiration and little incentive is afforded for work of this kind.

"His Honour is tempted to say that he must 'deprecate the ceaseless outcry against the police and the undue importance which is given to all charges against them.' Petty annoyances no one complains of. But when scores of people leave their work, spend money and travel from town to town, wait upon lawyers and public offices with complaints for days and are scolded and sent home, you cannot say their complaint was petty or frivolous. The overdoing is entirely on the other side—the side that sets a big machine roller to work with enormous force and that is reluctant to use the brake. We have already said that the three cases against policemen that ended in conviction are not a correct index of police wrongs. For every one case that is actually brought to light, there must have been a score, not necessarily very serious, but still indicating excessive use of powers that were never brought to light for fear or lack of convenience. If the Government were to appoint an independent officer to enquire into the serious complaints against the police and associate with him a couple of non-officials or honorary officers, the Government will have a really correct idea of the extent and nature of public complaints against the force. It must be remembered that the complaints are only against those who are not fit to be in the force or who do things not within the line of a bonâ fide police officer, and they are intended to strengthen the police force by helping to weed out the undesirable elements. When public complaints are regarded in this light, and not as obstructing the legitimate work of the police, Government should welcome all manner of genuine complaints and make suitable arrangements to redress them. Anything said or done to add to the discouragement and difficulties already existing of the suffering people in their efforts to point out police weaknesses will add doubly to the injury of those who suffer, and of the force that conceals many a black sheep."

Security and surveillance of criminals.

* * * * * * *

"With regard to the suggestion that desperate criminals should be watched like members of a criminal tribe, we have already pointed out the difficulty in finding out the individual criminal until he is actually guilty of some crime. We cannot support any suggestion that the police should be given wider power for the restriction of the movements of criminal individuals or tribes. The real criminals will escape and the catching of the smaller fry will have no effective influence on the progress and development of crime. So long as the efficiency and the morale of the police continue unsatisfactory, more harm than good will be done by investing them with large discretionary powers of any description."

Powers of the Police.

* * * * * * *

"There is one fact in connection with the discretionary power vested in the police to refuse investigation which deserves mention. It is well-known that the people themselves do not report what they consider to be petty crime. Indeed, so reluctant are they to have anything directly or indirectly to do with the police that they very often refrain from reporting cases of serious theft and burglary. For this reason it is necessary that the discretionary powers vested by law in the police should be very sparingly exercised."

What we pay for crime.

22. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 17th September 1912 :—

"In addition to the Rs. 51½ lakhs that is paid by the public to maintain an army of 21,000 police in the Punjab, we notice that a sum of Rs. 21 lakhs was paid during 1911-12 in the form of property stolen by thieves. Every year the value of property stolen increases, but the value of property recovered decreases. Last year only 30 per cent. of the property stolen was recovered as against 34 per cent. in the previous year. The following figures show some important details of the loss and the amount of recoveries:—

| | House breaking. | Theft. | Dacoities. | Total. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| "1910-11 | ... 9,32,639 | 5,33,797 | 47,002 | 17,72,375 |
| "1911-12 | ... 12,47,407 | 6,22,657 | 1,08,747 | 21,18,351 |

The percentage of recoveries in house breaking cases was 16 last year as compared with 21 in the previous year. In dacoities the percentage was 4 as compared with 9. It seems that, taken as a whole, there is very small chance of recovering property when once stolen and as small a chance of detecting the offenders. Such being the case, it is a question worth considering if a better class of police cannot be recruited by the payment of another fifteen lakhs annually out of public funds rather than pay that sum anyhow to the inexorable demands of thieves. At present we are breeding lawless classes by paying them a bonus of Rs. 21 lakhs a year to their demands, by starving the lower grades of the police and by recruiting an illiterate and ill-qualified army to protect our lives and property. The matter is worth considering."

(d)—Education.

The Muslim University.

23. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 12th September 1912, publishes a cartoon, designed by one Muhammad Ismail Khan, a Bombay painter, who makes the Government of India tell Muslim youths in Madras, Bengal, Bombay and the Punjab that they cannot drink at the fountain of the Muslim University. In the letter-press, he begs the Government to fulfil the expectations of its seven crore Muhammadan subjects.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 17th September 1912, publishes a note headed "When and where should the University Foundation Committee meet?" The obstacle, it says, which has been placed in the way of the establishment of the Muslim University ought to be removed as soon as practicable. The (next) meeting of the Foundation Committee, which is to accomplish that task, is being (anxiously) awaited everywhere. As regards a meeting-place the paper suggests that Lucknow would be the most suitable. The annual sittings of the Muhammadan Educational Conference and the All-India Muslim League are to be held in that city in Christmas, when all the leading public men among Musalmans (including Mr. Amir Ali and the Agha Khan) will gather together. The final decision in regard to the Muhammadan University could also be arrived at on this occasion. It is true that Christmas is yet three months off, but this delay is likely to prove beneficial for the Muslim community. Their excitement and disappointment will have subsided by that time, and the community will have had ample time to ponder over the question.

"The Advocate announces the fact that the Muslim University Foundation Committee will shortly hold a meeting in Lahore to decide whether to accept the Government proposal or not. But why was Lahore selected for the meeting in preference to Delhi, Aligarh, Lucknow and other centres? Lahore is admittedly an out-of-the-way city for members from all parts of India to meet. Punjab opinion is uncompromisingly against the University, and if an adverse decision were pronounced, it will lead probably to estrangement of feelings. I hear there is a split in the Muslim leaders and the young bloods are anxious to dominater the whole. It would be interesting to know further developments."

* * * * * *

"The Hon'ble Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan exhorts his co-religionists to fall in with the terms of Government and start a local University, utilising the money in hand in improving and developing our educational organisation and waiting for the process of gradual evolution to place us in possession of a central University. Not only has the suggestion fallen flat, but it has evoked strong opposition in Muslim circles; and we are afraid there is little chance of its acceptance by any large body of public opinion. It is contended that the proposal differs little in essence from the Government proposal and that those who advise the expenditure of 35 lakhs of rupees in a way that can bring no proportionate gain to the community—for it cannot be claimed that a localised University at Aligarh will achieve any better results than those which at present stand to the credit of the M. A.-O. College—are taking a view of the question which is anything but practical, that they are sacrificing the substance for the shadow, that a University, shorn of its most essential factors, is not worth establishing at an enormous cost, and that a poor people like the Indian Muslims can ill-afford to dissipate their small energy and a large sum of money on an object which, however laudable in itself, partakes of the nature of a luxury, when infinitely more useful schemes of national regeneration are languishing or are being neglected for want of proper financial support.

"Anxious as we are to find a way out of the difficulty, we shall to-day place before our readers another suggestion, as to which we wish to sound public opinion. We cannot at this early stage commit ourselves or the community and shall await an expression of the communal view before formulating our own opinion in the matter. Meanwhile, we may explain what the suggestion is. It is well-known that the realisation of a minimum University fund of 35 lakhs was laid down by the Government of India as a condition precedent to the grant of a charter; and it is equally well-known that the Government of India were throughout emphatically in favour of a central University being granted to the Indian Musalmans. The responsibility for the present decision rests exclusively with the Secretary of State and there is reason to believe that the decision has gone counter to the unanimously expressed wishes of the Government of India and has caused them disappointment. It, therefore, stands to reason that if the Government of India had foreseen that their proposals for the grant of the powers of affiliation to the Aligarh University would be vetoed by the Secretary of State, they would have certainly prescribed a much smaller minimum than the 35 lakhs at present prescribed. And now that things have turned out so contrary to their anticipations, it may be expected that the Government of India, if properly approached, would concede the reasonableness of materially reducing the original demand for a minimum of 35 lakhs for a Muslim University. Moreover, the assets of the M. A.-O. College and the capitalised value of its funds come up to 85 lakhs or so. If another 15 lakhs were added to it, the total would reach the round figure of a crore of rupees, even leaving out of account the yearly contribution of a lakh promised by the Government of India for the Aligarh University. This sum of a crore of rupees should be more than sufficient to meet the expenses of a local University at Aligarh; and if the Government of India agree to this, as we trust they will under the altered circumstances, a sum of 20 lakhs would be released out of the 35 collected and could be thus utilised in satisfying some other educational need of the Muhammadans. Twenty lakhs, if invested in Government pro-notes, would bring in an annual income of Rs. 75,000; and it could do undoubtedly great good to the community if it were utilised in the award of stipends and scholarships to deserving Muslim youths for study in India as well as outside India. So that the funds in hand would serve a twofold purpose, first that of raising the Aligarh College to the status of a local University at the additional cost of only 15 lakhs of rupees, and secondly, that of creating a general Muslim Scholarships Fund, of which 20 lakhs would form the nucleus and which would further grow and multiply in course of time, and which could be, on a favourable opportunity occurring, easily diverted to the establishment of a central All-India Muslim University.

"Before concluding, we must make our position clear. We are here speaking neither for the Government, nor for the Musalman community. The suggestion is a tentative one; and it remains to be seen how far it proves acceptable to both sides. If it meets with the approval of our co-religionists as a whole, it will be then time to ask Government to consider it; and we are sanguine that it will meet with better fate than has befallen our prayer for the grant of a Central All-India University. If it does not command the support of the community there will be no need to labour the point any further. Let our readers and constituents and the Muslim public answer if they approve of the suggestion."

Excise administration in the Punjab.

24. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 17th September 1912 :—

"* * * In the opinion of the Lieutenant-Governor the increase in the drink habit is due to 'the immense increase in wealth, specially of the agricultural population. Both these remarks are true, but they have to be admitted with some reservation. We cannot admit that wealth and religious and other scruples alone are entirely responsible for the increase in the liquor habit. The growth of this may be checked, if there is further reduction of licenses for the retail vend of liquor and a recognition of the system of local option. Sir Louis Dane has observed 'that without the earnest co-operation of the people there can be no lasting solution of the problem' relating to the 'decrease of the drinking habit, and that in this respect a great responsibility lies with the leaders of the communities which are most in need of reform.' But we think the responsibility of the Government is greater, and if they do not control the sale of spirits even at some sacrifice of revenue there can be no great reform, even if the best endeavours are made by the people. It is to be noted with gratitude that His Honour 'thinks it incumbent on Government to co-operate with temperance reformers by making drink more costly and more difficult to obtain.' If this is carried out in practice much will have been done towards carrying out real temperance reform. It is to be hoped that the approval of the new Excise Bill by the Government of India will improve the excise administration which is at present handicapped by inadequate penalties and the misplaced leniency of many Magistrates and Judges."

I.—Politics.

Turkish affairs.

1. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 18th September 1912, has an article headed "Turkey's difficulties," in which it says that that country is now involved in the greatest calamity it has ever known. Count Berchtold has, moreover, in order to increase her troubles, called a conference of the powers to discuss Balkan affairs. From the recent doings in Bulgaria and Crete it is clear that the Christian nations surrounding Turkey are bent upon harassing her.

The past and present condition of Islam.

2. The Sufi (Pandi Bahawa-ud-Din, Gujrat district), for September 1912, publishes some verses headed "Lamentations of the afflicted nightingale." The writer—one Pirzada Fazal Ahmad, Zar, of Hoshiarpur—bewails the lot of the present-day Muhammadans, who were once noted for their wealth and splendour and were crowned with greatness and prosperity. Those days have gone by, and those who were leaders have now lagged behind. Such are the vicissitudes of time, that those who once placed their feet on thrones now walk in the dust. At one time they ruled all the Kingdoms of the earth and enjoyed command over every land and sea; there was no land on earth where they had not a home, seeing that their tents were pitched in Ceylon and their houses existed in the lands of the Berbers. Nothing but grief now reigns supreme in the city of Delhi, where Islam was at one time crowned. There was a time when the peaks of the Himalayas were refulgent with the sun of Islam, but do they now remember the stories of Mahmud who loved the Himalayas and was loved by them? India was at one time lying barren and was the home of savages, but "we" converted India into a flower garden. "We" gave peace to the world at a time when it was unhinged (lit. when the binding of the world was scattered). The world was ignorant of "nature", but the savages of the world learnt civilization from "us." The time has, however, now come when "we" will be extinguished like a spark, and there is no one to whom "we" can describe "our" abject condition!

Future of England.

3. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 21st September 1912, publishes an article headed "Signs of a great revolution in England." There can be no denying the fact, says the paper, that England is in the throes of a gigantic internal upheaval in the shape of strikes, disputes between capital and labour, the suffragette movement, &c., which are all dragging her into the depths of ruin. The question with which Englishmen at the present moment are confronted is, what is the root cause of all these troubles? This question is exercising the minds of all well-wishers of England, who are anxious to find a solution. In a recent issue, the Rajput Herald (London) ascribed the present state of affairs in England to the breaking up of her social system. This paper is of opinion that the spread of education has broken up the natural divisions of English society, with the result that the rich and the poor are treated as equals. The Vakil goes on to controvert the argument of the Rajput Herald, and remarks that it is necessary for the preservation and permanence of society that all its members should be treated as equals and that equality is the keynote of Islam. Continuing, the paper observes that social disruption is not the only factor that is dragging England to a fall and that there are other causes also at work, viz, the decline of the political and religious life of the English people. Recently an eminent Japanese historian created a sensation in the political world by publishing a book in which he prophesied that, if the existing state of affairs in England continues, the British Empire will, in a hundred years certainly meet the doom which fell to the lot of great powers like Babylon, Rome and Carthage. Indeed, he believes that the causes which brought about the fall of the Roman Empire are also leading England to the abyss of destruction. Next the Vakil says that all well-wishers of the British Empire, and especially Muhammadans, hope that the prophecy of the Japanese writer will prove false. Nevertheless, it adds, the way in which the book in question has been reviewed by the better classes of British newspapers leaves no room for doubt that there are causes at work which are calculated to lead the British rule to the doom prophesied in the book. This being the case, the publication in question deserves special consideration by British statesmen and all British subjects, particularly Muhammadans. If the causes in question do really exist, every possible step should be taken to remove them, and British statesmen should not rest till they succeed in eradicating every evil which is eating into the vitals of the British Empire. It will certainly not do if England devotes herself wholly and solely to the improvement of the Army and Navy, to the exclusion of all other considerations, such as the removal of defects which are calculated to prove injurious to England and her Empire. Instead of mutual quarrels the Houses of Parliament should realise the responsibilities occasioned by their country and their vast empire. Along with the improvement of the Army and Navy the moral, intellectual, physical and religious requirements (of the people) deserve due consideration. In conclusion, the paper refers to the past achievements of Islam and asks Muhammadans to take a lesson from the book under reference and to take steps to remove the causes that have brought about the fall of Islam and other nations. Is it to be hoped that British statesmen will take steps to protect their community and empire from the great revolution prophesied in the book? Is it also to be hoped that the followers of Islam will learn a lesson from this and will conserve and safeguard the little power that is left to them, strengthening the foundations of their nationality and succeeding in building such a magnificent superstructure upon it as has not been heard of before?

Persia and the Powers.

4. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 25th September 1912 :—

"The visit of the Russian Foreign Minister to London, it is palpably evident, is in connection with the fate of Persia. Profiting by the weakness of British foreign policy and Sir Edward Grey's dread of the rising naval power of Germany, Russia has openly violated the Anglo-Russian Convention, thus converting an instrument for the maintenance of the integrity and independence of an ancient kingdom into a lever for securing its downfall and decay. That the excessive solicitude of the British Foreign Minister to conciliate Russia, to explain away solemn promises and to draw a veil over Muscovite atrocities has given great offence not only to the Musalmans but also to the intelligent portion of other Indian races is only natural. But, if the Liberal Government is not false to its traditions, it should compel Russia to adhere to her promise to withdraw her troops from Persia and to restore the latter's independence and integrity. If it takes no adequate steps in this direction, it will irretrievably damage its prestige in the East and leave behind a thorny legacy to trouble British statesmen to come."

Turkey and Austria.

5. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 25th September 1912 :—

"News to hand by the last English mail shows that the Austro-Hungarian Ambassadors in the various capitals had made known to the Governments of the Powers the progamme of the exchange of views proposed by Count Berchtold in the middle of August. It is understood that his decentralization proposals amounted to no more than that the Porte should extend to Macedonia the same concessions that have been granted to Albania. It is, however, satisfactory to learn that the proposals have been dropped altogether and that Turkey has been relieved of at least one of the many nightmares which threaten her very life."

The Chinese problem.

6. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 26th September 1912 :—

"We are pained to find that the European Press as a whole has not treated with justice and fairness the recent events in China which have led to the replacement of what was perhaps the oldest monarchy in the world by what might well be called the youngest Republic. The impression of the state of affairs in China that one would have from a perusal of what appears in the European newspapers is not at all favourable.

* * * * * * * *

"The anxiety of the European papers to show that things are not proceeding satisfactorily in the Chinese Empire is due, in a large measure, to their desire to show that self-government in any shape or form is not congenial to Asiatic Soil. The European Press is labouring hard to inculcate the doctrine that self-government in any shape or form is an exotic (sic.) plant which will not under the circumstances take root in eastern soil."

Indian nationality and British rule.

7. Writing under the heading "Our nation and our rule" in its issue, dated the 23rd August and 13th September 1912, the Indar (Lahore), says that the sole object of the struggle which has, of late, been going on in India—under the cloak of religion and openly in the political arena—is that the country should throw off the British yoke and secure a "national" Government. The more fearless and short-sighted persons (among the agitators) preached their object in clear words and got themselves arrested and expelled. Those, however, who lack moral courage, have been working in different ways to gain the end in view. The out-and-out hypocrites among them would attain their object by taking undue advantage of Government's policy of religious neutrality, and using religion as a blind. In some places they go about in the guise of sadhus; while, in others, they pursue their work by joining religious societies. The "Nationalists" are in addition to all these people, and constitute an extremely dangerous party. Their appearance has done a world of injury to the cause of India's social and religious advancement. Their ideal of nationality consists of a dry crust of bread or a rotten bone, over which they fight like dogs in the name of the country and the nation. He alone among them is considered a great well-wisher of "the nation" who does his utmost to defame "the rival party." A Hindu paper cannot be called a "national" organ, unless it continually spits poison at Muhammadans. Similarly, a Muslim journal which does not complain against Hindus in season and out of season is not valued by the followers of Islam. In short, the struggle in which Hindus and Muhammadans are now engaged in "the nation's" name is not of a "national" character, but is only mischief-making and selfishness. Each community speaks of itself as "the nation," and, to crown all, both desire the establishment of a "national" Government in India. Since, however, the very spirit of "nationality" is unknown in the country, it is grossly foolish in them to cry for a national Government. Continuing, the paper remarks that, if Indians must preach "nationality," they should so widen its circle as to make it include Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians, Parsis and Jews. Thus there need be no anxiety as to which community should rule the country. This broader conception of nationality makes the English one of the constituents of the Indian nation, with the result that their rule over "us" ceases to be bideshi (alien). A Muslim Hindu "nationalist" may ask why, in view of the above, the Editor is not prepared to call a Muhammadan or Hindu Government also a "national" institution. His reply is that such a government would prove highly injurious for the country and cannot, therefore, be called a "national" concern. A national Government ought to protect the weak against the strong and to hold the scales even between the two. Past events, however, bear testimony to the fact that neither Hindus nor Muhammadans did so when they were rulers of this country Nay, even now, when they are under a mighty power, they are ever ready to fight with each other. Indeed, it is an open secret that, if Hindus were to secure the sceptre, they would leave nothing undone to exterminate Musalmans; and Islamic rule would prove no blessing for the followers of the Hinduism. In conclusion, the Editor says that, according to his ideal of nationality, it is "our" own nation that rules India.—To be continued.

The Delhi State Entry.

8. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 21st September 1912:—

"We are afraid that the papers that have criticised the Viceroy's State entry on the 23rd December, particularly the presence of the Punjab Chiefs, have taken a prejudiced view of the affair. They have all assumed that the Punjab Chiefs will have to spend lavishly to be present at Delhi to receive His Excellency the Viceroy on the occasion. Secondly, they have presumed that the Chiefs attend more or less by compulsion, and, left to themselves, they are absolutely indifferent whether or not they take part in the ceremonial. Thirdly, they seem to contend that the Viceroy need make no fuss about his entry to Delhi, which affords only temporary accommodation. Fourthly, it seems that Delhi no longer forms part of the Punjab and therefore its Chiefs should not take part in the ceremonial when other Chiefs are excluded. Some of the Calcutta papers take every possible opportunity to condemn and discredit the new Government at Delhi. But the rest of the papers that have supported the change of Capital ought to take a fair view of the new arrangements. Lord Hardinge could not possibly have wished for any personal glorification in a ceremonial visit attended by Chiefs and welcomed by noblemen and others into the new Capital. The ceremonious State entry is a concession to the Indian idea of State visits, and there is not a single occasion in the past history of India when Indian Kings built a new capital and entered it in a covered carriage hardly noticed by any. Even now every one among Indians recognises the necessity of a ceremony in entering a new house built for an individual. The change of capital of the British Indian Empire from Calcutta to Delhi is not an insignificant event. It does not happen in every reign or even once a century. We may have several Royal Darbars before a change of capital is found necessary. It is the spontaneous will of the popular leaders that the Viceroy's State entry should be of a type, that would impress Indian mind and satisfy Indian sentiment. There is meaning in the Punjab Chiefs welcoming and receiving the Viceroy into a new capital in the city with which they were connected until very lately. If we look over the history of Delhi, we meet with thrilling instances of the Chiefs of the Punjab and their ancestors taking a very active political part in the making of Delhi, the Imperial Metropolis. The other Rajas had connection at a more remote period, but the Punjab Chiefs have a special claim in the making of Delhi. On an occasion when Delhi once again becomes the Imperial Capital under British auspices, it is a matter of intense pride to those who are privileged to welcome and receive the representative of the King Emperor into the historic city. None who have any historic sentiment and pride of pedigree can ignore an event of this importance. Whether the new Government will be pitched on temporary sites or in permanent buildings is a matter of mere detail. That the Imperial headquarters are established in Delhi is the essential fact, and if this had fallen to the lot of an Indian King or even an Indian President of a Republic every Indian newspaper would have justified the expenditure of money in a grand celebration of the event. Why should the Viceroy's State entry be less impressive, because the Viceroy is not an Indian? As for expenditure, it is certainly not a recurring event and if any of the critics took care to examine the economy of a Native Chief, he would find that the item on Delhi visit is by no means the most open to condemnation as extravagant or unproductive. We have no need to support extravagance. But it is manifestly unfair to condemn everything connected with new Delhi."

Suppression of a Memorial.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 21st September 1912 :—

"The readers of the Panjabee will remember the case of an attempted memorial to the Viceroy and Governor-General by 100 inhabitants of Kohat at the end of April last when His Excellency visited the place. A petition was written up on behalf of the general public of Kohat asking that the North-West Frontier Province should again be amalgamated with the Punjab for reasons stated. This was signed by 100 representatives of Hindu and Muhammadan communities and was about to be submitted through the proper channel two days before the Viceroy's visit. The Deputy Commissioner came to hear of it and sent for the men who went to his Bungalow with the memorial. After ascertaining what it was about and what were the reasons for annulling the Punjab Partition, he remarked it was a complaint against the Chief Commissioner. To this the memorialists replied that it was not a complaint against any particular person and they desired that the Deputy Commissioner should forward the same and put it before the Viceroy. A correspondent of the Panjabee who furnished the account published in the issue of May 9th said that the Deputy Commissioner observed that time was not opportune for it and that they should withdraw the memorial. One of the deputation tore the memorial in the presence of the Deputy Commissioner. In the Imperial Council at Simla, to a question put by the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha on this subject, the Hon'ble Sir A. H. McMahon said 'It is not known what truth there is in the allegations, but if the Deputy Commissioner of Kohat took the steps ascribed to him, he acted within his powers.' Considering that the memorialists wanted the Deputy Commissioner to put the grievances of the people before the Viceroy, we fail to see why the local officer prevailed upon the men to desist from their proceedings, observing that the time was not opportune, &c. The people naturally conclude to this day that they have no right of petition to the Viceroy and the local authority is the final arbiter of their destinies. It is necessary to create a more hopeful impression in the people."

Recruitment to the Indian Army.

10. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 24th September 1912 :—

"Question No. 66 by the Hon'ble Raja Sir Muhammad Ali Muhammad as regards the alleged stoppage of recruitment to the Indian Army in Oudh elicited a significant reply from the Commander-in-Chief. His Excellency stated that recruitment had not been discontinued, but that Brahmans, Rajputs and Hindustani Mussalmans were taken. The answer is suggestive and explicit. No comment is necessary."

Hindus as Nation Builders.

11. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 20th September 1912:—

"(A) contemporary (in) controverting the charge laid against the Hindus that they are 'unwarlike' says:—'There is abundant evidence to show—from Chandragupta's encounter with the Greeks to the defence of Saragarhi—that Hindus have never been and are not still 'unwarlike.' So it is the Hindu who died at Saragarhi and won immortal fame! How men suppress truth and pervert facts! They cannot help feeling the Sikhs displayed valour at Saragarhi which has been equalled only by Leonidas and his 300 Spartans in the Pass of Thermopylæ, but they feel so shy of the Sikh name that they would not mention it, even where it cannot be left unmentioned without perverting or suppressing truth. We crave leave to point out that the heroes of Saragarhi distinguished themselves, not because they were Hindus, but because they were Sikhs. It was their Sikh faith which led them to sacrifice their lives for the Sovereign to whom they owed allegiance.

"In the same article our contemporary writes further on:—'Only twice in modern history attempts at nation-making were made by the Hindu. One by Sevaji. Within a few years almost all India lay at the feet of United Maharashtra. The magician died, and the golden edifice crumbled to pieces. The next attempt was made by Ranjit Singh. Within a single generation the Khalsa became a terror to the Afghans in the north and the British in the east. The Magician died and the Khalsa vanished into thin air.' All these statements are perversion of historical truth. In the time of Sevaji the Marhattas had only learnt to begin their career of conquest. It was long after Sevaji that they reached their zenith of power. Again the Marhattas were a race of free-booters. They plundered all parts of the country that they visited. They never appear to have conceived any idea of forming a Hindu nationality. They fought for their own aggrandisement and outside Maharashtra they showed no deference to the Hindus. Similarly absurd is the claim put forward on behalf of Maharaja Ranjit Singh as a builder of Hindu nationality. All that can be said of Maharaja Ranjit Singh is that he was a brave, generaous and sagacious ruler and that by the force of his strong personality he was successful in keeping together the various discordant elements of the Punjab population. The bravery of the Sikhs was due to him as to the man in the Moon. He was a talented commander and organizer. He was able to utilize Sikh bravery. Bravery was and is innate in the Sikhs. It existed in the Maharaja's time. It exists now. Bravery is the outcome of self-sacrifice. A true Sikh must be sacrificing and consequently brave. So far as we know the ambition of fusing the Hindus and Sikhs into one nationality never swayed Maharaja Ranjit Singh's mind. He was a popular ruler and all his life his one aim was to maintain his power and keep his subjects of all forms and shades of opinion happy and contented.

"The real fact, we are glad to observe, has irresistibly struck to our contemporary. He is perfectly right when he says at the end of the article afore-mentioned that 'Under British rule the Hindus are fast assimilating ideas of nationality as it is understood in the West. Consciously or unconsciously, through good or through evil, the English are helping them into a nation. They cannot do otherwise. It is their God-appointed task.' This acknowledgment of the beneficient influence of the Western civilization on the course of events in this country from a quarter where a short while ago every thing Western was cried down is extremely gratifying to us. It betokens the growth of healthy ideas in minds which persisted in looking only to their benighted past and still more benighted literature for inspiration and guidance."

12. The Observer (Lahore), of the 21st September 1912, has the folowing:—

Muslim Politics.

"Muslim University and Pan-Islamism:—The Hindu politician seems deliberately to disregard the Muslim element in Indian population in all his calculations. The Musalman, on this account and for reasons over which he has no control, looks upon India as an abode of exile and a land of regret, no less than does an Anglo-Indian, and is never tired of singing praises of the land of oases in Arabia and of the shores of Ruknabad in Persia where '..... still the wine its ruby yields; where still a garden by the water blows.'

"This touch of patriotism in the Indian Musalman is mistaken for his innate love of political unity and is given the awe-inspiring name of Pan-Islamism. The Indian Musalman is charged of Pan-Islamism, not only when he contributes to the Hedjaz railway or raises funds for the wounded and the sick in Tripoli, but also when he wants to advance the cause of Muslim education by establishing a University of his own at Aligarh. Says the redoutable Punjabee: 'Between 1898 and 1912 even the loyal Muslims in India have changed a little..... In 1898 there was no Pan-Islamic movement in India and Mr. Amir Ali had not established the patent text 'Musalman first, Indian afterwards.' When an Arab was wounded in Tripoli the Dacca Muslim's body did not bleed. The cry of 'down with Italy' did not produce distant reverberation in the plains of Himalayas. All these have doubtless conjured up visions of political possibilities of Islam ..... The Muhammadans thank their London leader, Amir Ali, for all this ..... It is apparent that the Indian Muhammadans must renounce Pan-Islamism before they can get all they want from the Indian Government.' Yes, as long as the instinct of self-preservation is alive in the Indian Musalman, he must be Musalman first and an Indian afterwards. He must obey the law of Nature. As long as he is swayed by humaneness, his heart must bleed for his brethren in Tripoli as much now as it did for them during the Crimean and Bulgarian wars of 1855 and 1877 respectively. But this distant reverberation in the plains of the Himalayas was not produced when on several occasions the British force invaded and reduced Muslim Afghanistan. Nor does the Indian Musalman concern himself with the banishment of Mulla Hafid of Morocco to-day. There is no caste system in Islam and one Muslim country is as good as the other. Why this preferential claim of Turkey then to the affections of the Indian Musalmans? Because the Sultan of Turkey is not merely a co-religionist; but he is also the custodian of Mecca, the secred city of Islam, and of the Holy Shrine at Medina, and he is truly believed to be the Caliph of Islam and the Vicar of the Prophet. Did not under similar circumstances in ages gone by the heart of Robert of Normandy bleed for his co-religionists fighting for the possession of the Holy Sepulchre in Palestine, and did not a wave of religious fervour and crusading enthusiasm pass through the whole of Christendom when Saladin resisted the encroachments of the Christians in the Holy Land? Call it Pan-Islamism if you will, but the fact remains that a Musalman is a Musalman and there is no power on earth to detach him from the Caliphate. But it is certainly wrong to say that a Musalman's love of Turkey is based on the dreams of political possibilities of Islam, and it is still more wrong to suggest that there is any connection between the much abused Pan-Islamism and the idea of establishing a Muslim University in India. If it were so, deputations should have been sent to Turkey, Afghanistan, Persia, Egypt and Morocco, and ten times 35 lakhs would have been collected in no time. And surely it would have been nothing wonderful, considering the generosity shown by the Indian Musalman on all occasions towards his foreign brethern. But the Muslim University is to be meant for the Indian Musalman first and for any other Muslim afterwards, and so its expenses should be met chiefly by the Indians. Besides, its very curriculum cannot satisfy the needs of the foreign Musalmans. Nor would English have served as a medium of instruction if the University were based on Pan-Islamic principles. In that case Arabic must have taken the place of English, as Arabic is meant to be the common language for all Muslims. And yet the nightmare of Pan-Islamism sits heavy on the breasts of those who would not see even if they can see. It is really a shameful thing to insinuate motives to the Muslim University which its promoters never dream of.

"Hindu Muhammadan entente cordial:—And yet the London branch of the Muslim League in its guilelessness and simplicity believes in a rapprochement. The Hindus are willing to make the amende honorable by desisting from preaching their unreasonable crusade against Urdu, the esperanto of India, if the Musalmans give up the slaughter of kine. The terms of peace seem to have been dictated by the Hindus and speak for themselves. The Musalman is given to understand that the agitation against Urdu is made, not because it is a foreign language to the Hindu and is consequently hard to be made use of by him, but because he wants to harass the Musalman into giving up his love for the slaughter of kine.

"Slaughter of kine an economic necessity:—But can the Musalman really afford to annoy his Hindu neighbour by the slaughter of kine? The Hindu out-numbers him in India; he has ousted out the Musalman from the political arena, and he is the chief banker in this country and the only expert in business. How can the Musalman pick up a quarrel with such a formidable lot? What good would it serve him to hold the red rag of kine slaughter before the bull of Hindu fanaticism? But can the Musalman—poor rustic Musalman—do away with beef? He lives on the cheapest fare and yet he cannot do without flesh of some kind or other. If he can't afford to buy meat, he contents himself with beef. All the resolutions of the Muslim Leagues and pro-Hindu youngsters cannot change the meat-eating Musalman poor into a vegetarian. Cows are sacrificed, not because the Musalman takes delight in touching the susceptibilities of his Hindu fellow-citizen but because it is an economic necessity. And yet they take offence at it.

"Educated Hindu and religious superstition:—One sometimes wonders that, in spite of the most liberal education that a Hindu receives, he remains, in matters touching his religious superstition, what his forefathers were a thousand years ago. He seems to shut his eyes to the rational view of such things, and prefers following the herd to striking out a new path. This tendency is the more noticeable at present. That they are keen on abolishing the slaughter of kine shows how far they have drifted, with all their up-to-date education, from the principles of things. A cow was venerated and almost worshipped by the early Aryan because of its usefulness in supplying him with almost all his needs.

It does not surely serve that purpose to the same extent now. Why then this unnecessary veneration for the cow? There are Hindus who worship the peepal tree and snakes and Ganga mai; and yet thousands of peepal trees are felled down everywhere, even by Hindu contractors and others, and countless snakes are killed every year and the sacred waters of the Ganges are not only polluted by the splash of the non-Hindu oar, but the Ganges has also been spanned by bridges at so many places. But the educated Hindu takes a rational view of it all and he thinks he has outgrown tree or river worship age. And yet he cannot reconcile himself to the idea of doing away with animal worship or cow worship for that matter. Or else he catches at a straw and makes the cow question a bone of contention with the Musalman.

"Beef eating Europeans:—But although the Hindu is an adept in figures he does not count the beef eating European in his calculations. Supposing the Musalmans were forced to give up beef-eating, what about the European who can't live without beef and the Tommy Atkins, whose staple food is nothing so much as beef? And is the Hindu willing to make a similar sacrifice for his neighbour, the Musalman and the European? Will he close all those dens of idolatory which are so repugnant to the Musalman and the Christian or will he discard the system of chhoot (defilement by touch) which is so offensive to the non-Hindu? If the Hindu calls the latter a system enjoined by religion, the Musalman can say the same thing about the sacrifice of cows on the second 'Id day, and with much greater reason. It is an age of mutual toleration and if the Hindus cannot tolerate the Muslim religious ceremonials, they should not expect the Musalmans to be willing to make sacrifices for them. Heads-I-win-and-tails-you-lose sort of a policy would not do."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Raids in the North-West Frontier.

13. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 24th September 1912 :—

"To-day we publish the text of the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha's question on the frontier raids together with Sir Henry McMahon's reply showing in a tabular form the particulars asked for by him. It will be seen that in the first year after the formation of the new province, that is, in 1901-02, the number of raids committed was only 16. But there were 17 murders accompanied by 3 cases of kidnapping. The amount of property looted was Rs. 18,473 out of which a sum of Rs. 8,827 was recovered. As months and years rolled on and as the raiders gained in experience and in their knowledge of the temper and tone of the department with which they were concerned, they became bolder and bolder and learnt how to commit their depredations with impunity. The statement furnished by Sir Henry McMahon is the barometer of the peace in our own borders since the creation of the new province. A glance at this statement is enough to condemn that part of the new policy which seems to have been interpreted by the criminal tribes as an invitation to invade His Majesty's territory for plundering His Majesty's peaceful subjects. While thankfully acknowledging the improvement made in 1910-11 we venture to think that 300 raids, 185 murders, 149 cases of kidnapping, necessitating more or less heavy ransoms in 48 cases, and accompanied by a loss of property to the tune of Rs. 5·27 lakhs disclose a state of affairs which should be traced more to the system than to the men who are merely tied to it. The outstanding feature of the statement published is that in spite of the earnest, vigilant and vigorous efforts put forth both by the Government of India and by Sir George Roos-Keppel the number of raids committed and the amount of property looted in 1910-11 were nearly 3 times those of 1901-02. Lord Hardinge's Government has done much to improve the lot of the defenceless Hindus in the Frontier, but more remains to be done yet as the Kulachi case amply proves.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sinha asked a series of questions in the Imperial Legislative Council on the subject of dacoities in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province. These questions as well as the lengthy reply vouchsafed by Sir Henry McMahon on behalf of the Government were published in full in our last issue. This is a question of vital interest to Hindus in the two provinces and ought to be studied with sufficient care. Reserving a fuller notice for another occasion we call attention to one point in Sir Henry McMahon's reply. 'Taking the return for the whole of the Punjab,' says Sir Henry, 'Hindus were sufferers in 53 cases and Muhammadans and others in 16 cases. No significance can be attached to the fact that the majority of the victims were Hindus. It is well-known that the Hindus are usually the richest men in a village and are therefore a more tempting prey to robbers.' A notice of the inadequacy both of protection and of the right of representation accorded to the 'richest men'—the men who contribute handsomely to the state coffers—may be put off. But the statement of Sir Henry McMahon that 'no significance can be attached to the fact that the majority of the victims were Hindus' is one to which the Hindus whom the shoe pinches should demur. Quite recently a raid was committed in Kulachi, Dera Ismail Khan, and the sufferer, a Hindu Sahukar, was robbed of property worth Rs. 30,000. Did the raiders stop there? No, they went further, seized the books and documents and made a bon-fire of them. Does this show that the raiders had in view no more than robbery? Will the Government of India be pleased to inquire into the causes underlying the wilful incendiarism by the Islamic raiders, who are said to be attracted by the crœsus-like wealth of the Hindus? Our Dera Ismail Khan correspondent, whose letter is published in another column, suggests the possible collusion of the local enemies of the Hindu Sahukar with the raiders and refers to the hindrance of the well armed Pathans of Kulachi who could have driven the raiders had they so chosen. We invite the attention of the Government of India to these fresh acts and trust suitable inquiries will be instituted."

The Pathan Invasion.

14. The following is an extract from the Shahpur correspondent of the Panjabee (Lahore), published in its issue of the 26th September 1912 :—

"Now the winter has commenced. There would be a rush of the Pathans everywhere. They would cross the borders of the Frontier and scatter themselves in large numbers in every nook and corner of the Punjab. This is a source of anxiety to the people as Government has as yet taken no action to give us the means of protection. It would be fresh in the memory of the readers of the Panjabee, that they, in the last year committed no less than a hundred dacoities and that in almost all cases the Hindus were the victims. Many Hindus were deprived of their hard-earned money and not a few were cruelly put to death by the dacoits in the struggle that ensued. Will the authorities see that this year they do not menace the Hindus as in the last year, and will they devise preventive measures speedily ?"

IV.—Kine-killing.

Government and cow-protection.

15. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 19th September 1912, has a note headed "Government and cow-protection." Englishmen, says the paper, are not such simple-minded fools as to discard useful things in the way "our Muhammadan brethren do." Probably Government was at first ignorant of the usefulness of the cow, but recent circumstances have convinced the authorities of its utility, and the necessity for its protection. Now, therefore, it has taken steps to open Dairy Farms in various parts of the country and to set apart lands specially for the purpose. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied that beef is still used by the (British) Army, although this is only permitted unwillingly, because beef is cheap. A British General, writing to an Anglo-Indian paper, recently observed that, although beef is injurious to health, it is still given to the British Army simply because it is cheap. After remarking that the matter is engaging the anxious consideration of Government, the paper says that if, under these circumstances, Hindus give up the use of the flesh of sheep and goats altogether in order to cheapen it, not only will mutton become cheaper but the consumption of beef by the army will be greatly reduced. The paper, therefore, concludes by urging Hindus to abjure the use of flesh altogether, with a view to cheapen mutton, and thereby prevent the use of beef; and it adds that they should bear in mind that Government is ready to co-operate with them in the matter.

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Shuddhi movement.

16. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 26th September 1912 :—

"Much has been said and written about the tyranny of caste in India. It has been condemned by all, even by the sanctimonious heads of religious institutions. In spite of it no one contends that this tyranny has been abolished. But can it be said that in the twentieth century under British Raj any class of persons is by the tyranny of caste prevented from bathing or washing or wearing clean clothes? Yet that is exactly what Pandit Rambhaj Datt Chaudhry suggests in his account of the progress of Shuddhi published in another column. He admonished the purified Dumnas in one place to be clean and to wear dhotis, but was told in reply that he should admonish them after seeing them in their own houses. Accordingly he went round and satisfied himself that their houses were exceptionally clean and well kept. He goes on to say :

"At the second house its owner brought out a clean shirt and dhoti and said 'Sir, we have these things, but we are not allowed to put them on except in secret. The Chaudhris of our village object to our looking as clean as themselves. If we wear a dhoti reaching below our knees and look like them they would beat us to death.'

"Pandit Rambhaj Datt concludes from this that the wicked Sanatanists have forcibly prevented the untouchable classes from being clean and tidy. This accusation is no more true than the one commonly brought against the Government that by living well individuals hold out an open invitation to the income-tax officials. Many years ago Mr. Ford, Commissioner of Multan, wrote that in Native States a white dress was a sign hung out by which the corrupt 'native' official at once resolved to plunder its owner. Pandit Rambhaj Datt may or may not mean as much in the case of his own new disciples, but he should surely distinguish caste tyranny from communal discipline, where individuals grow into snobs and despise their own parentage. The treatment by Europeans of Indian snobs wedded to the cuff and color cult is an instance in point."

A Vedic Salvation Army.

17. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 12th (received on the 20th) September 1912, publishes an article headed "Wanted a Vedic Salvation Army" from the pen of the Editor, Khushal Chand, Khursand. The writer says that revolting and heart-rending scenes are witnessed at the Hindu places of pilgrimage, and that half the Hindus inhabiting Oudh are semi-Muhammadan. The Hindus of the United Provinces are going over into the Islamic and Christian folds, and the same is the case with their co-religionists in the Punjab. Bengal has been dazzled with the civilisation of the West and the Namsudras there are in extreme trouble. As regards Madras, Christianity has made greater progress in it than in any other part of India, and it is feared that the whole of the Benighted Presidency will one day be converted to that faith. The Editor then states how Aryas are being persecuted by their opponents, and suggests the establishment of a Vedic Salvation Army to remedy the above evils and to add to the strength of the Arya Samaj. The Samaj can supply a competent General (the reference is to Lala Hans Raj) and there is a want only of devoted and faithful soldiers. This want should be supplied by men, who can spurn the world and devote their lives to the service of the Arya race. In conclusion, the Editor urges "Arya heroes" to step into the field and conquer the spiritual world.

The jhatka-halal question.

18. The Munir (Jhang), of the 8th (received on the 19th) September 1912, publishes an article headed "The halal-jhatka case in Court." The writing purports to be the report of a case between Jhatka Rao and Halal Khan. The parties plead the cause of jhatka and halal meat respectively, the advantage resting with the latter. Halal Khan also states that the agitation is the work of the fiery followers of Dayanand and that their object is to prevent Sikhs and Muslims, both of whom are unitarians, from becoming one. Further, he makes the declaration that, if Hindus take to the use of jhatka flesh, Muhammadans will cease buying anything from them. Some Hindu shopkeepers are also made to pray the judge, for this very reason, not to decide the case in favour of Jhatka Rao.

In its issue, dated the 16th September 1912, the paper makes the presiding judge send up the case to the Viceroy for disposal. This leads to the jhatka-halal question being threshed out in the Supreme Legislative Council. The Viceroy decides that all Indians, excepting Sikhs and some Aryas, are opposed to the use of jhatka meat; that it is great mistake to place jhatka and halal on the same footing; that the comparison lies between jhatka flesh and beef; and that Government cannot therefore give general permission for the sale of the former meat. His Excellency also refuses to credit the statement that halal flesh is as much forbidden food to Sikhs and some Hindus as jhatka meat is to the followers of Islam. A Muhammadan, he argues, eating jhatka flesh ceases to be so and is excommunicated by his co-religionists; but halal-eating Sikhs and Hindus, who number lakhs and crores, have never been outcasted.

Writing to the Sufi (Pandi Baha-ud-Din, district Gujrat), for the month of September 1912, one Nur-ud-Din, Hide Merchant, Gujranwala, says that Muhammadans have no right either to prevent Hindus from taking jhatka meat, to compel them to use halal flesh, or to boycott the eatables prepared by Hindus, provided these are pure and lawful according to the laws of Islam. As jhatka is a prohibited article of food for Muhammadans, the latter should abstain from using ghi and other articles of food prepared and sold by those who take jhatka flesh, because there can be no denying the fact that pure ghi is scarce in the bazar, and that adulterated ghi manufactured by these persons is not likely to be free from the fat of decapitated animals. In conclusion, the writer says that he has enumerated the above mentioned articles and has suggested that their use should be discarded, not out of any spirit of boycott, but out of respect for the Quran, according to which their use is prohibited.

Aurangzeb.

19. The Hindustan (Labore), of the 20th September 1912, publishes an article headed "A view of the facts connected with the life of Aurangzeb." While, says the paper, Muslim historians have lauded him to the skies, his Christian biographers have characterised him as deceitful and treacherous and bereft of all feelings of humanity. He also lacked gratitude, as is evident from the fact, that he made an attempt to arrest the Rani and the two sons of Raja Jaswant Singh of Jodhpur, who had sacrified his life for him. The chief thing, however, for which Aurangzeb gained notoriety is his oppression and persecution of Hindus, from whom he levied Jazya, which had been abolished by Akbar; and his treatment of Sivaji shows that he was both malevolent and crafty. He was not, however, devoid of good qualities seeing that he transacted all the business of the State himself and that all State officials, from the lowest to the highest, were appointed under his personal orders.

Commenting on the above the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 21st September 1912, says that the Hindustan has grossly offended the feelings of Indian Muhammadans by attaching impious and unjustifiable epithets to Aurangzeb, who was a religious-minded, sincere and good-hearted Muslim ruler. The Hindustan calls him ungrateful, evil-minded, cunning and timid, and declares that his conscience was guilty and his life impure. This paper, too, regards it as an insult, to call a Hindu a "non-Muslim" and is offended at Muhammadans' claim to political importance. The Punjab Government should therefore take notice of these writings of the Hindustan, for they are not only bound to hurt the feelings of Musalmans, but they will also surely lead to breaches of the public peace.

The All-Punjab Sikh Association.

20. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 20th September 1912:—

"We have tried in previous issues to impress on our readers the desirability of starting a special organization for the Sikhs with a purely political programme, and are glad to note that the idea has been well received throughout the country and that there is a fairly large number of our co-religionists who are ready to offer their services for the cause. They agree with us in the belief that the time has come for undertaking the work of educating the community in Politics. The work has been too long neglected and the result is that Sikhs have no place in Indian Politics. They shed their best blood for the defence of the Empire all over the world. There is not lip loyalty. It has been tested times out of number. There is no well-informed British statesman who does not know and does not believe that Sikh loyalty is unimpeachable and that there will be no time when Great Britain cannot count upon the willing co-operation of the Sikhs in maintaining the supremacy of the British flag. This circumstance ought to dis-abuse the minds of waverers in the national cause. They ought to have the satisfaction that the Government cannot be opposed to any movement that may aim at the political amelioration and regeneration of the Sikhs. If local officials anywhere may take it into their heads to discourage the attempts of the Sikhs in this respect, we feel sure they will soon see their mistake and instead of thwarting any scheme for the political advancement of our community they will, there are reasons to believe, accord their sympathy to it. Our brothers should, therefore, take time by the fore-lock and set about the work in right earnest. Let them meet in some place say, at Gujranwala, during the next Dussehra holidays and take preliminary steps for giving a practical shape to the movement. The hands of our brothers in Gujranwala are already full no doubt. But this is the very reason why they should take the lead in this national work. * * * * Let a limited number of well-educated men, with a stake in the country, i.e., to say, men of responsibility, education and standing, be invited. A constitution can then be drafted to work the organization on the lines of the Muslim League. Men whose article of belief is that a Jathadar ought to have dictatorial powers and that to question his judgment is a treasonable act go against the fundamental principles of organization on which the Tenth Guru founded the Panth. Such men had better keep themselves aloof from the organization we propose."

VI.—Legislation.

The Imperial Legislative Council.

21. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 21st September 1912:—

* * * * * * * *

"The proceedings of this meeting must impress the Punjab Hindus of their own disabilities and helplessness. The Regulation has provided for three representatives from the Punjab. But not one of them has had the fairness or sense of duty to call attention to any of the several admitted grievances of the Hindus. Out of regard for the Sikhs whom the Government, we mean the Punjab Government, classifies for its own purposes among the Hindus, His Excellency the Governor-General was pleased to nominate the Kunwar Sahib of Patiala as an additional member. Neither any of the three legitimate representatives provided for in the Regulation nor the additional fourth member, who is the proverbial fifth wheel of the coach, has ever been known to have done aught by way of reminding the Government that the population of the province comprises others besides those who belong to the Islamic fraternity. But for the interest evinced by the Hon'ble Mr. S. Sinha in this province, Punjab Hindus would have been practically non-existent for the purposes of the Imperial Legislative Council. However ingeniously the Punjab Government may try to explain the practical disenfranchisement of the Hindus, who, we repeat, represent the bulk of the wealth, intelligence and enterprise of the province, it cannot disguise the ugly feature of the existing Regulations which by providing for a standing majority of the Moslem element in the local Legislative Council deprives both Hindus and Sikhs of all chance of representation in the Imperial Legislative Council. While once again drawing the attention of the Local Government to this grave defect in its own Regulations, we entertain the hope that the Supreme Government will be pleased to consider favourably the suggestion that has already been submitted for providing in the Regulations for the election by the local Council of two members to the Supreme Council, one of whom being intended to represent the large and important minority of Hindus, who, as admitted by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon, are the richest people in the province and are nevertheless wholly disenfranchised."

The Vaccination Law.

* * * * * * * *

"Since small pox is absolutely preventible by means of vaccination and revaccination, it is entirely the fault of the individual if he gets an attack. Moreover he is morally responsible for causing spread of disease and loss of life that occurs thereby.

"Hence our work lies more in expounding the value of vaccination and educating public opinion to appreciate it. Let primary education come first and then the conscience clause; as it is then that the people will be able to understand the merits and demerits of vaccination and can adopt compensatory sanitary improvements, if they chose to be without vaccination."

(a)—Judicial.

Pleaders' Munshis.

23. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 26th September 1912 :—

"Strange are the methods adopted by some lawyers for securing cases. Once upon a time there occurred a murder in a certain town of the province. A bumptious pleader was anxious to be engaged in the case to represent the deceased's relations who were rich. Not succeeding himself he entrusted the task to his Munshi who said 'Amen.' Now, taking with him a sum of Rs. 500 and putting on the clack (cloak ?) of a mourner he set out on his errand. On entering the lane where the family of the deceased was residing, be began to weep and cry aloud, as if his own son in the bloom of life had died, as if he was the person whom the murder most concerned and who felt the loss the heaviest. On reaching the house he took off his turban, tore his garment, beat his breast and forehead to give expression to his grief for the unfortunate murdered man. The family not recognising him enquired who he was and whence he came. He replied that he was the dearest friend of the deceased, his other heart and the half-self and that the news of his death had shocked him. At last when all was calm and quiet he made enquiries whether anything had been done to see the murderer punished. They replied 'Yes, we have engaged ..... Barrister to watch the case.' The Munshi with a long sigh burst forth 'Oh, then all is lost or seems as lost. If you are unable to pay for a good lawyer here is Rs. 500 (and forthwith he heaped the money before them) which I would quite willingly sacrifice for the sake of one whom I so dearly loved. Go and engage so and so, pleader (naming, of course, his own master).' The head of the family refused with thanks to accept the offer of money, but gladly agreed to engage the pleader recommended and taking with him about a thousand rupees he accompanied the Munshi wherever he led him. On reaching the destination the Munshi quietly told his pleader 'Here you are, Sir.'"

Police administration of the Punjab.

24. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 19th September 1912, publishes an article headed "The administration of the Police Department, Punjab—III." In continuation of its previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraph 17 of Selections No. 38), the paper observes that, in his report on the police administration of the Punjab for the year 1911, Colonel Dennys suggests, among other things, that the police should be vested with wider discretion with regard to investigating or not investigating all cognisable cases brought to their notice. Sir Louis Dane, however, considers the proposal fraught with great difficulty; cases not investigated by the police will never be reported and, as a consequence, the true state of crime will never be brought out. But the police are already vested, under section 157 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, with discretionary powers in such cases to a limited extent. If the Inspector-General of Police and his subordinates had regarded the discharge of their legitimate duties as a moral responsibility, laid on them by noble British traditions, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's review of police administration would not have been so bitter and harsh this year. Colonel Dennys further says that Magistrates demand such an impossibly high standard of evidence from the police, that it is extremely difficult to get a conviction. This, says the Editor, is one of the main reasons for the decrease in the average of convictions. It is, moreover, not explained why Magistrates should without any reason throw obstacles in the way of the police. The first principle of British law is that the accused should receive the benefit of doubt and, if Magistrates act up to this principle, there is no reason why they should be blamed for it. It would be far better if the police showed more energy and zeal in producing evidence in support of cases sent up by them. As regards His Honour's remarks on the success of the jirga system in Dera Ghazi Khan and its extension to Shahpur and Mianwali, is it right, asks the Editor, to infer from the higher percentage of convictions in jirga districts, that Divisional and District Judges and District Magistrates know less of legal principles than the comparatively uneducated members of the jirga? If this be so, there is no reason why every court in the country should not be replaced by jirga in order to secure 70, 80, 90 or even a hundred per cent. convictions. It is surprising, says the Editor, that Sir L. Dane should like the illegal methods of jirgas, and should even compare them with the trial by jury in England and publish a long panegyric on them. There will be no harm indeed if the jirga system is extended to the Punjab at some future time, when the Punjab is as free, civilised and enlightened as England is at the present moment. At present it would be a mistake. Sir L. Dane has not expressed any opinion on the question of increasing the pay of police constables. The Editor fully endorses Colonel Dennys' remarks in this connection, and considers that the higher salary of Sub-Inspectors and superior officers in no way remedies the evils, which are a necessary corollary of the semi-starved condition of ill-paid constables. It is, therefore, desirable that Government should spend a further sum of a few lakhs in improving the pay of the subordinate police, and should move the Government of India to grant an increase of at least 20 per cent. to the pay of the constables.

Dacoities and raids in the Punjab.

25. The following is from the Punjabee (Lahore), of the 26th September 1912:—

"While the development of serious crime in the Punjab has attracted the serious notice of the Local Government, the increase of dacoities and raids has attracted attention even beyond the Province. The alarming reports of depredations that were published in the papers have created the impression that life and property are not safe in certain parts of the Punjab. The police protection has been very defective and the disarmed people are utterly helpless to offer any kind of resistance to the plunderers. They were robbed and attacked mercilessly, their account books in several cases were burnt and a state of panic was created in the whole neighbourhood. Even now the people are not better protected, though increased efforts are made to arrest dacoit gangs. The Hon'ble Mr. Sachchidanauda Sinha asked a series of questions in the Viceroy's Council regarding dacoities and raids in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province. We have published the replies of the Government.' The anxiety is due to a want of sufficient protection to the people and the absence of resistance to the dacoits. The Government, we regret to say, have given no assurance yet that life and property will be adequately protected. The public do not know what has been done to protect the people. From January to the end of April there were 69 dacoities in the Punjab. The Hindus were sufferers in 53 cases, and the Muhammadans and others suffered in 16 cases. Curiously enough, the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon observed: 'No significance can be attached to the fact that the majority of the victims were the Hindus. It is well known that the Hindus are usually the richest men in a village.' This complaisant view seems to indicate that the Hindus are themselves to blame for being the 'richest men in a village.' Sir Henry McMahon seems to imply that being rich is an offence which carries its own punishment. Nay, it implies that other people might become rich, but Hindus have no such privilege, and if they are robbed by Muslim dacoits, no significance can be attached to the robbery! Is this the measure of consolation or protection that the unfortunate victims of the Punjab deserve at the hands of their rulers and protectors? Is it for this that they appeal to the supreme authority for protection from robbers and plunderers? We never thought that the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon was so great a philosopher as to moralise on the risks of getting rich in one of the richest of the British Indian Provinces. The story of three million gold sovereigns being absorbed in the Punjab during the last two years must have spread far and wide. It is a moot point what proportion of the sovereigns so imported have been thrust into plantains and other fruits in the presentation of Dalis to patronising officials by profit-earning business men. But if some of them found their way into the pockets of Hindus in the Punjab villages could it be so tainted as to be regarded with philosophic complacency when looted by dacoits? There are many others who also become rich in India and other countries. Are they not protected by State, and when robbed, is no significance attached to their loss? We have heard of Hindu ascetics and Muslim saints despising wealth, but the spectacle of the foreign minister of the Government of India not being moved by the loss of Hindu wealth by loot is startlingly new.

"The loss is by no means insignificant. Last year over a lakh of rupees was lost by the people and the amount recovered was insignificant. In some cases the account books were destroyed by the dacoits with the object of relieving the Muhammadan debtors from the obligation to repay loans. Can no significance be attached to this circumstance also? The object of the raiders in destroying the account books is clearly to gain the sympathy of the debtors in the village who would otherwise have come to the assistance of the sufferers and offered resistance. As a matter of fact among the many dacoities that were committed there were few in which the villagers assisted in resisting the crime. Such resistance might be difficult for individuals; but if the villagers had stood in a body by the victims and opposed the raiders, there would have been fewer chances of success for looting. We are sorry that the Government of India have not been properly informed of the situation. It is the fault of the local authorities that they are not prepared to attach any special value to the Hindus being plundered in a majority of cases in Muslim districts and their account books being destroyed with other objects. If the dacoities convey no special significance, then we must have a more satisfactory explanation of the ways of the marauders."

Under-paid Policemen.

26. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 24th September 1912 :—

"The Pioneer has come to support the question of paying higher rates of pay to the rank and file of the Police in the Punjab and N.-W. Frontier Province. The difficulties of recruiting are narrated year by year in the reports and we notice that police punishments and malpractices dealt with departmentally together with dismissals, desertions, deaths and resignations are almost equal to the recruitments made every year. It may be that for fear of not securing recruits police malpractices may have to go unpunished. That would be a very serious situation. In the Punjab the ordinary labourer earns better wages than the best policeman can by lawful means. The thief, the housebreaker and the dacoit have even better prospects; and they are perfectly content to take their chance in the modern competition and struggle for existence. So why should a policeman on low pay be honest? The Pioneer says:—'It seems inevitable that higher pay will have to be given in the long run, a larger proportion of recruits being thus retained and long service becoming the rule and not exception. The Government of India have committed themselves to lavish expenditure upon education and sanitation, thinking, perhaps, that enough has been done for the police in the last five or six years; but there have been many changes since the Police Commission presented their report and the whole position may have again to be reviewed.' That is just what the Hon'ble Mr. Basu proposed fifteen months ago. But it was officially considered that no enquiry was necessary. If the pay of the constable is raised to Rs. 15 we have a chance of getting better and more honest recruits."

The Punjab Hindus and the Police Service.

* * * * * * * *

"It has been reserved for the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha to come to the rescue of this Province and to play as usual the good Samaritan, on the last occasion, we mean, at the meeting of the Supreme Legislative Council held on the 18th instant. Among the number of questions asked by him on that occasion, one of the most important related to the grievances of the Punjab Hindus in the matter of appointment to the Police Service. We give both the question and the reply below for easy reference.

* * * * * * * *

"The grievances of the Hindus as stated in our article are thus admitted to be substantially correct, but the Government say that 'apart from this memorial, the Government of India have received no other evidence of dissatisfaction.' We are afraid the Government of India have not been very careful readers of the provincial Press, for the provincial Press, vernacular and English, has never been remiss in its efforts to bring to light the increasing lawlessness of the province and in bringing the search-light of criticism to bear upon the composition of the police force. Nay, it has been repeatedly pointed out that the victims of this increasing lawlessness are for the most part Hindus (a fact, which is admitted by the Government of India in reply to the Hon'ble Mr. Sinha's other question) and that they strongly feel that their rights are not properly safeguarded in the hands of the present guardians of peace, dominated as they are from the rank and file up to the higher grades by the representatives of a community, which is of the same faith as their aggressors. Whether this feeling is well-founded or not is a matter into which we do not profess to enquire, but it will be suppressing the truth if we deny the existence of this feeling. In fact, the point has been so much emphasised by the provincial Press that recently our London contemporary India drew pointed attention to the short-sighted policy of the Government in making the Police service a close preserve for one community. In the face of these facts, it is rather strange for the Government to say that they have had no other evidence of Hindu dissatisfaction on the subject.

"It may be, however, that what the Government really meant by their reply was that no fresh memorial on the subject had been received by the Government of India since 1909. If this is so, we are afraid the Punjab Hindu Sabha cannot be wholly exonerated from blame. The Sabha has its own duties to perform and it should not go to sleep after delegating its duties to the Press. It is true that procrastination and laissez faire are among the characteristic weaknesses of the Hindu race, but it is important to remember that in this age of hustling activity, delay is not only dangerous but fatal. On the 1st July, 1909, there were in the Punjab proper 7 Muhammadan, 2 Hindu and 3 Sikh Deputy Superintendents of Police. On the 1st July 1912, there were 10 Muhammadan, 1 Hindu and 2 Sikh Deputy Superintendents. The pendulum has therefore gone still more violently backwards during the last three years. The Hindus have further lost ground, while the Muhammadans have decidedly gained. If this process continues, there will be perhaps not a single Hindu or Sikh Deputy Police Superintendent in the not distant future. But the Punjab Hindu Sabha, although the grievances have been more widespread and deep-rooted than ever, never thought of sending a second representation on the subject. It cannot be said that the Sabha had no strong ground for such a representation. In the reply to the Hindu Sabha's previous memorial, the Government of India admitted in Paragraph 6 that 'Government patronage should, as far as possible, be so bestowed as to prevent the growth of a monopoly of office in the hands of a single community,' and as a matter of fact laid special stress on it. Can it be said for a moment that this wholesome principle has not been infringed by filling up the higher grades of appointments in the Punjab Police by men of one community? The Punjab Hindu Sabha might well have directed the attention of the Government to the injurious effects of 'this growth of monopoly of office in the hands of a single community' and how this unwise policy runs counter to the golden rule and settled practice of the British Government. It might have also asked the Government whether the comparative paucity in the composition of the Police force of Dogras, Hindu and Sikh Jats whose natural inclination is in the direction of a military or quasi-military calling, is not traceable to this almost exclusive monopoly of the higher grades of the service by representatives of a different community. The fact is indeed well worth enquiring into. In the Army, there is no overwhelming preponderance of Muhammadans. There is an equitable distribution of the different classes in the rank and file of the Army. In the Police, the Muhammadans are in a disproportionate majority in the rank and file of the force, while they have a monopoly of the higher grades. Does not the last named fact act as a deterrent or discouragement to Hindu and Sikh military castes, who would have otherwise mustered strong in the ranks of the Police? It is never too late to mend and we trust that the Punjab Hindu Sabha will send another well-reasoned memorial on the subject to the Government."

Murder of constable Rotilal Roy, of Dacca.

28. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 26th September 1912 :—

"The public will be greatly shocked to learn of the latest outrage, just reported from Dacca. A constable named Rotilal Roy was shot dead on the night of the 24th instant in a lane in one of the most thickly inhabited parts of Dacca. The assassins are said to have been three in number but they escaped and so far no trace of them has been discovered. The murdered constable was formerly a police informer and was a prominent witness in the Dacca conspiracy case. It is to be deeply regretted that such an outrage should have been committed under the beneficent and conciliatory regime of Lord Carmichael, but it must on no account be confounded with an anarchist outrage. We have repeatedly pointed out that except the first few crimes the later ones are not anarchist crimes and have no political significance. It is a series of crimes like the blood feuds on the frontier or the vendetta in Italy, inspired by personal revenge. It is to be hoped that the assassins will be traced and brought to justice and not allowed to escape like the murderers of Inspector Nanda Lal Banerji."

The same paper in its issue of the 27th September 1912 has the following :—

"The telegram published to-day giving further particulars of the assassination of Head Constable Rotilal Roy at Dacca does not throw much light on the tragedy nor is there any clue which may lead to the arrest of the culprits. The facts that the assassinated policeman was formerly a police informer and was employed in watching certain persons accused in the Dacca conspiracy case and also gave evidence as a witness prove that it is a case of personal vengeance. The Dacca conspiracy case may be regarded as the last of the political cases which owe their inception to a secret political organisation. In the interests of justice it is to be hoped that the murderers will be brought to trial and retribution. There is every reason to hope that anarchism, terrorism and anarchical crimes have died out in India, but there are apparently some desperate men yet left, who belong to secret organizations and who pursue the methods of personal vengeance. The lenity displayed by Government in the Khulna case had excellent results, though it was much condemned at the time. The Dacca conspiracy case should prove the last of its kind and we devoutly hope that it will be given to Lord Carmichael to complete the noble work of pacification in which he is engaged."

(d)—Education.

The Muslim University.

29. The Observer (Lahore), of the 25th September 1912, publishes the following letter from one Sadiq Ali Khan of Lahore :—

"Your leader on the 'University Dilemma' in the Observer of the 18th September is a valuable contribution to the University literature and it is hoped that it will be widely read and seriously thought over, as it fully deserves to be. It has thoroughly gauged the Muslim position and wisely shown a way out of the present difficulty—though wisely refraining from expressing any decided opinion. All comes in the way of a suggestion, which may in course of time become the unanimous opinion of the whole Muslim community.

"The decision of the Secretary of State on the point that the proposed Universities will be only local came as a bolt from the blue, and the Muslim community has hardly yet recovered from the shock to think of any reasonable solution of the problem. The one feeling throughout the length and breadth of Muslim India is one of sullen disappointment and the intensity of the reaction has been proportionate to the energy and enthusiasm shown in the early stages, when this drama began to be played out. You are quite right in interpreting the position when you say that 'all sections of the community are agreed that, unless Government give up their objections, the Musalmans must abandon the University scheme altogether.' And the position has not yet materially changed. You may interview any individual member of the community and you are sure to hear the conviction that they are resolved to give up the scheme, if no better prospect opens out in the near future.

"Your good sense will also be duly appreciated by all lovers of moderation and propriety when you exonerate the Government of India from the blame of creating false hopes and lay the responsibility on the shoulders of the Secretary of State, who is over and above the hopes of the Government and the desires of the people alike. It is the Secretary of State, and not the Government therefore that has dashed the cup of our hopes to the ground. Nothing can be more reasonable or practical, therefore, than to approach that Government for some sort of concession, which should alleviate the feelings of the community as well as do something towards remedying the evil that has been so unfortunately caused. It is therefore far better and healthier for the community to be doing something than to remain sullen and silent, wallowing in the pond of despondency, and lose much valuable time which can be turned to account.

"Many and various have been the suggestions how to amend and improve the present position. Some say that the funds of 35 lakhs collected for the proposed University should be spent on the primary education of the Muslim masses. Others are of opinion that the money should be utilized for their technical education. There was also a suggestion in some private circles that, if the sum cannot be spent on the object it was intended for, it should go to the aid of the Turkish and Tripolitan sick and wounded. Wild as this last proposal would appear, there can be no question of the genuine Muslim spirit in it, which recognises the followers of the faith all over the world as brothers and the whole globe a proper field for their exertions in doing good to the poor and needy of their religion. The last though not least comes the proposal in your leader mentioned above. It is to have the 'Aligarh University' if we can't have the 'Muslim University.'

"The Muslim feeling is so strong that one cannot help being startled at first at the proposal. But what cannot be cured must be endured. This state of dead-lock cannot continue for long. Something must be done and something is better than nothing. Suppose we were to abandon the University scheme; then we would have advanced not a step further and should have lost clear one lakh of rupees a year the Government is willing to concede to us in case we have the so-called University at Aligarh. The next disadvantage is that the College would not have advanced a single step further.

"On the other hand, by approaching the Government it is just possible that it should reduce the amount of sum necessary to the granting of the charter from 35 lakhs to something like 15 or 20 lakhs. In this way there is the net gain of one lakh of rupees annually plus the interest (about 50,000 or 75,000 on the 20 lakhs alluded to above). With the 15 lakhs we can have our University, though in a limited form, for the present and the surplus can be utilised in a hundred and one other useful ways.

"To put the position in a nut shell—the question before the Muslim public is not only to have a University but also not to throw away the opportunity of absorbing the annual grant of one lakh of rupees conditional on the formation of a University. The grant is not such a despicable one as could be lightly thrown away. It would be but reasonable for our community to pause and look back before it finally threw away this Government grant. The Government by the way is not in the habit of lavishing such princely gifts every day and our community on the other hand is anything but independent in the monetary way not to look with open eyes how it can afford to lose such a donation. Money is a great need of the Musalmans and all those who have experienced how difficult it is to raise funds for the public on communal utility will fully understand and appreciate the force of the argument. Let us then have the 'University at Aligarh' in place of the Muslim one; and who knows but it may develop in the course of time into an all-India concern? This is the only practical solution of the problem and it is hoped that Musalmans will not allow their sentimentality to run away with their discretion."

Exclusion of Indians from the Railway Conference.

30. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 22nd September 1912 :—

"Our Anglo-Indian contemporaries have published a list of gentlemen who have been invited to attend the Railway Conference at Simla. They are mostly representatives of the various Railways in India. Out of a total number of 50 persons who have been invited there is not even one Indian. This shows how entirely Indians are excluded from any share in the management of Indian Railways. The Railways whose representatives have been invited to attend the Conference are both State and Companies, and in the matter of the employment of Indians in positions of trust and responsibility, the latter are much worse than the former. The matters with which the Railway Conference will deal intimately concern the people of the country, and it is really strange that there is no Indian on it. There is no reason why the Government of India should not appoint a few non-official Indians to represent the people on the Conference. May we hope that it will attract the notice of His Excellency the Viceroy and he will be pleased to remove the complaint mentioned."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The income-tax.

31. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 21st September 1912 :—

"The income-tax is perhaps the most unpopular form of taxation. And there is good reason why it is so. Not only it is a direct tax, but it bears a sort of inquisitorial character through the assessors and other officers of the Government making investigation into the private affairs of the citizens. That is the reason why the tax is generally resented. It has, however, come to stay.

"The income-tax may therefore be regarded as a permanent item of taxation. There are, of course, difficulties in the way of levying it, there are also inequalities in the manner of its incidence. But it cannot be said that the principle of taxing the citizens, according to their income, after exempting the smaller incomes, is altogether unreasonable or inequitable. The difficulties and inequalities referred to above fall into two classes—general and special. The estimates of income must to a large extent be left to the discretion of the person taxed, and this offers considerable opportunity for concealment and falsification in the returns; that is to say, it may so happen that while the conscientious may render an account in full, the less scrupulous may pay less than they ought. Act II of 1886 in such cases insists for a declaration, that the income shewn in the return is truly estimated on all the sources therein mentioned, that it has actually accrued within the period therein stated, and that the person making the return has no other source of income. There is a further provision to the effect that a person making a false statement in a declaration shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 117, I. P. C. But in spite of this penal provision, mis-statements in declaration occur and it is extremely difficult to prove them. In the Punjab Income Tax Administration Report for 1910-11, the Government made a confession of powerlessness with regard to the levying of correct income-tax upon the Indian traders, whose bahi khatas were written in a manner and script, which, it was said, was the reverse of legible. There is also another objection of a general nature to the imposition of this tax. It is rightly contended that it is not equitable that incomes gained from hard industrial or professional labour should be taxed as heavily as incomes derived from inherited property or unearned increment of the soil. The imposition of income-tax in this country is, however, subject to some special objections in addition to the above. In England, the minimum necessary for a decent and comfortable living is deducted from all assessable incomes under £400. We believe that in Great Britain all incomes under £150 are totally exempted from the tax, while as regards incomes under £400, £120 is deducted and then the remainder taxed. No such rule is followed in the imposition of the income-tax in this country, the only variation here being that for annual incomes assessed at less than Rs. 2,000, the rate is four pies in the rupee, while for higher incomes it is 5 pies in the rupee. Another point of inequality is that the tax is imposed on firms or associations whose annual income is assessable under the law, even though the partners of the firm or association may not be individually liable to payment. Yet another objection to the incidence of the tax is that shipping companies, registered out of British India and engaged in sea-going traffic, are generally exempt from the tax, even though they may be earning millions of pounds from Indian traffic. Besides these objections to the incidence, hardships are often experienced in the operation of the tax. For instance, the Government this year came all on a sudden to the conclusion that the towns of Lahore, Lyallpur and Multan as well as these districts have been under-assessed. The result was that the assessment in these places began with a vengeance and thereby much hardship has been caused. In the first place, there should not have been, supposing it was a fact, any under-assessment, and secondly, arbitrary and spasmodic assessments should as far as possible be avoided.

"In the Native States of India, there has not been so far, speaking generally, any imposition of income-tax. Baroda is, however, an exception, but then the State of Baroda has taken up responsibilities and duties as regards universal education, which have not yet been taken by the Government of India, let alone any Native States. Recently the Council of Regency in Bahawalpur State issued orders for the imposition of the tax on a wholesale scale and the people of the State have, we understand, petitioned the Political Agent, Phulkian and Bahawalpur States and also the Lieutenant-Governor. It is really strange, while the States of Kashmir and Patiala, which have larger areas to administer and heavier responsibilities to bear, have been able to do without an income-tax. that the State of Bahawalpur, where the people are comparatively poorer and more backward, should be driven to it. The finances of the State are also in a flourishing condition and there does not seem any reason whatsoever for the impost in Bahawalpur. It is, however, fortunate that the example of Bahawalpur has not been followed by any other Native State in the province."

Indian Industries.

32. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 21st September 1912 :—

"Several years ago a Professor in a local college half jocularly and half seriously advised his pupils to learn shoe-making. The young men felt insulted and left the class in a body. Almost at the same time an old Brahman was watching the ships at the port of Karachi. He saw quite a lot of them being loaded with hides—veritable mountains of them. On enquiry he learnt that they were being exported to Europe for being converted into boots to adorn our feet and occasionally perhaps to rupture our spleens. Within a week the old man was on his way to the West with his only son, a graduate of the Bombay University, to learn leather-tanning The troubles and difficulties they experienced both in England and America in attaining their object were related in the papers and created quite a sensation at the time. That young Brahman graduate of the Bombay University who crossed the sea to learn leather-tanning is now known throughout India as Mr Talati, one of the richest merchants of Bombay, while those proud pupils of a Lahore Professor who left the class in a body for being told to learn shoe-making have never since been heard of.

"A European company has just been floated in India to make paper out of bamboo. India is pre-eminently a land of bamboos. Yet the idea has never occurred to a native of this soil that the existence of the bamboo can be justified on any other use than that of breaking other people's heads. European companies have taken on lease large tracts of land in Assam for rubber-planting, rubber-making being the most paying industry of the day. There are miles and miles of rubber forests in the Terais of Nepal. Labour is almost incredibly cheap in Nepal compared with that of Assam with its extensive tea plantations. The Government of Nepal can be easily induced to give these forests on lease, and if some of our enterprising young men with some capital to spare could either jointly or separately take to the business in earnest, they could easily beat their Assam rivals in the market. These and various other facts, which those who have eyes to see never fail to see at once, take the wind out of the sail of the constant complaint of some of our young men that all the lucrative industries of India have been monopolised by foreigners, leaving hardly any room for the exercise of indigenous enterprise. India is as large as Europe excluding Russia, and its resources are endless. For the enterprising, India has always in store innumerable openings for industries, big and small. A Parsi gentleman of Bombay has made a fortune by exporting mango-jelly to England. India is pre-eminently a land of fruits. In Burma, Assam, and parts of Bengal pineapple grows wild and forms food for cattle—yes, pineapple! To how many of our young men the idea has occurred that pineapple jelly may make some sensation in the land of gooseberries?

"There are companies in England whose daily business it is to collect the refuse of houses like vegetable stumps, broom-stick handles, broken china, &c., and make them by a chemical process into various articles of use and ornament, that sell like hot cakes in our bazars and bring to the companies concerned bagsful of money. In the West they won't allow even a vegetable stump or a broom-stick handle to go to waste. In India, where the gnawings of an empty stomach are becoming more and more acute every day far greater wastes in resource and energy are taken philosophically.

"The writer of these lines was once being lectured by a European fellow-passenger in a railway train on the absolute helplessness of the Indian in the struggle for physical existence in the modern conditions of the world. 'What's that?' he suddenly asked, pointing at something on the left bank of the Sutlej which the train had just begun to cross. The carcase of a horse was being torn to pieces by vultures and jackals in the ruddy light of the setting sun. 'Why did they leave it there?' 'Because,' was the humble reply, 'It is not the fashion to ride dead horses.' 'Now, look here,' said the European gentleman solemnly, 'Here you throw away a dead horse to vultures and jackals at the expense of your own pockets. Can you guess what they would do with it in my own country? They would make of its leather saddles, chair-coverings, &c., for your daily use; of its bones beautiful toys and sundry other knick-knacks to adorn your drawing room; of its teeth shining buttons for your shirts; and of its tail bow strings for violins to make your evenings pleasant.' The humble listener only stared into space and said nothing."

The Indian Cotton Bureau.

83. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 27th September 1912:—

"We are glad to learn that certain Indian mill-owners have established in London a new organisation called the Indian Cotton Bureau. The Bureau will carry on its work in London, but will be controlled from India by a committee of cotton manufacturers in this country. Its objects are to inform public opinion in the United Kingdom and more particularly in Parliament and the Press as regards various matters of importance affecting the Indian cotton industry. It is announced that the Bureau will concern itself with the politics of business in India and will not transact any commercial business whatsoever. Its efforts will in the main be directed to secure for India among those responsible for its government and also among the British public a proper conception of the conditions affecting Indian industrial problems. We are told further that in time the operations of the Bureau will be extended to cover other Indian trades and industries, such as tobacco, jute, paper, wool, sugar, iron, glass, Burmah oil, etc. It will also take up other general questions of the greatest importance to India, such as the insufficient financial support accorded to Indian railways, the use in Great Britain of surplus cash balances belonging to India by the India Office and other matters generally of vital importance such as the assimilation of Indian Company Law to English. To begin with the Bureau will endeavour to instruct British public opinion on (a) the grossly perverse and unjustifiable levy of an excise upon cotton goods produced by manufacturers in India, which, in the name of free trade, maintains a measure of protection or preference in favour of the manufacturers of cotton goods in Lancashire; (b) the necessity of increased subsidies from the Imperial Government of India to Provincial Government for the purpose of extending and improving the growth of cotton in the Dependency; (c) keeping Parliament and the Secretary of State for India informed as to the progress of cotton cultivation in India and as to the grants made annually for this purpose by the various Provincial Government; and (d) the submission of representations on the above and cognate subjects to the Secretary of State for India. It is further stated that in the event of a policy of Imperial Preference being adopted by the mother country, the Bureau would make known the views of Indian manufacturers as to the character of the reciprocity they favour. The Bureau, if properly worked, is sure to meet a want that has been felt long and keenly, and we hope that its efforts will soon be extended to the directions referred to above."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

European Powers and Turkey.

1. Writing under the heading "European Powers and Turkey" in its issue, dated the 16th and 24th September 1912, the Muin (Amritsar), says that the hypocritical policy followed by the statesmen of civilised Europe bids fair to involve the whole world in war. Before the rivers of Muslim blood shed in Tripoli, Morocco and Persia have dried up, Central European diplomacy has addressed itself to the task of partitioning Turkey. The object of the recent meeting between the Czar and the Kaiser could have been nothing but to devise means to cut the throat of Turkey. Again, recent events in the Balkans and Greece and Count Berchtold's proposals are intended to shear the Ottoman Empire of its European provinces. After referring to what the Count has been saying in support of the position taken up by him, the Muin says that Europe's political logic is as strange as the satanic moves of its diplomacy. What, however, surprises most is that Sir Edward Grey also has decided "to execute a dance against the Turks in the political theatre of the Balkans at the instance of the Austrian Count." It cannot be said how the "political belief" has penetrated the thick and perverse skull of the British Foreign Minister that the reins of the mighty British Empire should be in the keeping of Russia and Austria, and that he should be a mere puppet in the hands of the Foreign Offices of these Powers. It is a pity that the Foreign policy of England should be shaped according to the wishes of Russia, Austria, Italy, Germany and France—a state of affairs which is damaging her prestige and weakening her rule in Asia and Africa. In conclusion, the paper remarks that Europe is now engaged in oppressing the Muslim world and that unfortunate Turkey is surrounded by enemies on all sides, a fact which renders a universal war inevitable.

Persian affairs.

2. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 26th September 1912, has an article, under the heading "What more has fate yet in store for Persia?", in which the paper condemns the suggestion of the Times (London) that the Anglo-Russian agreement should be modified to allow England the same liberty (? of action) in Southern Persia that Russia has in the North. England is morally responsible for the oppression and high-handedness that Russia has, because of the aforesaid agreement, been perpetrating in Persia. If she had not stood by Russia in everything, Russia would never have dared to treat Persia in this grossly dishonest way. Next the paper quotes extracts from the Anglo-Russian Convention to show that there is nothing in that document which can justify the recent doings in Persia. England should enter into no further agreement likely to further Russian designs on the Shah's dominions.

Tibet and India.

3. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 1st October 1912 :—

"The demand of those who advise the British Government to intervene in the affairs of Tibet, irrespective of party obligations, has now been reduced to a definite proposal and it is, that Great Britain should ask for the posting of a British agent at Lhassa. This proposal, it will be remembered, was the most prominent of those strongly advocated by Lord Curzon, but it was vetoed by the Government of Mr. Balfour in 1905. A little later when the Liberals came into power they not only endorsed the decision of Mr. Balfour, but took steps to ratify it still further. In the agreements between Tibet and Great Britain and China and Great Britain it was definitely stated that no British agent would be posted at Lhassa. Again, when an agreement between Russia and Great Britain was concluded, it was laid down that neither Russia nor Great Britain will demand permission for sending an agent to Lhassa. It is suggested that Great Britain could ask Russia to allow her to send an agent to Lhassa. Even if we take it for granted that Russia will, for consideration shown her elsewhere, allow Great Britain the necessary permission, we do not think the proposal should be pressed. It is certain that China will not consent to this abrogation of England's treaty obligations with her. Is Great Britain prepared to force her proposal on China, and in case the Chinese Government is firm in her refusal, will England take steps to coerce her to accept her demand? For Great Britain to go to war with China on this question would, in our opinion, be the height of absurdity and unfairness. Supposing even that Great Britain has obtained the sanction of Russia and has succeeded in coercing the Chinese to accept the proposal, there are weighty objections in the interests of India against the proposal. A British agent at Lhassa means a strong British garrison to support and protect him. This would mean great expense. For several months in the year the road to Lhassa is closed and, when it is passable, the journey is a most difficult one. In the event of anything happening to the British agent a war with Tibet would be inevitable and this would mean a lot of unnecessary and totally unremunerative expenditure. The appointment of a British agent at Lhassa would thus open the door to an endless series of complications, which would be very difficult satisfactorily to manage. In 1876 a similar demand was forced on Ameer Sher Ali in Afghanistan. He would not agree to it. But the British Government was determined to coerce him. The result was the Afghan War which cost India quite a mint of money and brought nothing in return. Ameer Sher Ali ran away and afterwards died in exile. Kabul was occupied by British troops. A British agent was posted at Kabul. The sequel was what we all know. The agent was murdered, and to avenge the outrage another expedition into Afghanistan was undertaken. Ultimately not only had the idea of a British agent at Kabul to be given up, but the forward party in Indian politics had to in another matter. Abdurrahman was offered the throne of Afghanistan, and he agreed to accept the offer, on conditions the acceptance of which by the British Government was another blow to the Jingo party. We hope history in this respect will not be allowed to repeat itself in Lhassa. The British agent in Lhassa will have constantly to face Russian and Chinese machinations and intrigues and the chances are that they may lead to a costly war with either or both of these Powers. Again we have strong objection to the expenses of the agency and the garrison accompanying it being charged to India. In 1905 quite a crore of Indian money was spent in an expedition to Tibet which proved quite fruitless and produced no permanent result."

The Balkan crisis.

4. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 2nd October 1912 :—

"The long-expected is about to happen and the Turks will be compelled to fight for self-preservation. Ominous news comes from the Balkans and the situation has become critical. The Balkan States are standing on the brink of a fearful precipice and war may at any moment break out between Turkey and her neighbours. This is all the more probable in view of the haste with which Turkey appears to be negotiating for peace with Italy, in order, it is obvious, to devote attention exclusively to the struggle which is being forced on her by a combination of all the Balkan States and principalities. Seeing the Sultan embroiled in a sanguinary conflict with a European Power in one part of the world, his enemies can no longer let the present opportunity pass without utilising it for self-aggrandisement and are bent on stricking an effective blow nearer home. Whether their expectations will be realized or whether the 'sick man of Europe' will give astonishing proof of his vitality remains to be seen. But in any case, if the worst is to come, the Turks may be relied upon to make an exhibition of characteristic military prowess and to sell their lives dearly."

The Muslim League.

5. In its issue of the 16th and 24th September 1912, the Main (Amritsar), has a leader headed "What is the Muslim League? How can it be reformed?" Lord Curzon was, says the paper, of opinion that the rapid onward march of the "national forces" in India was detrimental to the permanence of British rule in the country. With a view therefore to mending matters, His Lordship passed the Universities Act and partitioned Bengal in order to divide Bengalis and make sleepy Muhammadans fight with them. He must also have realised that the fire of mutual fight between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Bengal would spread to all parts of India, and this result was soon obtained. Lord Curzon was succeeded by Lord Minto, who soon discovered "the great national power of Hindus" and took steps to add to the political power of the Prophet's followers. This led titled Muhammadans to disregard the advice of the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad and to rush into the arena of politics. They formed themselves into a deputation and waited upon the Viceroy at Simla, where they were patted on the back by His Excellency. Thus they thought that, by dabbling in politics, they would not only keep their titles and wealth intact, but would get further honours from Government. The result was the establishment of the Muslim League, its members being acknowledged by the ignorant Muhammadan public as "national" leaders, which induced scores of selfish, scheming and only nominal Muhammadans to join. If indeed Government had not reversed the Partition of Bengal, the League would long have managed to remain in the good books of both Government and Muhammadans. But its utter inability to prove of any help to them at that crisis led Muhammadans to proclaim that they would rely only on God and their own strength. They came to the conclusion that the League was no "national" institution. Some advised their co-religionists to join the National Congress, others favoured the establishment of a separate Muslim political association. In the meanwhile, however, it was announced that Mr. Amir Ali would preside at the ensuing annual session of the League. The services rendered by that gentleman in the past afford some hope of the League being reformed, and the paper asks Muhammadans to attend the forthcoming session and demand reform on "national" lines. In case, however, their efforts prove barren of result, they should start a separate political society.

Indian Muhammadans.

6. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"It is really amusing to hear the Observer describing Indian Muhammadans as 'exiles' in the 'land of regrets.' I wonder how many of the Muhammadans in the Punjab trace their origin directly to Arabia. Their number cannot be large. Most of the Muhammadans are converted Hindus and it is truly admirable to find depth of religious feeling in them. But for that reason to call oneself an 'exile' in India is grotesque. It may have been said with great bitterness, but I really think it is due to the isolating tendency of the Muhammadans."

The Hindu.

7. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 31st August 1912 (received on the 1st October 1912) :—

* * * * * * *

"And still the Hindus are spoken of in other lands, especially in the West, as if they have got flesh without bone and do not command strength and courage enough to kill a fly. It is hardly possible within the narrow compass of a newspaper article to enquire in detail into the circumstances which have led to this almost irritating perversity in respect of an undeniable truth. Three prominent causes may, however, occur to any one. (1) The Hindus have no history of their own. It has never been in their nature to sound their own trumpets. The Greeks, the Romans, and the Muhammadan conquerors have left records of their own military achievements. Constituted as human nature is, he only is heard who makes himself heard. (2) They have had no independence for a long time. How can a people who have been dependent so long be brave and warlike? Of course it need not be pointed out here that the warlike Britons had been under Norman rule for five hundred years, and at last found salvation, if not nirvan, in Norman blood (3) Only those people who have invaded other people's lands have attained military glory in the eyes of history. The Hindus may have quarrelled among themselves, but they have never carried war upon other peoples or seized by force other people's lands. They have rolled back foreign invasions for fifteen hundred years, but they have never invaded foreign territories. They have proved perfect Bhalamanus in their relations with the outside world. And there's the rub. Renunciation has always been the keynote of Hindu life in spite of all actions and achievements to the contrary enforced by circumstances. The Hindu, be it said to his credit, has always followed the right course of civilisation. Sivaji's flag was ochre-coloured. Thus, when for the first time in his long history, when he had practically laid aside his sword, he found his Ashram one fine morning invaded by hordes of barbarians, he must have felt like the old man in Sir John Tenniel's famous cartoon. He had just landed on the other side of the fence closely pursued by an infuriated bull. 'Ungrateful beast,' he cried shaking his fist at the angry brute, 'and I been a vegetarian all my life'!"

Pan-Islamic menace in India.

8. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 1st October 1912 :—

"The recent articles in the Times (London) on the Pan-Islamic menace in India has excited a good deal of public attention. The first impression it produces is that there is no menace and the anticipations of trouble are exaggerated. When carefully viewed, most people admit that the events in Tripoli and Persia have created unrest among the Muhammadans, and to some extent even the Hindus are unable to approve of the international policy towards Muhammadan States. But there are broad facts to be considered. In the first place, in what way can India as a whole prevent the ruin of Persia or stop Italy from her pursuits? The British Government are pursuing a foreign policy suited to their Imperial aims and intentions. That they would modify that policy out of deference to Moslem resentment in India cannot be expected.

"To the philosophically disposed the panic about Pan-Islamism is not without matter for deep reflection. Take, for instance, the principle of 'divide and rule.' At some time in the history of most countries, the advantages of division among subject races is recognised. In India, the Hindus and the Muhammadans are rivals. At any rate, they are represented so and in their relationship the feeling of rivalry is ever present in particular places. The ignorant labouring masses know no such rivalry when left to themselves. The knowing and the selfish for their own ends sometimes create a split and so long as personal vanity is gratified or selfish ends are met, the rivalry continues. As in the case of cow-killing, religious prejudices are created and one has only to insist on killing cows here, there and everywhere, in order to stir up the worst feelings of injury and dissatisfaction among the Hindus. In larger matters the Hindus and Muhammadans might rival each other in securing the largest number of votes by the easiest possible methods and claim to get more appointments on the score of some merit or demerit. But the result of the rivalry is estrangements of feelings and want of mutual sympathy. Why the Hindus cannot sympathise with Pan-Islamic movement of the Muhammadans is because it is a religious and not a territorial organisation. It challenges all non-Musalmans as unfriendly and alien and all Mussalmans though foreign as friendly. That is a position which no modern citizen of the world is prepared to recognise. We can understand an organisation, a movement and a confederacy to help particular nations in difficulties. There is the Subject Races Conference held to sympathise with and help the subject nationalities of the world. Similarly in India if a movement were started to help Persia and to invoke the aid of the European powers or in any other open and legitimate way, not confined to Moslems alone, but to all else whose political feelings are roused, that would have been most welcome. Few would ever have thought it fit to condemn it or suspect its aims. But the isolating tendencies of the Moslems refuse all else who are not themselves Moslem. They are yet playing with the forgotten and rejected doctrine of Religious State. The shackles of the Church over the State have been broken everywhere except in the Islamic Kingdom and they pride themselves over a fancied virtue which in others is only considered as a failing. That is why the Pan-Islamic cult at once challenges opposition. They have rejected territorial patriotism in favour of religious fanaticism and almost every Moslem seems to think of a future when all the Moslems of the world will be collected under one common political authority dominated by their Church. And that future will never come as a result of the struggle between antiquarian statecraft and modern statesmanship. The British Government does not in the least feel concerned about the dangers of pan-Islamism. It menaces no nation in India. It endangers no Empire in Asia or Europe. But it undermines one thing. What shall become of the principle 'Divide and Rule' and where else can the administrative facilities of that policy be sought from?"

The Punjab Hindu Conference.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 3rd October 1912 :—

"It is not known whether the election of delegates to the forthcoming Conference has ceased or whether the Reception Committee at Delhi is aware of the apathy of the people in the Punjab. The first Conference which was held at Lahore in 1909 was by common consent the most successful. The report of that Conference gives the names of about 800 delegates. But the delegates' fees amounted to Rs. 1,450 and therefore the attendance of delegates could not have been larger than 300. But the session was held in the capital of the province. It was therefore possible for the organizers to realise by sale of tickets as much as Rs. 2,663. The Second Conference was held at Multan, a remote corner of the province. Although the list of delegates embodies 600 names, the delegates' tickets fetched only Rs. 820, showing that the number of delegates who attended did not exceed 200. Visitors' tickets also fetched less than Rs. 1,000 so that the Conference became a drain on the pockets of the patriots. But the patriots, headed by the Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Lala Hari Chand, paid the money ungrudgingly and even bore their share of abuse from the revilers of the Conference. The Third Conference was held at Amritsar. It had two advantages over that of Multan with none of its disadvantages. It was therefore more attractive to delegates and proved less burdensome to the Reception Committee. Our friends in Delhi are prepared to expend from their pockets as much as Rs. 3,000 in order to make the session worthy of the Imperial city. But it is to be regretted that the people seem totally wanting in enthusiasm. We understand that delegates have been elected in a large number of places, but so far no publicity has been given. Why should there be any secrecy in this matter? Publicity affords encouragement and stimulates enthusiasm. For the First Conference delegates were returned from about 40 centres, for the second from about 30 centres and for the third, we hear, from fewer centres. That is to say, from year to year public interest is waning and it would be a misfortune if people should lose faith in quiet constructive work of the kind for which the Conference stands. It is a mistake to stand back. Those who say that the Hindu Sabha and the Hindu Conference has done nothing in practice should point out which other organization similarly circumstanced has done more in four years. We trust the farseeing section will realise the situation and co-operate heartily with the leaders in making the Conference a success."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Crime in the North-West Frontier Province.

10. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 2nd October 1912 :—

"At the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council on the 18th ultimo the Hon'ble Mr. S. Sinha asked whether the Government were in a position to supply the information for which he had asked on the 1st March last regarding crimes in the North-West Frontier Province. In reply the Hon'ble Sir A. H. McMahon laid a statement on the table giving required information as to the number of raids committed, persons murdered and kidnapped, and the value of the property looted during each of the ten years. * * * * These figures are so eloquent that they require no comment and still less any embroidery. There has been practically a steady increase of crime in the Frontier Province since the partition from the Punjab. But the information that is really wanted for purposes of comparison is a statement showing the number of raids in the ten years previous to the creation of the new Province. That would effectually show whether there was greater security of life and property when the Frontier Province was part of the Punjab than there is now, and we hope the Hon'ble Mr. S. Sinha will ask for this information at the winter session of the Council. In the statement before us it is noteworthy that before 1906-07 no person kidnapped was held to ransom."

III.—Native States.

Kashmir affairs.

11. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 27th September 1912, has an article headed "Hell in Heaven", in which it quotes extracts from a memorial recently submitted to the Maharaja of Kashmir against the begar system by the Dogra Sadar Committee, Jammu. The lines on which the State is now administered are, says the writer, such that Muhammadans, who form 95 per cent. of the Maharaja's subjects, are treated as a negligible quantity. Their desires and troubles are of no account to the State officials, and they have been most hard hit by the begar system. It is, therefore, to be hoped that His Highness will pay special consideration to the above representation; the continuance of begar in Kashmir in the present enlightened age is much to be deprecated.

Hindi as Court language in the Bikaner State.

12. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"A 'Boon' Indeed.

"At a durbar held at Bikaner in celebration of the 25 years' rule of the present Maharaja, several 'boons' were announced. Some of these, for instance large remissions of taxation and arrears of land revenue, the development of primary and higher education, additional hospital and domiciliary rights to foreigners, are valuable indeed. But lovers of the Lingua Franca of India will be exceedingly sorry to learn that these announcements synchronise with a substitution of Hindi for Urdu as the court language of the State. This is all the more regrettable since the dethronement of Urdu from its position of pre-eminence has been represented as a 'boon.' It is hardly so as far as His Highness's Musalman subjects are concerned, and if the Maharaja had decided to deal a death-blow to Urdu in his State, he had better postponed the announcement to some less auspicious occasion. The best boon for the people of Bikaner would have been the initiation of some effective steps for remedying the chronic poverty of the masses, who are driven by drought every year or two to flock to the Punjab and elsewhere and whose hard lot is not to be envied by the subjects of any other State in India. But the construction of irrigation works costs money, while any blow aimed at Urdu brings its reward in the hurrahs of some people gratis, free and for nothing."

IV.—Kine-killing.

Muhammadans and cow-killing.

13. Writing under the heading "Mother Cow," the Badar (Qadian), of the 26th September 1912, says that Hakim Allahyar Khan, Editor of the Gau Mata (Lahore), contends that reliable Muhammadan books forbid the use of beef. He does not, however, specify any particular passages. His object is to prevent Muhammadans from killing cows; but, since Islam is the enemy of every form of polytheism and superstition and since "the ancient Egyptians and Magi, as also their pupils the Indians (? Hindus), regard the cow as God," it is necessary that the falsity of their belief should be proved to them by killing that animal. Hakim Allahyar Khan is also utterly wrong in saying that holy men have forbidden the use of beef. The Editor has heard some Sufis say that its consumption rather renders the mind pure and clears mental vision.

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Christian Missionaries and Muhammadans.

14. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 1st October 1912, publishes a letter headed "Muhammadans, beware!", in which the writer—Muhammad Hussain, L.M.S., an Ahmadi of Lahore—says that all the worshippers of the false in the world have been simultaneously attacking Islam; Christian Missionaries, for instance, have been making use of various devices—gold and beautiful women—to decoy Muhammadans into the Christian fold; Aryas, atheists and materialists have been exerting themselves against the Prophet's faith; and now, recently, the enemies of Islam have made a most clever move to convert Musalmans into polytheists. They are gradually bringing them to dislike the name of Allah and to believe in a God who is not endowed with the attributes of the Muslim deity. Believers in such a God are undoubtedly polytheists, and the same is the case with Christians, who believe in a God who has a Son and is hence a weak being. This God is generally spoken of as "Lord Jesus Christ," and consequently those trying to bring the word "Lord" into general use are desirous of banishing the sacred name of Allah from the world. Such worshippers of the false have recently hit upon an unholy plan to bring about that result and to make polytheists of Muhammadans by habituating them to the use of "Lord." They have been sending letters or (post) cards to their acquaintances containing the following prayer and note:—

"O Lord, I implore Thee to bless all mankind and keep us from evil and bring us to dwell with Thee.

"This prayer is to go all over the world. It was said in merry old days that those who wrote it were delivered from some great calamity and those who took no notice would meet with some great misfortune. Those who write it within two days and send it to nine friends will on the fourth day receive some good news. Do not write your name. Write the date you received it and the date you despatched it. Please do not break the chain of the message."

The foregoing prayer is the one generally offered by Christians, and the word "Lord" in it means God with a Son, or God Jesus Christ. The object of the secret society of Christian Missionaries, which has inaugurated the movement, is that Muhammadans may abjure the word Allah and take to the use of that of Lord, imbibing polytheistic ideas in this way. In conclusion, the writer remarks that he has written this letter in order to warn his co-religionists.

Commenting on the above the paper says that Dr. Muhammad Husain (the writer) has seen through this very clever move, which certain Christians have recently been making to undermine the religious beliefs of Muhammadans. His letter should show that Christian Missionaries have made up their minds to throw dust in the eyes of Muhammadans in broad daylight and to impress on the latter that, as Muslim prayers have lost their efficacy, they should, therefore, take to the use of Christian prayers. It is, however, to be hoped that Muhammadans will lose no time in protecting themselves against this new piece of mischief.

European visitors to the Jumma Mosque, Delhi.

15. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 22nd September 1912, publishes a communication, headed "The Jumma Mosque, Delhi and the boots of Englishmen." Referring to the Zamindar's previous remarks on the subject (vide paragraphs 13 and 18 of Selections Nos. 36 and 37 respectively), the writer—Bashir-ud-Din Hasan, Municipal Commissioner, Delhi—exonerates the Delhi (Muslim) public and the Imam of the mosque from all blame for the existing state of things. When Government restored the mosque to Muhammadans in 1862, it was laid down that Europeans would, as before, continue to walk in the mosque with their boots on. In 1902 the strenuous efforts of the Managing Committee led to a substantial improvement on the old practice. Later on, visitors, following the example of Lord Curzon, began to put on coverings over their boots when entering the roofed portion of the mosque. The Imam is not entirely responsible for the management of the mosque, which is entrusted to a committee, the Imam being a member.

Commenting on the communication, the Editor says that it must be admitted that the Managing Committee of the mosque brought the matter to the notice of the authorities, but that there can, at the same time, be no denying the fact that the committee's efforts might and should have been greater. They ought to have given the matter publicity in the press and, if necessary, even in Parliament. Muhammadans seem to have lost all sense of shame, otherwise their sacred places could not be treated in this barbarous manner by a Government which loves justice and advocates freedom and equality. They ought not to have stopped till they had made the authorities accede to their wishes and, in the event of failure, should have given up the mosque, telling the Deputy Commissioner to use it in any way he liked, even as a boot factory. As to the Imam, says the Editor, he has been granted his titles simply on account of his connection with the mosque and, if he could not save it from being thus defiled, he ought to have relinquished the Imamate and flung away the titles. In conclusion, he asks Sayad Ali Imam to represent the matter to His Excellency the Viceroy and thereby earn the gratitude of 8 crores of Musalmans.

Friday prayers.

16. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"Carlyle tells us that silence is golden. The Government of India, however, seem to hold a different view. In reply to a question asked at the last meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Ghaznavi about the troubles and annoyances to which Indian pilgrims are being subjected in view of the Italian blockade of the Red Sea, it was stated that practically no complaints had been made to the Government. That the Hajis are meeting with trouble, of this no one who has any dealings with them and reads letters received from them in India can be ignorant. But when the grievance is not brought to the notice of the authorities it is futile to expect redress. Most pilgrims, however, make it a point to make light of their troubles and regard them as part of the Haj. Therefore, unless and until the attitude undergoes a decisive change, little hope can be entertained of an amelioration of the present state of affairs. The reply given to another question of Mr. Ghaznavi, however, deserves more attention. It shows that there is no Government order permitting Musalman employés in Government service to say their prayers during office hours. It depends on the will and pleasure of any officer to grant leave for such purpose, and Government are not prepared to issue an order for the grant of leave for even Friday prayers unless the Muslim demand for the same is widespread and persistent. The moral is obvious and should induce the Musalman to apprise the Government of their wishes in a constitutional but effective manner."

Christendom of the present day.

17. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

* * * * * * *

"Human society has gone literally heels over head. Its head is where its legs should have been and its legs are where its head should have been. Christendom or Hindudom, Muslimdom or Buddhadom, they are all synonyms for one word — Topsyturvydom. Perhaps it is topheaviness caused by accidental accretions of centuries. Or perhaps it is a stage in the evolution of human society — a necessary condition in the revolving cycle, as a prelude to the reverse process. Whatever, it is, it is a phenomenon worthy of the serious attention of mankind.

"Take Christendom first, for it has fought its way over more than half the globe and deserves the place of honour in the comity of nations that stand upside down. 'If any man have not the spirit of Christ' says the Bible, 'he is none of his.' It may be the height of exaggeration to say that the spirit of Christ is working with remarkable thoroughness in modern Christendom. A follower of Christ is enjoined to turn his right cheek if slapped on the left. Just slap your Burra Sahib on the cheek and see what follows! Christ would have his followers 'walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying.' All these forbidden virtues have undergone commendable development in modern Christendom. 'Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," says the Bible,' and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.' And modern Christendom has made practically nothing but provision for the flesh, and it has brought in its trail trouble and distraction, greed and conquest, battles and bloodshed and last, not the least, the Congo and the Peru atrocities. 'The Kingdom of God,' says Christ,' is not meat and drink.' We wonder if modern Christendom can unblushingly admit this fact. 'If there be any other commandment,' we read in the Bible,' it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.' How dearly France loves her neighbour Germany, and Germany her neighbour Russia, and Austria her neighbour Italy, and how keenly conscious Christian England is of the affection of her Christian neighbours in her 'splendid isolation!' Says Jesus Christ:—'Let us follow after the things that make for peace.' The things that make for peace in modern Christendom are guns. The balance of peace is kept by an increasing number of Dreadnoughts. It is Topsyturvydom with a vengeance. The 'greedy, ambitious, jealous, noisy, sordid, vulgar, busy, practical, restless, aggressive, mundane Western'—as the Right Hon'ble Lord Killanin describes him in the Nineteenth Century—is exactly the reverse of what the teachings of Christ should have made him. Matters, indeed, have come to this pass that if Christ were to come back and visit South Africa, he would be put to prison by his followers there for being an Asiatic and made to do scavenging work in the streets of Volksraat!

"The Muslims have gone to the opposite direction from the teachings of Muhammad. So have the modern Buddhists from the teachings of Buddha. The Hindus are by no means an exception to the rule. Says the Bhagvad Gita:—'Who sitteth, controlling the organs of action, but dwelling in his mind on the objects of the senses, that bewildered man is called a hypocrite. But who, controlling the senses by the mind, O Arjuna, with the organs of action without attachment, performeth yoga by action, he is worthy.' And modern Hindudom has been a mass of Inaction."

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

Wanted a Supreme Court at Delhi.

18. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"A retired Indian officer writing to the Pioneer suggests the establishment of a Supreme Court of Appeal at Delhi. Apparently the object is to minimise the cost and trouble in going to the Privy Council for appeals against the Indian High Court decision. Within India a Supreme Court of Appeal would no doubt facilitate such appeals. But there are many other matters to be considered in this connection and several important principles have to be settled. If India is to be self-contained and detached from Great Britain as far as possible, the proposal would find some support. There are difficulties each way and we doubt if the Home authorities have decided on what lines India should advance. They have decided that India cannot proceed on Colonial lines, because Indian problems are not like British problems. To begin with the people are black—a serious handicap to progress. India must solve her problems by herself. Then the idea of the Supreme Court at Delhi gains strength. In that case India will have justice suited to her colour. But should the Privy Council in England lose India from its jurisdiction? The ideal of unity of the Empire becomes weak in that case, but unity in the case of India cannot be maintained, as India by reason of colour cannot unite with the Empire as regards privileges. When Lord Haldane says that the Privy Council is the one unique cementing and unifying force in the British Empire, can it be that he means Empire with India left out?"

The Punjab Village Criminal Courts Bill.

19. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"Cautious parents do not readily trust their children with even toy-guns. The fate of the Punjab Village Criminal Courts Bill smacks of some such extra dose of prudence on the part of the affectionate guardians of the people concerned. The proposed Village Benches were to try only petty cases of hurt and insult and not to inflict fines above twenty rupees. Further reflection has apparently led the authorities to revise their estimate of the capacity of the Punjab village folks to make proper use of even so little criminal power, and the paternal Sirkar has exercised its discretionary authority in respect of a toy-gun within the reach of the bearded children of the Punjab villages. An impression prevails that the Government prefers to see the working of the Civil Panchayat Act before passing the Criminal Courts Bill. The caution may be all right so far as it concerns the authorities, but from the popular point of view people who can be trusted with Civil Panchayats could be trusted also with 'petty cases of hurt and insult,' in view, at any rate, of their educative value."

(b)—Police.

The police.

20. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab thinks that there has been too much of abuse of the police and it might interfere with their usefulness. Just the contrary I think, abuse is the salt of official life in the lower grade. The more they get, the better it is for them. For if the abuse is unjust, it serves to amuse as it hurts the deliverer himself. If the abuse is just, then it serves to stimulate correction. The police exercise very great powers to restrain other people's rights. As compared with their education and fitness, their chance of doing right is limited and they do a great deal of wrong. It is better that every Government official before entering upon his duties which involve interference with other people, anticipates abuse and avoids blunders which are the cause of abuse. The more powers he exercises, the more is the abuse. Even Jesus was abused, Cæsar was abused. But these abuses came back and served to disgrace those who delivered them. But the abuse of the police which was begun seven years ago continues astonishingly and His Honour himself has not spared them this year."

The Punjab Police.

* * * * * * *

"The Deputy Commissioner and the Superintendent of Police, Lahore, point out that service in the police at the head-quarters of the district is very unpopular and that great difficulty is experienced in keeping the force up to the sanctioned strength. Both these officers recommended a special allowance for Lahore. But the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Central Range, makes a suggestion of general application. He is in favour of a separate and special recruitment for service in large towns, and says 'the town policeman needs a special training in regulating traffic, controlling street crowds, in dealing with offences under municipal and other local laws and regulations, in cases of cruelty to animals, and such like. His duties are more arduous and expenses greater and he needs to be a man of some education and greater intelligence than the district policeman. We can get all this by paying for it but not otherwise. I feel convinced until we specialise in our town police we shall never acquire police efficiency in our big towns.' For large towns the recruitment should be quite separate and on specially improved terms. Of course this would mean addition to the expenditure on the police, but we do not see how it can be helped. The additional expenditure is absolutely necessary, and must be incurred."

Murder of Constable Roti Lal Roy.

22. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"An unfortunate incident of the week is the murder at Dacca of head constable Roti Lal Roy who was on special duty in connection with the Dacca conspiracy case. * * * The tragic incident was quite unexpected and has shocked the whole country. We fervently hope that in this dastardly outrage we have seen the last of these maniacs."

(d)—Education.

The number of 'failed' candidates in the Punjab University.

23. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 31st August 1912 (received on the 1st October 1912) :—

* * * * * * *

"Possibly what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. In England or America it will not do to have 'failure' predominate; there 'pass' must be the rule and 'failure' an exception. Possibly this condition is not applicable to India. Since it is the ruling race who have introduced the system we have before us the most difficult task of divining their inner thoughts. It is possible that they may be looking at the question from the point of view of nationalism: a nationalistic consideration involves a policy, i.e.; a certain inarticulate or unexpressed end; it may be a matter of policy for aught we know: let us consider the standpoint from which the European official mind may possibly be looking at the question: The larger the number of graduates in the country the wider the discontent and dissatisfaction with the existing states of affairs. At this point the once purely educational problem assumes a political aspect: possibly, rather we should say probably, the European mind in India approaches this problem from a political point of view: once the problem assumes a political aspect personal feelings and humanitarian considerations cannot be allowed to intervene.

"It would be worth while to go into the question—which gives rise to greater discontent and dissatisfaction, increase in the number of graduates and under-graduates, or stiff rules and an unnatural system of examination which causes 'failure' to dominate over University affairs? It is our conviction, that whatever the amount of discontent or dissatisfaction inseperable from enlightenment and education, the discontent and dissatisfaction produced by failures dominating over education are far more acute and widespread: if there be risks and dangers in allowing a large number of young men from the Punjab to become graduates, there is much greater risk and a real political danger in allowing the impression to prevail in the minds of the educated classes that for some considerations, political or otherwise, the natural course of things has been reversed, and that an University is worked for a negative end, the positive end being to pass and the negative to fail. The problem we think requires much more critical examination and we mean to proceed with it. But there is another hypothesis, viz., that the young Indian mind is so feeble or radically weak as to be incapable of wholly or sufficiently absorbing Western learning, scientific or literary, and thus involving heavy failures; in other words, the natural incapacity of young Indians will not suffer them to become graduates beyond one out of every three. Cramming and all that sort of bend of mind will come under this head."

The proposed Aligarh University.

24. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 1st October 1912, publishes a letter from Saadat Ali Shah, B.A., LL.B., a pleader of Garhshankar (Hoshiarpur district), who forwards to the paper a copy of a notice served by him on the Hon'ble Raja Muhammad Ali Khan, President of the Muslim University Foundation Committee, on behalf of Chaudhris Niaz Ali Khan, Ghulam Ahmad Khan and Abdul Rahman Khan of Garhshankar, who gave Rs. 100, Rs. 100 and Rs. 25, respectively, for the University proposed to be established at Aligarh. The notice tells the Raja that, in the event of the University not being established on the lines originally laid down, the contributions from the Chaudhris should be refunded to them, failing which a regular suit will be instituted for the recovery of the same.

Commenting on the above the Editor says that the contents of the notice show that the Muslim public is not prepared to accept the kind of University with which Muhammadans are threatened by Government. He is, nevertheless, of opinion that Sayad Saadat Ali Shah has been rather hasty in serving his notice on the Raja of Mahmudabad. Besides, even if Muhammadans do not get the University they desire still no one should demand back the money once given by him. The amount collected should be allowed to remain intact, to be spent according to the wishes of the community.

(f) Railways and Communications.

The Railway conference.

25. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 28th September 1912 :—

"This year the Conference opened its session at Simla on Monday, the 23rd instant. Mr. E. A Neville, Agent of the Bengal and North-Western Railway, presided and delivered his inaugural address of great length but of little interest to the general public. Judging from the proceedings of the last two years, it almost looks that the annual Conference of the association of railway magnates has degenerated into a defence association of capitalists. Presumably this was not the object with which the Association and the Conference were brought into existence. The Railways have certainly their interests to safeguard, but it is well to remember that they are the property of the State. This being so, it stands to reason that the development of transport facilities and removal of hindrances and obstructions for traffic should engage the attention of the Conference much more than questions which have for their object an improvement of the dividend and are for their employers at the expense of the general revenues. Mr. Neville's address deals with the details of Railway administration in which the outside public are not interested. Except for a few references to the tariff simplification muddle, the postal and telegraph controversy and the owner's risk and railway risk rates, it is wholly a departmental disquisition. Never before was the president's address so devoid of general interest and value as on the present occasion. Even on matters of technical interest the president has little or nothing of value to say. He contents himself with cursory remarks of a kind which may be expected from a mediocrity whose chief boast is length of service."

Dearth of ghi and milk in India.

26. Writing under the heading "Dearth of ghi and milk" the Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 21st (received on the 30th) September 1912, suggests the establishment, by Government and municipalities, of dairy farms in all large cities, in order to remedy the evil. It makes the further suggestion that the Local Government also should, in imitation of the United Provinces Government, pass a law penalising the adulteration of milk, ghi and other edibles. As to the municipal committees in the Punjab, they should appoint Inspectors of food, vegetables and fruit.

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

The Turko-Italian war.

1. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912, publishes a letter under the heading "Genuine draft of the peace treaty between Turkey and Italy." The writer—Hakim Amin-ud-din, Barrister-at-Law, Lyallpur—has himself drawn up the draft, according to which Turkey cedes Crete to Italy, but half the revenues of the island are to be paid to the Porte, which is also to be paid an indemnity of £2,000,000 by the Italian Government. By way of comment the writer asserts that the cessation of hostilities on the above terms would prove most advantageous for the Turks. European statesmen cannot hit on any plan to end the war, because each of the great powers wishes to benefit by the collision between Italy and Turkey. The Tripolitan question was settled by the Foreign offices of these powers before war ever broke out. Indeed, Italy would not, otherwise, have dared to invade Tripoli in defiance of all moral and international laws. It would be intolerable for Europeans to see Italy return empty-handed from Tripoli and have to pay an indemnity to the Turks into the bargain. They, on the contrary, have ideas of partitioning Turkey and handing over a large portion to Italy. Under the circumstances, the Turks had better conclude peace by ceding to Italy the Island of Crete, which is of no use to them and over which they frequently come into collision with the Greeks. It may confidently be said that, if they retain Tripoli and continue to treat the Arabs (there) in their present considerate and loving manner, they will make themselves masters of Tunis, Algiers and Morocco within ten years. If they set up factories for the manufacture of arms and ammunition in Africa the larger part of the Dark continent will become theirs, and many new Muslim kingdoms will appear there.

In the same issue the paper publishes an article headed "The first anniversary of the death of the martyrs of Tripoli," in the course of which the Italian invasion and the conduct of the European powers "in patting Italy on the back" comes in for strong condemnation. The Turks are praised for the good account they have given of themselves and the Editor further says that the Tripolitan war has proved a blessing in disguise. It has awakened their (Muhammadan) sleeping nationality and provided means for them to regain their lost greatness; it has united and bound together the Muhammadans scattered over the world.

The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 7th October 1912, says that the day on which Turkey buys peace in return for even the least part of Tripoli will be the blackest one for her and the whole of the Islamic world.

The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 9th October 1912:—

"As we go to press, the suspense about the result of the peace negotiations between Turkish and Italian representatives is not ended. Earlier telegrams are full of sinister rumours to the effect that the Ottoman Government will cede practically the whole of Tripoli to Italy and leave the gallant Arabs and Turks, who are fighting heroically for their home land and Islam, to the tender mercies of the Italians. We hope the reports will prove unfounded and that the Mukhtar Cabinet will not prove false to the Fatherland by concluding a disgraceful peace. A peace at such a price will inflict a deadly blow at the prestige of Turkey. It will degrade it in the eyes of the whole Muslim world and so far from warding off the Balkan crisis will hasten the downfall of the Ottoman Empire. The Turco-Italian War is not costing much to Turkey. The expenses incurred by the Porte are a mere bagatelle as compared with the heavy military expenditure in which Italy is involved. The brave Arabs and their heroic Turkish leaders do not want much from the Caliphate except moral support. If moral countenance is withdrawn as the result of a cowardly peace, the new Cabinet will not only cover itself with undying infamy but with its own disgrace drag down the name of Islam. Ghazi Mukhtar Pasha should not bring discredit on his name. The Sultan is a mere figure-head. Most of the members of the Cabinet are hardly trustworthy. But will the hero of the Russo-Turkish war conclude peace on terms derogatory to Turkey, derogatory to the Khilafat and derogatory to Islam? If Italy threatens an invasion of European Turkey, let her do her worst. Are the sons of Osman, who wrested Sicily from Italy, who carried their conquests to the walls of Vienna, whose brethren forced a tribute from the Russians, fallen so low as to be intimidated by threats of war on the part of Italy and the Balkan States combined? If they are to be turned out from Europe, let them be turned out honourably. It is better to die as heroes than to accept a degrading peace. The eyes of the Muslim world are turned towards them. Will they justify the hopes entertained by their co-religionists?"

The Sennousis.

2. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912, publishes a communication headed "The blood-stained Sennousi; the sword is in the hands of the frenzied." The writer—Khwaja Hasan Nizami, of Delhi—says that some years back he was of opinion that dervishes ought to eschew politics and bloodshed, and so far as India is concerned he still holds the same view, but in other Muslim countries, where Islam is being attacked by heathenism, it is different; there it is the duty of every Muhammadan to fight. He then quotes an extract from a book called the Faizan-i-Sennousi which he is on the point of publishing in praise of Syed Ahmed Sharif, Sennousi, for the great help that individual has rendered the Turks in Tripoli. Even their enemies now admit that the Sennousis have a splendid future before them and will surely some day hold worldwide power. Europe knows that these frenzied Africans are about to unsheathe their swords, and this is why it has united and come to an understanding to end the days of Turkey. Zul Haj is only one month off, but it is difficult to say what changes will be witnessed during the interval. There exists a prophecy about the appearance of Imam Mehdi in this month in the present year 1330 of the Hijra era. The event is also predicted to take place in 1335 or 1340, but the signs heralding Mehdi's advent must appear by Zul Haj next. The part recently played by dervishes and sufis in Morocco and Tripoli consitutes strong proof of a complete and universal awakening in the Islamic world. The sale of the Muslim country of Morocco to France led El Hiba, a recluse, to rise and cause confusion in the ranks of the French. Similarly, Syed Ahmad Sharif, Sennousi, has prevented "Italy and Company" from advancing even one step beyond the sea coast in Tripoli. European atheists may laugh, but the writer firmly believes that, in addition to the ordinary weapons of war, El Hiba and the Sennousi have "secret arms" the like of which are possessed by no other people. It has been mentioned in some papers that the followers of these two leaders believe that they cannot be injured by bullets. There is some truth in the statement; the writer received from a Sennousi Shaikh at Tanta (Egypt) a book dealing with the Sennousi sect. It describes inter alia certain processes which enable men to understand "the languages of animals" and to secure immunity from being injured with weapons. At any rate the belief is calculated to produce feelings of fearlessness in the Sennousis. In conclusion, the writer says that the war in Tripoli has proved the means of manifesting the Sennousi power to the world. "We dervishes should, therefore, pray for success to the arms of our Sennousi brothers."

The Impending war.

3. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 5th October 1912:—

"The war-dogs are straining at the leash and, for aught one knows, they may have ere these words reach the reader, plunged the Middle East in a conflict full of far-reaching possibilities. Serious as the trouble in the Balkans has been for some time past, it has during the current week assumed alarming proportions, and the situation has developed with phenomenal rapidity, the telegrams are full of ominous significance and it will be one of the most dramatic surprises of the day, if war is now averted at all. For circumstances point to the inevitable conclusion that history is going to repeat itself after the lifetime of a generation. In the seventies, a European conference was convened by Austria to 'help Turkey in effecting internal reforms in her administration,' the conference being preceded by an explicit understanding among the Balkan States. When this conference failed, the Bulgarians went to war with Turkey; and though worsted in the struggle, they found a powerful champion in Russia, whose intervention led to the famous Russo-Turkish war, in which Turkey came out only second best. The present crisis is in most respects on all fours with the conflict of 1877-78 and the attendant preliminaries. Greece and the Balkan States have obviously made a definite offensive alliance to wage war on Turkey. The Austrian Minister proposed a European conference to secure administrative reforms in Turkey, and all talk of this conference has ended in a fiasco. Bulgaria, Servia and Greece are bent on forcing Turkey to settle the issues in dispute by an appeal to the god of war. And if they get defeated, as we hope they will, it is a foregone conclusion that the Great Powers of Europe, or at least some of them, will intervene to save the States from the consequences of their own foolhardiness.

"It is difficult, at this early stage, indeed, impossible, to forecast the final issue of the impending struggle with any degree of accuracy. In martial prowess and military genius, the Turk yields to none of his enemies, and the world has ere now watched with admiration, not unmixed with wonder, the spectacle of this brave race of warriors holding its own against heavy odds, and performing brilliant feats of heroism and leading the Ottoman flag to victory. The Osmanlies have not altogether lost the spirit of their forefathers, a spirit which once made them the terror of all Europe and which enabled them so easily to march in triumphant progress to the very gates of the Austrian capital. The Turk is a born soldier, and when once his innate soldierly qualities have been roused to action, he may be depended upon to give a splendid account of himself. The Turkish army is an efficient machine for purposes of offence and defence; and its organisation and morale are of the highest. Notwithstanding all this, it is not wise to ignore the difficulties which confront the Turks everywhere. Hemmed in on all sides by inveterate foes and checkmated at every step by superior diplomacy, the Turk will find it a task of formidable difficulty to defeat a combination of all the Balkan States, backed up by the countenance and even the financial resources of the rest of Europe. The prospect is not a very bright one and he will be a rash man who will venture to predict the future. In any case, this much at least is indisputable that, if once war breaks out in the Balkans, it will mark an epoch in the history of Western Europe. The coming struggle will be a life and death struggle for Turkey, and nothing less than the very existence of the Ottoman empire will hinge on the result of the war. Either the Turks will be swept off from the map of Europe and forced bag and baggage back to Asia—once the cradle of their vanished glory—or the Sick Man of Europe will rejuvenate and rehabilitate himself in the eyes of the whole world. Unknown and unfathomable though the future be, there can be no questioning the gravity of the situation; and the news from the Balkans for the next few days will be scanned by eager Musalmans with great anxiety. At the same time, the prayers of the whole Islamic world will ascend to the Throne of the Almighty for the success of the arms of Turkey, which is the aggrieved party, and for the triumph of the cause of the Caliph of Islam, which is also the cause of justice and righteousness.

The Islamic world.

4. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912, publishes some Urdu verses entitled "A voice from heaven," the production of the Assistant Editor. The poet calls on the Muslim to throw off his sleep. "Infidels have invaded thy house and are about to end thy days." Muhammadans, he cries, must kill and be killed. Recent events in the Balkans lead him on to declare that this war between heathenism and Islam will exterminate God's creatures. * * * "This is not the time for indifference, seeing that thou hast begun to be oppressed. * * * Thou art the representative of those ancestors who used to rule the world. * * * Fear not the gun and cannon (and) lay down thy life fearlessly."

Persian affairs.

5. Writing under the heading "Unfortunate Persia," the Muin (Amritsar), of the 1st October 1912, says that the sacred land is being trampled under the hoofs of devilish and inhuman Russians, and it recounts and condemns the alleged Muscovite atrocities in Persia, speaking of Peter the Great as Satan's grandfather and of "the blood thirsty Nicholas II" as "the worthy descendant of the devilish spirit (Peter)". Even the most bigoted enemy of Islam, it adds, cannot but admit that Russia is determined to end the independence of Persia by annexation. Some mean-minded European diplomats have the shamelessness to assert even now that it is owing to administrative incompetence in her sons that Persia has fallen on her present evil days. After remarking that this allegation has been contradicted by Mr. Shuster, the paper finds fault with the Persian Government for having strangled the Nationalists, in accordance with Sir Edward Grey's advice to accede to the Russian demands. This advice has cost the Government its independence and led to the occupation of Northern Persia by Muscovite forces after the shedding of rivers of blood. It is also about to end the days of Persia; but Sir Edward Grey cares nothing for his word, nor does he champion the cause of the oppressed and friendless. He is equally indifferent to the religious feelings of crores of admittedly loyal and devoted Muslim British subjects, and to the prestige and permanence of the British rule in Asia. He can only dance to the tune that Russia may choose to play, and now that he has had a conference with the Russian Foreign Minister it is difficult to say what fate is to befall unfortunate Persia.

Egyptian affairs.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 2nd October 1912, publishes a letter from a Cairo correspondent named Abu Said, who says that drinking, gambling, shamelessness and pleasure accompanied Europeans (? English) to Egypt, and that "these filthy things have fouled the pure and limpid springs of Arabia." These people wish to bring Egypt, which is the key of both the east and west, "wholly near to them in one way or another." They devise new means daily to bring about this consummation. European statesmen study treaties even more than the Bible, so that they may gain this object by manipulating political treaties just as they did the Testaments. Christian Missionaries too have been spending money like water in order to make the Prophet's followers in Egypt believe in the Trinity. There is no dearth of the idle and unemployed in the Land of the Pharaohs, while there is a plethora of wealth and women in Christian compounds. The long beard of the Missionaries, the perfumed hair of (Christian) beauties and the golden bait have, however, failed to persuade Muhammadans to abjure their religion. European politicians, moreover, are engaged in killing indigenous industries, and any one opposing them has to suffer great troubles.

Indian Muhammadans and Italian, Russian, and French manufactures.

7. The Tahzib-ul-Niswan (Lahore), of the 5th October 1912, publishes a letter headed "Boycott" from the pen of one, Saiha Begum, daughter of Tahsildar Mir Sayad Husain. The writer urges Indian Muhammadans to boycott the manufactures of Italy, Russia, and France, in retaliation for the oppression practised by these countries in Tripoli, Persia, and Morocco respectively.

Commenting on the above the manager of the paper asks the Muslim traders in Calcutta, Madras, Bombay and Karachi to lead the movement and to publish a list of Italian, Russian, and French manufactures.

The Times' recent article on Pan-Islamism in India.

8. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 3rd October 1912, has a paragraph headed "Is this kindness from Sir John Hewett?", in which it remarks that, if Capital is right in saying that the recent article in the Times on Pan-Islamism in India is from the pen of Sir John, then he has been guilty of a grossly mean attack on Muhammadans, whom he does not seem to have understood in spite of having spent a lifetime in this country.

The Congress Presidency.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 5th October 1912 :—

"The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale has sent a cablegram to the General Secretaries of the Indian National Congress informing them that it is impossible for him to preside over the deliberations of the Congress this year. The cablegram was received on the 29th ultimo and stated 'Informed Sinha June my presiding impossible.' In face of this the Reception Committee at Bankipore can no longer insist on refusing to have Mr. Mudholkar. But it almost looks that it is now the turn of Mr. Mudholkar to decline a possible offer 'with thanks.' Behar can smooth matters. It can withdraw its objections. If it does not, history repeats itself. Bankipore may follow the example of Lahore if not of Surat. Meanwhile the situation has become lively and interesting by the vote of censure passed by Behar on the All-India Congress Committee."

Lala Lajpat Rai at Benares.

10. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 5th October 1912 :—

"The chairman of the Benares Municipal Board is the District Collector in Benares. It is he who refused to lend the use of the Town Hall for a couple of lectures lately delivered by Lala Lajpat Rai on depressed classes. That functionary is reported to have replied as follows to an application asking for the use of Town Hall:—

"Of Lala Lajpat Rai I know nothing except that he was deported some years ago for making inflammatory speeches. This is hardly a recommendation in one who wishes to give addresses in the Town Hall. I should therefore be obliged if you would give me further information as to who is organising these public meetings and what object is in view. I shall require a guarantee that no contentious subjects will be brought forward."

Where ignorance is bliss, it is folly to be wise. If the Collector did not know who Lala Lajpat Rai is and if he did not wish to lend the use of the Town Hall, he need not have insulted one of the greatest Indians of the day in the manner he has done. The Collector's letter carries with it its own condemnation and is a further instance of the pretensions of the average civilian to be regarded as the Subjantawala."

The All-India Hindu Association.

11. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912:—

"We are glad to be able to announce that opinion is unanimous in Upper India as regards the necessity for the All-India Hindu Association. The Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is very keen about it. He will attend the Punjab Hindu Conference at Delhi accompanied by the leading Hindus of Allahabad and Lucknow. The venerable patriot Babu Surendra Nath Banerjea is amongst the staunchest supporters of the movement. Owing to the Poojah it may not be possible for many of the leaders from Bengal to attend the Conference. But it is expected that they will manage to depute a few to represent them in the deliberations. It would be an excellent thing to offer the Presidentship of the All-India Association to Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and to select a recognised leader from each province as Vice-President. Of course there will be a General Secretary and one or two Assistant Secretaries who will all be honorary workers. But there should be a well paid, capable and energetic man to carry on the work of the Association from year end to year end under the instruction of the honorary workers who are all professional men. Our friends in Delhi, who wish to have the headquarters in their midst, have great responsibilities. We hope they will rise to the occasion and show that they are capable of bearing them with credit to themselves and honour to the country."

Home Rule for India.

12. The following is an extract from a letter contributed by S. Wazir Hasan, Secretary, All-India Muslim League, and published in the Observer (Lahore), of the 9th October 1912:—

* * * * * * *

"The object of this letter, however, is not to subject Lord Crewe's views to any critical examination. There shall always be British politicians who will characterise the ideal of self-government in India as a 'vision' and an 'impossibility.' But the views of Lord Crewe and of others holding similar views are, I think, clearly shaped by the trend and the form which the question of self-government has so far been given in India. Our formula is 'self-government on Colonial lines.' What a mass of confusion of thoughts those few words evoke and how much hazy and bewildering the idea underlying them! Against this formula in its bald and naked form will always be directed criticism of the nature directed by Lord Crewe and, it must be admitted, with great plausibility. Does not our prayer as framed necessarily imply the entire withdrawal of British troops and British officials? Does it not ignore to take into account 'hundreds of millions of men' of different races, creeds and traditions inhabiting India? Is it then very wrong to say that such a demand is an 'impossibility' to concede? Which of the different constitutions that are enjoyed by the several colonies we want? Is the constitution of Canada, of the Common wealth of Australia, of the Colony of the Transvaal or of the Crown Colonies, which of these various systems of government is our ideal? Is party government by means of cabinet our goal? Is not home rule on the lines of the Bill for Ireland a better substitute for a Colonial form of government? Are we to introduce any one of these en bloc in our country? If not, how do we propose to adapt the borrowed constitution to the peculiar conditions of India? The absence of such details, which in effect constitute the very essence of the question, has helped the forces of criticism.

"Behind the differences in the several systems of government above adverted to, we have the central fact of government by the people and the common factor of the suzerainty of the British crown. With these two predominant principles as our guide, we should join our heads together and draw a scheme, with necessary details, of responsible government in India. This scheme ought to show that neither a wholesale withdrawal of British troops, nor the expulsion of British officials is a necessary condition of a system of government by the people in India. It should further indicate that the utmost care has been taken in adapting the scheme to the peculiar conditions obtaining in India—the bugbear too frequently set up against the aspirations of the educated Indians. Let then such a scheme carefully and coolly thought out be our 'ideal,' towards which we should steadily and gradually march and let us drop at once all this hollow cant of 'self-government on the Colonial lines.' It should be realised that a system of popular Government for India must in the nature of things be unique in its character and has to be tried without drawing to any appreciable extent upon the stock of our experiences derived from the other countries in the working of the details.

"If we fail to draw the desired sketch, then we, at least the present generation, must in all fairness acknowledge that self-government in India is an 'impossibility' and a 'dream.' I am not, however, without hopes of success. The course herein is suggested is full of obvious advantages. We will have a definite and practical ideal, a clear conception of the several steps leading to it, and of almost measured distance between the successive steps and the final goal. Antagonistic criticism will lose half of its force by losing all the opportunities of setting off the gross indefiniteness of the present cry. All criticism will then range round the points of detail and will have the effect of improving them. With such a scheme before us we will have our path of progress illuminated to the farthest end. We will then be in a position without waste of energy to create and develope circumstances out of which would successively emerge the desired stages. It should be borne in mind that the ideal which we set up can only be reached at by a process of evolution and not by any act of imposition. Our principle of action would be to create circumstances favouring the evolution and the duty of our civilized and liberal Government would be one of help and co-operation in our efforts.

"I may now be permitted to make some observations of a practical nature, which to my mind almost constitute conditions precedent to the success of the scheme which we may set up as our goal. The first step in my opinion is to secure real, genuine and effective co-operation amongst the several Indian communities. Indeed, the question is of such, a vital importance that I need offer no apology for treating it at some length. The measure of success in that direction must necessarily be in proportion to the sincerity of motives, breadth of views, clearness of political vision, purity of heart and freedom of thought with which the search for the modus vivendi is made. If in devising a system of popular government in India the rule of 'government by majority' is taken to be the beacon light for our political activities, the doom of the system may safely be predicted. Modern thought regards the theory of 'one man one vote' as of doubtful utility. We must, therefore, modify that rule in the light of our experiences and exigencies of the peculiar conditions prevailing in this country. The co-operation and harmony amongst the various Indian communities should be based upon some principle other than the one which is nourished by the milk of Benthamite theories. Such a principle, I venture to say, is of 'equality.' It may be stated without fear of contradiction that it is impossible to attain the real and enduring harmony without 'equality.' Now what is equality? It is placing limitations and restraints upon the stronger and adding strength to the weaker. Dead weights must be imposed upon the lighter horse to create an equality with his heavier companion in the race. Self-imposed restraints deserve the noble appellation of self-sacrifices. By so doing we would be furthering the cause of true liberalism and this in my humble opinion can be the only basic principle of co-operation. No amount of vows against cow-killing on the part of the Mussalmans and against interference with the language (Urdu) on the part of the Hindus will create real and subsisting harmony between the two great communities. We must come to an agreement as to principles of co-operation.

"The next item in our programme should be combat, combined and sustained, against the illiteracy of the masses. Social and hygienic reforms should also be vigorously and fearlessly pushed through. I do not for a moment mean that these items be taken in hand scrupulously in the order in which they are herein set out. Some of them indeed may conveniently and perhaps with advantage be simultaneously attended to. I must stop now. But before I do so, I feel bound to say that the steps suggested are surer and firmer which will lead us nearer and nearer to our goal than our persistent demand devoid of all definiteness or self-government on the lines of the Colonies."

III.—Native States.

Kashmir affairs.

13. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912, publishes a letter headed "Hell in Heaven" in which the writer blames the Kashmir Muhammadans themselves for their present deplorable condition. To begin with, their spiritual leaders and well-to-do co-religionists stand in the way of the Muslim community receiving education. The Maulvies also prevent the grievances of the Prophet's followers being laid before the State authorities. The correspondent then goes on to complain that the conduct of the Managers and teachers of schools and colleges in the State tends to prevent Muhammadan students from joining these institutions, and that the object of the technical institute proposed to be established at Srinagar is to enable Hindu youths to learn different arts and industries from Muhammadan experts, with a view to their competing with Musalmans even in the field of art, which has so far been a Muslim monoply. The Kashmir Darbar proposes to locate a Hindu orphanage in a mosque at Srinagar. Is not this, asks the writer, the kind of deed that has led to bloodshed and scores of riots in India in the past? Not that he advises his co-religionists in Kashmir to cause a disturbance; they ought to lay the matter before the Maharaja and the Resident. They should, moreover, collect in their thousands and line the route taken by the Viceroy from Baramula to Srinagar on the occasion of his visit to Kashmir, with a view to representing their case. If this cannot be done they should wait on His Excellency in a body at Srinagar. The State officials will undoubtedly stand in their way, but their Islamic sense of self-respect should keep them firm. The writer requests the Hon'ble Mr. Frazer, Resident in Kashmir, to enquire into the matter and to realise the wishes of the Prophet's followers. He adds that, sometime ago, the Kashmir Muhammadans were informed that a Muslim orphanage would be established at Srinagar in commemoration of the Coronation Durbar. They were also told to submit a representation asking for the location of the orphanage in the mosque in question. The Resident should kindly enquire whether this document speaks of a Muhammadan or a Hindu orphanage, as now it is a Hindu one that is to be located there.

The Punjab Hindu Sabha.

14. Writing under the heading "Hindu Sabha, Punjab, and those who run it", the Hindustan (Lahore), of the 2nd October 1912, says that the indifference of the Punjab Hindus to the forthcoming Hindu Conference is attributable to the present inanimate office bearers of the Sabha. These gentlemen are not only lacking in the requisite enthusiasm, energy, love of truth, and the spirit of sacrifice, but they also keep the Sabha's door so tightly shut that no one, unless cast in their mould, may go in against their wishes. This has converted a useful and important society into a lifeless institution, and it keeps away those who truly love, and feel for, the Hindu community. These gentlemen, who at present monopolise the Sabha, are noted, not for services to Hindus, but for their wealth, and they can spare no time to further the work undertaken by the society in question. They are, indeed, wholly devoid of the amount of moral courage and truthfulness necessary for running a great movement. If the Hindu Sabha lacks the moral courage to raise its voice against the evils which are grinding down Hindus, if it cannot lend its support to the new social movements that are being called into existence by changed circumstances, then it serves no useful purpose. It is, complains the Editor, absolutely indifferent to the shuddhi movement, which gives hope of social justice to thousands of oppressed "untouchable" Hindus. It is necessary therefore for others to join the Sabha and either push the present office-bearers into the background or bring them into the right path.

Hindu Conference at Delhi.

15. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912:—

"An Allahabad paper complains that the proposed Hindu Conference at Delhi has excited but little enthusiasm in the Punjab and that no eagerness whatever is displayed either in electing delegates or otherwise furthering the aims and objects of the Conference. There is no doubt some truth in the complaint but there is not the least doubt that the fault lies with the people themselves. The position is this. The Hindus of the Punjab feel that they want an organisation that will protect and safeguard their rights and will do for them what the Muslim League has done for their Muhammadan brethren, but this has not been done. Our countrymen at Delhi are doing all they can to ensure the success of the Conference, but it is clear that their efforts will not avail much unless all the districts of the Province are properly represented at the Conference. What is wanted is enthusiasm and organisation, and then a great deal of work is sure to be done."

A suggestion.

16. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 3rd October 1912, publishes a letter under the heading "Wanted the blood of young men." The writer "A Soldier," says that no progress has so far been achieved by any religion which has not produced men reckless of their lives. He urges therefore the students of the Dayanand Anglo-Vedic College "to prepare to dedicate their lives to the service of" the College and the Arya Samaj. "Let us also found, on the Salvation Army's model, a Dayanand Mission, the mortar for the foundation of which should be the spirit of sacrifice and the blood and bones of young men." The result will be that the sacred light of the Vedic religion will spread to every nook and corner of the world.

VI.—Legislation.

Revised Punjab Legislative Council Regulations.

17. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 6th October 1912 :—

"The revised Council Regulations for the Legislative Councils of Bombay, the United Provinces and the Punjab have been published in the Gazette of India. In the Punjab the number of elected members is increased from five to eight and official members are reduced from nineteen to sixteen, the total number remaining at twenty-four as before. The eight elected members will be the following: One by the Punjab University, three by the Municipal and Cantonment Committees, one by the Punjab Chamber of Commerce and three by the District Boards. These last will represent the increase in the number of elected members and have been already anticipated by public report. The Punjab Chamber of Commerce is retained as an electorate as the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab will have jurisdiction in certain matters in the new Province of Delhi. No provision has been made for the representation of the interests of Indian commerce and industry.

* * * * * * *

"The thanks of the public are undoubtedly due to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor for recommending an increase in the number of elected members, but we cannot help noting that even under the revised regulations several important interests will remain unrepresented."

The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 11th October 1912 :—

"We published yesterday the list of the new Municipal Committees that have been added to the three Municipal groups for the election of members to the Punjab Legislative Council under the revised regulations. The Municipal Committee of Delhi has been omitted. Thus the anomalous position of the Municipality of the new capital of India will be that while the Punjab Chamber of Commerce will retain the right of electing a member to the Punjab Legislative Council the Municipality will have no right of representation to either the Punjab or the Imperial Legislative Council, and will not even form one of a group of municipalities with the right of representation. The three new electorates are the three groups of District Boards, namely, the Cis-Sutlej group, the Central Group and the Western Group. These six constituencies are likely to be keenly contested. To-day we shall not suggest any names, but it is our duty to impress upon the Municipalities and District Boards concerned the imperative need of electing the best and the most representative candidates who are likely to serve the interests of their constituencies and the Province loyally and faithfully. The Hindus particularly stand in need of cohesion. A municipality of candidates will have the certain effect of losing a constituency, and the candidates will have to decide among themselves whether they will prefer the loss of a seat to retirement in favour of the best and most likely candidate. The time has surely come for all classes to close up their ranks and to move in line towards the common goal."

The Punjab Legislative Council.

18. In an article on the recent meeting of the Punjab Legislative Council the Panjabee (Lahore), of October 5th, 1912, has the following remarks :—

* * * * * * * *

"Much of the opposition to and adverse criticism of Bills generally introduced by the Government is due to a denial of opportunity to study and examine questions which occupy the attention of official members for years together. We are not aware whether there are any insuperable obstacles in the way of the Government to extend the circle of non-officials to whom draft Bills are sent for opinion and to appoint a standing committee of the Legislative Council to discuss the merits of opinions so received before Bills are actually framed for submission to the Legislative Council. But the matter seems to deserve the attention of the Government both to obviate, the necessity of withdrawing Bills as has been done in the case of the Criminal Justice Bill and to reduce the volume of public criticism that important measures are rushed through the Council within sufficient time for examination and discussion. We believe there is in the United Provinces a practice of referring proposed legislative measures to a mixed committee of officials and non-officials before Bills are actually framed. It has been found advantageous both by the Government and by the general public and spoken of in appreciative terms by Sir John Hewett. If as is sometimes claimed the United Provinces are the only administration with which the Punjab can compare itself there is obviously no reason why this good and useful practice should not be copied by the Local Government.

"As regards the actual work done by the Council at the last meeting we regret to have to observe that the replies vouchsafed by the Government to the questions asked by Hon'ble members were in very many cases not only unsatisfactory but uninforming and indefinite, if not also curt as in some other provinces which show by the replies that the Government is impatient and uncommunicative. The object of interpellation being to give information of a kind that will explain official point of view so that there may be no misrepresentation of facts, the answers should be full and informing whether or not they are also convincing to critics. In this respect the Punjab Government has been complimented in and beyond the province and we fully trust that this will always be a feature of this Government, reminding the public of the personal qualities of the present Lieutenant-Governor. Even at the last meeting the replies vouchsafed to a number of important questions were full, and by way of illustrating our remark we may refer to question No. I (1) on the practice of superannuation in Provincial Civil Service, No. I (10) on the proposal to increase the pay of clerks, and No. IV (5) on the need of improving the morale of the police force. Indeed, in one case, e.g., III (10) re delay in publishing the report of the Industrial Committee, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor supplemented the written reply of the member in charge of the department. We are glad of this special feature of the Punjab Council and are thankful for it to His Honour and to the official members. Still the tendency to be curt is there and possibly it is due, as stated by the Hon'ble Mr. Tollinton with reference to question No. III (15) on raids and dacoities, to insufficiency of notice. The questions and the replies they elicited are important enough for separate notice, but we may briefly refer to the general disinclination of the Government (1) to accept suggestions the value of which is not denied, and (2) to adopt remedies for evils the existence of which is admitted. The official tendency is to uphold the existing order of things, and, when caught tripping, to urge extenuating circumstances, to contend that those circumstances are not everlasting and to quiet further agitation by suggesting that the matter is receiving attention. Perhaps no more can be expected from the Government in the present stage of our political existence."

VII.—General Administration.

(b)—Police.

Increase of dacoities in the Punjab.

19. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 3rd October 1912, publishes an article headed "The Punjab and dacoities; worthy of the attention of the people and Government; an important question". Dacoities, says the paper, have of late been on the increase in the Punjab and in consequence the people are in serious trouble, while no one can be certain of his safety. The only satisfactory feature of the situation is that the Local Government is not inactive. The Lieutenant-Governor's review of the latest Police Administration Report shows how His Honour's heart bleeds for the people. The guardians of the public peace have failed to cope with the dacoits, and, being armed with guns and pistols, these gentlemen have also proved more than a match for the unarmed public. They not only take life and carry away money and ornaments, but also burn sahukars' bonds and account books. All the dacoities in which this has so far been done have occurred in villages, where sahukars' debtors consist generally of Muslim zamindars. By the burning of bonds and bahis belonging to Hindu money-lenders the dacoits free their Muhammadan brethren from their debts, and thus win their sympathy. It is much to be regretted that Government were unable to return a satisfactory reply to Mr. Sinha's question at the last meeting of the Viceregal Council. Sir Henry MacMahon said that the reason for the victims being chiefly Hindus was to be found in the wealth of Hindus residing in villages. But does not Government afford protection to the wealthy members of other communities and does it, in the event of their being looted, content itself with ascribing the plunder to their wealth? If Hindus are a rich people, they are the more entitled to protection from the powers that be. The Foreign Secretary would, however, have been perfectly right in saying that the event was due to Muhammadans being largely in debt to Hindus and to their natural desire to free themselves. The conduct of the dacoits in burning bonds and account books shows clearly enough that the brigands consist either of the debtors of sahukars or of Muhammadans desirous of winning the sympathy of their co-religionists. It is a fact, indeed, that the dacoits have won the sympathies of Muslim zamindars by consigning sahukars' bahis to the fire. The Editor can refer to several dacoities on sahukars in which Muhammadans, in spite of their having been informed of the offences, either rendered no help to the victims, or actually joined the brigands in the loot. The most important and noteworthy feature of the situation is, he adds, that village Muhammadans have come to regard the dacoits as ghazis and devoted lovers of Islam. It is well-known that the (Muslim) fellow-villagers of Akbar, a dacoit recently hanged in the Rawalpindi district, showed great respect for his memory; that innumerable Muhammadans attended his funeral and prayed for him; that he was praised because of his sympathy with the Muhammadan community; that one mourner went so far as to say that the deceased used to commit dacoities only to help his poor brethren in faith. The religious superstition is abroad that, so far from being a sin, it is an act of merit to commit dacoities. It is proving dangerous in the extreme, and ignorant men in villages have been joining dacoit gangs. The remedy is in the hands, neither of Government nor of Hindus, but of leading Muhammadans, who have great influence over the majority of the dacoits. If these Musalmans are genuinely desirous of ending dacoities and protecting Hindus against the oppression of dacoits, they should, by means of their preachers and lecturers, impress on the superstitions (members of their community) that Islam does not consider it meritorious to commit dacoities. Government should also ask those big zamindars, in whose ilakas ghazis of the above description are rising in large numbers, to take steps in the matter. Further, it should not only employ Sikh and Gurkha soldiers against the dacoits, but should also grant a large number of Hindus licenses to keep guns, swords, and pistols. The Punjab Government should again move the Government of India in this matter, bringing forward the true facts, as disclosed in this article.

The Police Force.

20. The Army News (Ludhiana), of the 5th October 1912, has a paragraph headed "Who is responsible for the bad name of the Police Department." Are departments, asks the paper, in which Hindus are said to predominate in bad odour and unpopular? On the contrary both Government and the public know that the Police Department is manned chiefly by Muhammadans. Who then is responsible for its bad name? Black sheep are, says the Editor, to be found in every community, but the question is, in which community do they exist in largest numbers? Fair-minded journalists should not defend oppressors and bribe-takers simply because they are co-religionists.

The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 9th October 1912:—

"Sheikh Sadi says:—

'The ox and the ass that carry grain
'Are nobler than men who give other men pain.'

"Verily, the tale of the iniquities of the police of India knows no ending and the tide of searching criticism which beats upon their serried ranks abates not its force and knows no ebb. Day after day the public press issues fourth with fresh news of their latest doings and gives prominence to the expressions of opinion indulged in by the courts of the country, from the lowest magistrates to the High Courts themselves. Public opinion has raised its head and insists on the cessation of the evil practices which have made the protection of the police a source of terror to the land. Lord Crewe with one hand pens a letter to the Government of India insisting on the most rigorous enforcement of the public demands, while with the other he indites a speech assuring the friends of India, who wage war across the floor of the House of Commons with his Lieutenant, Mr. Montague, that the practices to which they refer are greatly exaggerated. The police force of India is undoubtedly experiencing the ordeal by fire and it can but be hoped that it will come through, purged of those elements which have lessened its utility as a protector from the wrong-doer and made it a source of misery to the innocent. It may be useful, then, in this transition stage to include the police in our general survey of the corruption of Indian services, as it is not possible to produce an honest policeman, until one has satisfied oneself as to what qualities are essential to such a being and why those qualities are so seldom found in the recruits who flock to be enrolled in the various district forces. It will be found in the case of this and of all other services, with which we shall deal, that there are two outstanding factors which make for untrustworthiness in the subordinate ranks, namely, scanty pay and lack of education not only among the persons who constitute the personnel of such services, but generally among the people of the country. On the responsibility of the people for much of the corruption in the public service of the country we cannot insist too strongly, but with this aspect of the question it is here unnecessary to deal, our purpose being merely to indicate the nature of the blemishes which appear to be characteristic of the police administration of India as at present constituted. We have already shown how the Indian peasant comes into contact with subordinate Government officials in connection with the ordinary tasks of his agricultural life and how that contact is so often discreditable to both parties. We have now to see how he comes into touch with another class of officials in connection with the complication that arise, more frequently than one would suppose, were one ignorant of the conditions under which life is lived, in the simple domestic circumstances of Indian village communities.

"For police purposes the provinces of India are parcelled out into innumerable small circles, each being sufficiently small to enable every inhabitant of the country to seek the protection of the administration from the tyranny of wrong-doers without having to undergo in the course of his quest an unreasonable amount of trouble and inconvenience. It may therefore be assumed that the humblest peasant in the remotest parts of our vast peninsula is familiar with the system which has been devised to ensure his safety and freedom from molestation. The system itself is simple in the extreme and admirably adapted to the purpose for which it is intended, if only honest agents were available to give effect to the excellent intentions of the administration, and the people, for whose benefit it is intended, were firm enough to set their faces against all attempts to derive illegitimate advantage from an agency so prone to corruption.

"As seen by the people of the mofussil, the police administration of the country is focussed in the thana and its inmates who, varying in numbers according to local needs, patrol the circle entrusted to their tender mercies under the general supervision of the sub-Inspector or thanedar, in whose hands to a very great extent rests the happiness of thousands of human beings. The constables who comprise the thana staff receive a mere pittance from the Government which employs them, and are drawn, as is only to be expected, from the uneducated masses. Prospects of promotion are far from rosy. Years of meritorious service in the lower ranks on utterly insufficient pay lead in the end to the dignity of head constable, which carries with it an increase of salary which would be welcome indeed had not the recipients thereof already learnt, in the days of their apprenticeship, to regard their official stipend as but a negligible part of the income, which, with ordinary dexterity and intelligence, it is so easy to earn. The ultimate goal of the hopeful recruit is the rank of sub-inspector, which, while conferring on its holder a very large amount of responsibility and no little measure of local esteem, also enables him, by the practice of the arts of which by now he is a past master, to amass the fortune which he needs, to ensure comfort in retirement and a reasonable prospect of providing his sons with education and his daughters with dowries.

"Regrettable as such a conclusion must be to all who, in the interests of peace and security, would fain see the arm of the law strengthened against the criminal, no one who takes the trouble to consider the situation without bias can fail to admit that there is something radically wrong with the system of police administration at present obtaining in this country. Recruiting for the army and the police must follow diametrically opposite principles. The interests of the army will be equally well or better served by the recruitment of the rawest of the raw, who can be licked into shape and made efficient soldiers in the course of time; in other words, the recruit takes the tone and colour of the force. With the police it is otherwise; it is the individual and not the body corporate which predominates. Hence it is essential that in recruiting for the police some regard should be paid to the natural ability and intelligence of the candidate. It is here that the question of pay becomes important, for no person possessed of any natural intelligence and endowed with even a moderate amount of education is likely to be enthusiastic over a post which carries with it the meagre salary of 8 or 10 rupees, when with the same qualification he can, without difficulty, secure a clerkship in Government service on Rs. 15 or Rs. 20, or a post in private employ on even better pay, unless he can assure himself that the ill-paid post affords opportunities of adding by unrecognized means to the nominal salary which is guaranteed by his employer. Government must therefore be content with one of two alternatives, neither of which can by any possibility prove satisfactory, namely, the recruitment of ignorant and unintelligent persons, who must necessarily prove unfit for the work for which they are intended, or the enrolment of a more intelligent class of recruits, who, though possessed of a sufficient amount of ability to cope with the duties assigned to them, must necessarily be corrupt and dishonest in the discharge of their duties, in order to escape from the financial loss which they have incurred by refusing more lucrative appointments in other spheres.

"Now the circumstances of India are such that the policeman must espouse the cause of the unjust and the wrongdoer if he is to make his income adequate to his needs. If he tried to do otherwise, he would find himself limited to his official pittance, whereas by doing so he creates a market for his services, which are thus auctioned to the highest bidder, be he in the right or in the wrong. It is only thus that justice at times comes by her due; it is thus that injustice so often carries the day. It is only in cases where the guilty person is precluded by poverty from making a reasonable offer that the financial question plays no part in the comedy of justice and police investigations follow the course indicated by facts as they have occurred.

"We are aware that our condemnation of the system is perhaps pitched somewhat high and that the exception of virtuous conduct on the part of police officers is not altogether non-existent, but the most casual observer can satisfy himself that the investigation of cases in the first instance is so often conducted on the lines which we have indicated, that the system which allows of such laxitude, nay, necessitates it, is worthy of the severest censure and calls for searching enquiry. The officers responsible for the police administration of the country are apt to take criticism, whether at the hands of the courts or of the press, unkindly, feeling that such criticism is directed at their administration of a system for which they are not responsible. Let them rather welcome these criticisms as tending to lay bare the defects of the system and not of the administration thereof.

"In a country the majority of whose inhabitants are ready to profit by the laxity of the departments responsible for their well being and to offer the personnel of those departments substantial inducements to pander to their desires, it is the height of folly to fill such departments with ill-paid staffs, whose only inducement to enlist is the hope of benefiting themselves by serving those whose interests are not consonant with the interests of their employers. It is folly to expect justice when the paid emissaries of the law are in league with the unjust, and it is folly to expect the unjust and the evil-doer to forego the advantages accruing from a judicious use of a well filled purse. Again and again we are forced to the conclusion, that the only remedy for this lamentable state of affairs lies in the spread of education. A public opinion must be created in the country; education alone will create it. A higher moral tone among the proletariat is urgently necessary; education alone will infuse it into the ignorant masses. Intelligence is required in the candidates for employment in our public services; education alone will train such persons to make use of such natural intelligence as they may possess. Thus with the spread of education we may confidently expect to find three things which are lacking at present, namely, a higher degree of intelligence, directed into the right path by a higher moral tone which in turn will be supported and solidified by public opinion. When such a state of affairs obtains, intelligent men will not volunteer for police service until the pay and prospects thereof are improved. The virtues of education as a panacea for all ills may at times be exaggerated, but it cannot be denied that so long as the masses remain ignorant, they will remain, as they are now, a prey to those who are a little less ignorant than themselves. 'A little knowledge is a dangerous thing'; let us therefore sow the seed of knowledge, that the fruit of the tree may, ere long, become the common food of the millions, whose welfare is a sacred trust in the hands of the nation."

The Delhi police force.

21. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 5th October 1912, has a note headed "A large police force for the Imperial City of Delhi". The paper contends that, having regard to the area of the Delhi enclave, the strength of the police force proposed to be employed there is excessive. Besides, since the local military garrison is being greatly increased, the proposal will not only constitute a blot on the fame of the people of Delhi, who are peaceful by nature, but is also likely to throw an unnecessary burden on the Imperial Exchequer.

(d)—Education.

The proposed racial Universities.

22. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 3rd October 1912, publishes a leader headed "Calling a College a University". There is nothing to be surprised, says the paper ironically, at the two old colleges being re-christened as Universities. Both Hindus and Muhammadans should feel happy rather than make wry faces at the attempts which have been made to hoodwink them. What does the Government care if about a crore of rupees, wrung from the pockets of a poverty-stricken people, be thrown away? Government never urged the people to establish Universities and to turn out men begging for higher posts in the public service. Besides, if all the eight Universities in India turn out shoals of black men begging for food and disseminate so much education as to make the savages realise their condition, they will necessarily demand Swaraj, Home Rule, or self-government, and India will be converted into an Australia or Canada. It is, therefore, apparent that the leaders of the Indian people are going on demanding rights and concessions without realising and duly appreciating and weighing the various difficulties, with which the Government is confronted, in conferring on the people charters for Universities. Government is well aware that education is the mother of all demands for Swaraj and other rights. What will it say, asks the paper, when the blackies, after receiving education, ask what difference there is between them and Australians or Canadians and why any invidious distinction should be made? Alas for the awakening! When Mrs. Annie Besant went to London it was to be feared that some serious consequences would follow her visit to the Secretary of State for India. It is quite likely that she impressed on the minds of the Secretary of State that the two Colleges, the Aligarh and the Benares Colleges, are snakes, and should be kept close in a basket. The fact is that Mrs. Besant desires to work the Benares College in her own way. If the College is converted into a University, her object will not be attained and she will lose all the power and authority which she now possesses. It is, therefore, possible that the two Universities have been spoiled mainly by her efforts.

Writing under the heading "Votes for the Muslim University", the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 2nd October 1912, reports that only half a dozen of the votes so far received by it favour the acceptance of the University on the conditions laid down by Government. This shows clearly enough that the (Muslim) community has come to realise its interests; that it is gradually parting with its habit of blind imitation; and that every member of it has begun to appreciate the importance of his personal opinion. The change is likely to prove the forerunner of highly desirable results and to breathe life into the followers of Islam. The votes so far received by the Editor against the conditions proposed by Government number 504.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 7th October 1912, publishes a communication headed "An open letter to the promoters of the Muslim University scheme". The writer—Hakim Amin-ud-din, Barrister-at-Law, Lyallpur—says that Lucknow is not a suitable place for holding the meeting of the League, which will be presided over by the Right Hon'ble Sayad Amir Ali. Considering that the important question of the establishment of the Muslim University is to be discussed and decided, it is desirable that its sittings should be held at a place and in a province where there are large number of persons ready to express openly and truly their views on questions affecting their community, having the well being of the race constantly in view, and actuated by no desire to show partiality or to flatter. Indeed, the meeting should be held in a province where the people possess some independence of opinion, and who will not conceal a fact out of deference to the authorities or through fear of displeasing any other community. Such a province, says the writer, is the Punjab, and such a city is Lahore. The writer then finds fault with the Muslim deputation, which went to Simla last year to confer with the authorities respecting the Muslim University, for keeping secret the proceedings, and he declares emphatically that, if the promoters of the University scheme desire the co-operation and help of the Muslim public, they must keep the latter acquainted with all that concerns the University; in doing so, they will serve the Government and the community equally.

The Khalsa College.

23. The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 6th October 1912, publishes an article headed "Great changes in the management of the Khalsa College. The Hon'ble Sardar Sundar Singh has resigned. The beginning of a new era". The Editor complains that, under the new order of things, there will be only three Sikh representatives (worth the name) on the said body, and their presence on the board will prove of no use as the Government (members) will be in the majority. Government is, therefore, now solely responsible for the welfare of the Khalsa College; but let it bear in mind that, if the College is not worked according to the wishes of Sikhs, or if Government appoints to the College council men who are either looked down upon by educated Sikhs or who are Hindus at heart and pose as Sikhs only to gain honours and to prejudice the authorities against educated Sikhs—whom they designate "Tat Khalsas"—then the result will be that Sikhs will no longer send their boys to the College.

Expulsion of a Muslim student from the Medical College, Agra.

24. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 5th October 1912:—

"Our readers are by now well aware of the circumstances under which Khawaja Amir Ahmed, B.A., one of the most brilliant fourth year students of the Agra Medical School, has been expelled. A Panipat correspondent of the Paisa Akhbar details what according to him are the causes of the expulsion and makes allegations which it is the duty of the Government of the United Provinces to investigate. According to the writer, the first charge against Amir Ahmed was that he communicated to the Muslim Press news and details of the campaign waged by the school authorities against the Muslim papers. He denied the charge, and the Muhammadan journals wrote distinctly that Amir Ahmed had not written to them. But the authorities of the school appear to have regarded the Muslim journalists as liars. The other charges against him were of disobedience, insubordination and inflaming the religious sentiments of the Musalmans, on the ground that he did not give up the wearing of a fez, nor adopt the Hindu dhoti at the time of cooking. The poor man heard that he was going to be expelled and went to see Dr. De at his house. This brought against him a charge of house-trespass. Similar other charges were brought against him and without any explanation being asked for from him he was expelled. Upon this, Amir Ahmed went to see the Principal and requested that he might be informed of the charges against him. Major O'Meara, it is alleged, told him that he knew nothing of the charges and had expelled him as a disciplinary measure. Finding all remonstrances unavailing, the poor young man begged again that the charge against him might be announced to him and his explanation recorded on the file. Major O'Meara is stated to have replied that nothing could be done then as his file had already been forwarded to the Chief Medical Officer. Hearing this, Amir Ahmed went to Ajmere at once, but was told by the Chief Medical Officer that he had not received the file. If these allegations be true, they show that not only the authorities of the school expelled a student without sufficient cause, but Major O'Meara employed a technological inexactitude, under a misconception we hope, when he told Amir Ahmed that his file had been forwarded to Ajmere while that was not a fact. These are very serious allegations. But the gravest of all is that Major O'Meara informed the Hon'ble Syed Ali Nabi that he had set a secret police spy to watch the movements of the young man. No words can adequately condemn the conduct of the Major if this allegation is true. If police agents are to be set against men who are suspected, not of any seditious leanings but of venial indiscretion, life will become very unsafe in this country. We hope some member of the United Provinces Legislative Council will interpellate the Government on the point."

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

High prices.

25. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 10th October 1912:—

* * * * * * *

"In India there is enough land to feed its people. But this sufficiency is upset when it is made to support foreign peoples. The case is further aggravated by the ignorance of the people as to what man ought to eat. They waste much and so they exhaust the power of the soil by exacting an enormous quantity of food from it. Feeding foreigners when starvation stares us is folly. Not only the people suffer from it, but also the Government falls a victim to it. These two members of the body politic, namely, the people and the Government, have a remedy in their hands for the evil. The people can organise themselves and take a vow to feed our near home fellow men in preference to foreigners who should be supported in time of our plenty and their scarcity. The vow can be binding upon all if the people have a will to take it. For instance, the Hindus inherit the vow not to kill the cow. Now no misfortune can oblige a Hindu to break it. Civilised people are avowed not to marry in their own family, and nothing will compel them to violate this rule. Learned men never employ abuses or invectives in their speech, and nothing can induce them to foul it with the obscene abuses of street boys. Well, if so many vows are sacredly observed by them, there is no reason to doubt that, if they have a will, they can sanctify the most important vow of charity, namely, to feed our country first, and if there is excess in supply to part with it in consideration of the good of foreign countries. Remember, charity begins at home.

"The Government of a country can stop exportation of food till the country it rules over satisfies its wants. The one great advantage will be the regular and unchecked flow of rates and taxes into the Treasury. The contentment of the people will guarantee peace, which reduces the administrative expenses.

"It is the primary duty of the Government of a country to save its people from starvation and other evils. We know that our benign Government not only guards us against foreign invasions, natural calamities such as famine and epidemics, but tries to give us positive blessings, such as education, free speech, religious liberty, facility of communication and protection of life and property. But as regards the question under consideration it is strange that it stands with folded hands. It is in the power of the Government to stop our suffering. But how? The Government does not see it, else it would never have appointed a Committee.

"Well, the Government does not want to interfere with the liberty of the people. All right, so much the better. But think a little. Why did Lord William Bentinck put a stop to the burning of widows with their dead husbands? He has evidently taken away our religious liberty. Then, again, what explanation can be given for the stoppage of human sacrifices required in the worship of the Goddess Devi? Why were the women of Bengal prohibited from offering their first born to the crocodiles of the mother Ganges? Why has the Government stopped the murder of girls who are a source of 'misfortune to us'? The Government has encroached upon our liberties in so many cases that they cannot be enumerated in a newspaper article. So it is a lame excuse of the Government not to interfere with the rights of the people.

"The cases above mentioned are criminal. The law is against murder. Well, is not starvation caused by high prices productive of premature death? Often people commit suicides to save their honour from being reduced to beggary. Slow starvation is worse than quick death. By starving people put themselves on the path of death. Therefore Government's interference in the matter of sale and purchase of the necessaries of life is required by its own law and by the common sense of humanity. It should relieve the people of the tortuous pain of hunger.

"A few years ago the Government was harassed by exchange rates. Now this evil pressed the Government only. To stop it, it adopted a measure which affected the whole commercial world, not only the commercial world but also the producers. But the Government was not so tender of conscience as to leave bankers to fleece it to the skin. It fixed the price of the sovereign at Rs. 15 whether the supply of gold failed or not. It was thought a revolution would result. But nothing of the kind happened. The bankers are now as rich as they were when they used to raise the exchange rates according to their sweet will.

"Formerly troops were afflicted with varying price of food stuffs. The Government fixed the prices of food articles and took the loss upon itself. Well, we are just as loyal to the Government as the troops. Cannot the Government be equally generous to supply us food at the same rates as the troops? If the Government does that, it will be improvished in two days. Whence will it bring so much money to pay the Bania (food merchant) as is required to support 350,000,000 people? Will not the Lord Chancellor of England supply the deficiency from the Exchequer of Great Britian? Oh, nonsense. Nobody is going to help the Indian Government. It must help itself.

"As no banker was ruined by fixing the pries of the sovereign, so no Bania or grain seller is likely to be ruined by fixing the price of the necessaries of life. If the Government inquires into the state of things it will find that the stock of food in the country is more than required. The food seller wants to make money to drive in a motor car, to carouse at night, to attend the theatre. No profession is so rich as commerce. For, the traders seem to think they have a license from the Government to squeeze as much money from the people as they like. The Government should not shut its eyes to the nefarious practices by which the trade pockets the well-earned money of honest people. Why has the Government made gambling penal? It enriches gamblers who get money with the consent of the robbed. The same reason that has made the Government legislate against gambling and other false professions, loudly calls for Government intervention to check the legalised robbery of trade.

"India has now more land under cultivation than before. The produce is also increased by irrigation and by labour saving machinery. The people are at liberty to migrate. So there is no fear in controlling food prices. The Government has got the Census Department, Land Record Department, and Revenue Department. It knows all the produce of the land, since it takes taxes in proportion to it. Thus the Government can know the quantity of food required by the people in a year. The food producers can be given certificates to sell to foreigners what is over and above the country's need.

"As the number of the people and the quantity of food are known, the prices can be fixed. Past years can also guide us in determining rates to the advantage of all. As now the price of the sovereign is fixed, none can sell or purchase it for more than what is fixed, so will be the case with food articles when their prices are fixed. And as said before, nobody will be injured. The grain sellers will be as rich then as now.

"It is just as seen in the light of past years experience that wheat should be sold at 16 seers per rupee, legumens at 8, clarified butter, at one seer per rupee, milk at 16 seers a rupee, cotton at 4, potatoes at 32 seers, and so forth. The Government should have courage to eradicate the evil of high prices brought about by trade gamblers. Mind, the high prices are due to the modern greed of gold. Properly speaking, they should be framed in consideration of labour and cost of articles produced. But it is not done so by food sellers. They follow the rule of gambling. The Government should guard all people from ruin. Merchants have abused the favour of the Government knowing that the Government is kind to them, protecting them from robbers, affording them all the facilities of communication and giving them perfect liberty to carry on their business according to their desire. They have smothered their conscience and they now manufacture prices, not in accordance with the actual cost of produce, but according to their mad greed for making money.

"Foreign purchasers should show how much is bought and whom it is brought from. Thus a check can be put to exporting grain for the sake of gold. It is said that some of the native princes do not permit exportation of food articles in the face of need at home. What native rulers can do, the Government can do very easily. Remember that high prices prevail mostly in British territory. Things are cheaper in Native States. So the Government has examples before it to proceed in this question of high prices of food articles. Commissions and committees will do no good. No one is going to tell the real truth to officers and commissions. To deceive them is considered meritorious. We have straightforwardly pointed out the only possible and just remedy of the growing evil of high prices and costliness of living which seem to threaten the very life of humanity. Let the Government fix the prices according to the results of past years and calculation of labour and cost of the production of things."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

Security from the Sat Dharam Parcharak Press.

26. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 2nd October 1912, has a note headed "Security from the Sat Dharam Parcharak Press" (a paper and press recently removed to Delhi). The Editor reports that, on a formal declaration being presented to the local District Magistrate, that officer ordered the deposit of Rs. 500 as security. It is not, however, easy to understand on what grounds the security has been called for. If the Sat Dharam Parcharak was not an objectionable paper at Hardwar (for otherwise security would assuredly have been demanded from it), how can objection be taken to its publication at Delhi, especially when it continues to be edited and owned by the same men? Again, since the District Magistrate has not asked for any security from the Rafiq, a new venture, what justification can there be for different treatment being accorded to an old, moderate and religious paper like the Sat Dharm Parcharak?

27 Writing under the heading "Another fatal blow from the Press Act", the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th October 1912, says that no independent paper has escaped the operation of this law. The Zamindar itself and its two contemporaries, the Vakil (Amritsar) and the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow), have already had to furnish security by way of punishment for their independence of opinion; and now the Deputy Commissioner, Amritsar, has called upon the manager and publisher of the local Muin to deposit a security of Rs. 1,500. The Muin was undoubtedly a most promising and valuable organ of the Muslim community, and its independence and love of truth soon secured special importance and reputation for it. It is, however, to be regretted that its popularity has proved a thorn in the side of "the wide-awake authorities." If Muhammadans care for independence of opinion and value the Muin's devoted services to the community, it is incumbent on them to preserve its life. The security has been demanded because the Muin is a political paper, although the function of a newspaper is to criticise without fear "the affairs of the country and the nation." Some member of the Imperial Legislative Council should ask a question to draw attention to "the dark side of the press law."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

War in the Balkans.

1. Writing under the heading "Israfil (the angel of death) has blown his trumpet," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 10th October 1912, says that the plot which the European powers have been hatching for 12 months past has produced at last a sanguinary war. Montenegro has sent an ultimatum to Turkey, and although her example has not as yet been followed by Greece, Bulgaria, and Servia, "yet all these yellow dogs are brothers to the jackal," and a bloody war is inevitable in the Balkans. The editor contends that it is at the instance of Russia and Austria that the present situation has been created, and observes that darkness surrounds Muhammadans on all sides. "Islamic brethren! This is a most critical time for us. Non-Muslim nations have fully made up their minds to ruin us. We must not now display negligence or indifference. A nation can exist in the world only so long as its members are actuated by a spirit of self-sacrifice and sympathy. Let the European powers play the part of on-lookers and let the Turkish lion settle his score with the jackals of the Balkans." The British Government is congratulated on its announcement of a policy of strict neutrality.

War in the Balkans.

2. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th October 1912, asks what has become of those who are in the habit of raising cries of Pan-Islamism, of charging Islam with savage bigotry, of posing as followers of "the Prince of Peace," of representing themselves as guardians of the world's peace, and of claiming the monopoly of "the civilisation of electricity, steam, powder, wine, vice and immorality." They should come and see what injustice and oppression are being perpetrated and what streams of blood are being shed by their kith and kin in (both) the East and the West. Those professors and priests in Europe who characterise as savage everything connected with Islam should come and see the knives which their meek and lowly civilisation has placed in the hands of its myrmidons to pierce the hearts of Muhammadans. In what obscure corner of cruel indifference and savage negligence is the "International assembly of the European Powers" hiding? It should come out of this homicidal hole and see how Christianity has trampled on the sense and civilisation of the twentieth century, and how it has moved back to the dark and bloody traditions of the tenth century, reviving the Wars of the Crusade in order to exterminate Islam and Muhammadans. "O standard-bearers of civilisation and enlightenment and you who monopolise philanthropy! For God's sake do not throw dust in our eyes . . . . in broad daylight. We are not so stupid and simple-minded as to crédit your claim that your combined invasion of Islamic countries is intended only to rid those lands of Muslim mal-administration, and to spread to them the light of the blessing of western civilisation. The hollowness of this claim has long been exposed, and we have come to know that 'civilisation' is used only as a blind to serve some ulterior object. O people of the West! If you do not fear God and if you have not even the least sympathy and pity for Muhammadans, you should at least have pity on yourselves and abstain from this useless bloodshed and this unjustifiable trampling on (Muslim) rights. Muhammadans are (undoubtedly) weak and oppressed and you look upon them as the very embodiment of friendlessness. But do you not remember that the poet has said :—

"'Do you not know that when a cat is brought to bay

"'It plucks out the leopard's eyes with its claws?'

"If God's wrath has not as yet overtaken you one chief reason for this is that there is still a large number of people in England who possess a sense of shame, have considerate and obliging hearts, and truly sympathise with their fellowmen. O Europeans! You have transformed yourselves into wolves, and drunk enough of the blood of Muslim sheep and have fattened yourselves. But winter has now come . . . . and you should prepare yourselves for its soul-wearing rigour. You lie when you say that you are civilised. You are not civilised in the least, nay, you are savages and beasts of prey, the proof of which is being supplied from Tripoli, Morocco, Tabriz, Meshed, and now from all the four corners of the Balkans. We do not, therefore, wish to appeal to you, because in doing so we would prove ourselves lacking all sense of shame. We wish to appeal only to England, who, it is our conviction, is not an enemy of Muhammadans. And our sole appeal to her is that, if she has the power, which she has, to do so, she should try to keep the War confined to the Balkans, preventing the International Messiah of the European Powers from breathing new life into the rotten carcases of Greece, Montenegro, Servia and Bulgaria, after these dogs have been made into mincemeat by the Turkish lions." Elsewhere the paper asserts that the Powers have assured Montenegro of the maintenance of the status quo, even if she is vanquished in the War. This means that the Turks will not be allowed to profit by victory, than which there can be no better proof of the dishonesty of "the civilised Kings of Europe." The Turkish forces should, therefore, plunder and devastate every city in Montenegro which they may enter, and unhesitatingly take away whatever they can lay their hands upon. In conclusion, the paper remarks that Austria, Russia and France having paid no heed to her advice to them in regard to the Balkans, it now behoves England not to damage her admitted sense of justice by joining hands in future with these free-booters and dacoits of Europe and (this) clique of dishonest miscreants.

War in the Balkans.

3. Writing about the war in the Balkans, the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 12th October 1912, says that Turkey has of herself ordered the introduction into Macedonia of reforms, the suitableness of which has been admitted even by — and England. Those, however, it adds, who wanted only an excuse to attack (Turkey) care nothing for this: they merely sought for a pretext to exterminate the Muhammadans. Continuing, it asks what can cause greater anxiety to the Muhammadans of India (lit. Indians) than the troubles of the Osmanlis. "Our ancient traditions tell us that the Day of Judgment is to synchromise with the invasion of Turkey by Christians and with the decline of that country. Who is there at such a time who will not feel restless and distracted in spite of the approach of the Day of Judgment, and who will live to witness (a repetition of) the stupefying scenes of the last days of Granada?" Europe may not regard the war as being a religious one, but its opinion cannot be shared by those who heard the Pope's words last year, "There can be no peace between us and Muhammadans till the banner of the Cross has been planted on St. Sophia's mosque and the sacred city of Christ is in our possession." Besides, if it was rightly said by Imam Malik that country and religion always go together, one can hardly condemn the public belief that wars against innocent Muhammadans are waged equally against Islam. But will the wars now being waged really end the existence of the Prophet's followers? The future alone can answer this question; but if Muhammadans have not lost all sense of shame and if they have not forgotten their "national" traditions, there is no reason why "our brethren" (the Turks) should not triumph over the enemies of Islam. "We only need be courageous, forgetting the word hopelessness for ever, and reposing trust in God."

War in the Balkans.

4. The Watan (Lahore), of the 15th October 1912, has a note headed "The time for testing the Islamic sense of self-respect," in which it appeals to Indian Muhammadans to give liberal donations in aid of the Muslim sufferers from the War in the Balkans. It also publishes a translation of a telegram from Hilmi Pasha, late Prime Minister of Turkey, and now President of the Red Crescent Society, Constantinople, asking the editor to make the appeal.

War in the Balkans.

5. Writing under the heading "Slaves of the Turks," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 13th October 1912, refers to the outbreak of hostilities in the Balkans. Europe, especially the southern part of it, adds the paper, is beside itself with joy for the reason that the old slaves of the Osmanlis (the Montenegrins) have, with the object of throwing off their chains, stepped into the battlefield with borrowed swords and guns and "crosses on their heads (? helmets)." After remarking that the powers have taken upon themselves the responsibility of seeing reforms introduced into Macedonia and that therefore the war is utterly unjustifiable, the editor observes that the Christians subject to Muhammadans in Turkey "take pride in demanding rights," but that the (non-Christian) subjects of Christian rulers are being trampled upon. Continuing, it says that, if the fire of war leaps into a flame in the Balkans and injury is caused to the Central Turkish Government, "the West also" will, as Europeans think, be turned topsy-turvy.

War in the Balkans.

6. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 12th October 1912 :—

"The outbreak of actual hostilities in the Balkans and the opening of war-like operations by Montenegro against Turkey constitute the outstanding feature of this week's situation in Eastern Europe. Reuter's telegrams, summarising the progress of incidents, will be found given in another column—incidents which, though unimportant in themselves, are the sure prelude to what threatens to be a great military duel. Bulgaria, Greece, Servia and Montenegro have all conspired, doubtless with the connivance of Austria and Russia, to make a combined attack on Turkey; and all impartial observers are agreed in characterising the mobilisation and warlike operations of the Balkan confederacy as 'the result of deliberate policy rather than of provocation,' and it may be safely concluded that they command the support of, at least, some of the Powers. This is all the clearer in view of the declaration that even in the event of war and territorial conquest by any party, the European concert would not permit any change in territorial boundaries. This resolve, we are afraid, is likely to be carried into effect only in case of Turkish victories, and the chances are ten to one that it will be relegated into the background if the chances of war favour the arms of the Balkan States. Moreover the Statesman is perfectly right in pointing out that the watchful enemies of Turkey can have scarcely failed to have been impressed by the failure of Turkey in the war with Italy, and they have probably come to the conclusion that now is the golden opportunity for the settlement of all their differences with the Turks. But they will certainly discover that Turkey as a military Power is a very different antagonist from Turkey as represented by a feeble and fugitive Navy. However, there can be no doubting the cool self aggrandisement of the Balkan States and the utter disregard of all motives, except the most selfish, which is inspiring their conduct. In dealing with Turkey, they think moral obligations are of no value and the code of international ethics becomes an absolutely dead letter when it is a question of carving out new pieces for themselves out of the Turkish empire. It is difficult to be very positive in forecasting the final issue of the war just forced on Turkey. Europeans are emphatic in declaring that the Bulgarian army for its size is one of the best equipped and best trained armies in the world; and they also contend that the Turkish army in actual practice will be found to be much smaller than the numbers of its soldiers mentioned on paper; that the transport arrangements are entirely out of date, as also are all administrative services; and taking into consideration the proverbial dilatoriness of Turkish officials, coupled with the fact that reorganization is not yet complete, it is said to be extremely unlikely that mobilisation would be anything but a slow process. At the same time, even their partisans cannot conceal contempt for the armies of Servia and Greece, while Montenegro does not possess any large force at all. On the other hand, we all know the kind of reputation that the Turkish soldier has won upon a hundred battlefields; and the men have been well trained on German lines and can as ever be depended on to fight with dogged determination; while the artillery is extremely efficient. In any case, the war is bound to be a remorseless war, a war to the bitter end, and the Muslim world will have no cause to regret its outbreak if it ends, as we all hope it will, in the wiping off of the confederacy from the map of Europe. That will ensure peace for Europe and breathing time for Turkey to regenerate herself."

7. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 13th October 1912 :—

Great Britain and China.

"The article in The Christian on the opium question in China, referred to above discloses a very serious state of affairs. In accordance with the terms of the agreement between Great Britain and China, signed in 1911, the former agreed to permit any province in China to exclude Indian opium entirely, if it could be shown that the indigenous cultivation had ceased. Such powers of exclusion are, however, denied by England to those provinces where cultivation can be proved. But the attempt of the British Government to enforce the condition has created a very awkward situation. The determination of the provincial authorities of Chekiang, to so control the sale of the prepared drug within the limits of the province that there shall be no demand for opium, has given rise to all this trouble. We cannot, however, congratulate the British Government on the policy pursued by it in the matter. It is now making an attempt to compel the province to open her doors to the sale of Indian opium for the failure on the part of a small section of the community to carry out the terms of the agreement, on the plea that during the troubled days of the revolution a number of farmers cultivated the drug.

"It is very much to be deplored that rather than bringing the opium traffic to a speedy termination and giving China a fair hand to deal with her own troubles, Great Britain has recently warned her of the possible consequences of her opposition to the opium traffic. The Times goes so far as to say that 'Great Britain would delay recognition of the Republic, when it is asked, on the ground of the Republican opposition to the opium traffic.

"As the writer of the article says, this attitude of Great Britain has not only compromised the position of the Central Goverement of China but has brought shame on the British people. It is quite unworthy of England that she should place the people of China in such a position as that which calls for a protest like the one made by the Chekiang Provincial Assembly."

The new war against Turkey.

8. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 12th October 1912 :—

"While the war of Italy against Turkey has been almost universally condemned as an act of brigandage how are we to characterise the confederacy in which Montenegro is likely to be joined by Bulgaria, Servia and Greece in making war on Turkey? The ostensible casus belli is the delay in carrying out certain reforms promised by Turkey to her Christian subjects, but this is a matter which could have been easily settled by diplomacy. As we have pointed out there is very little reason to doubt that the Balkan States have resolved to take advantage of the distracted condition of Turkey on account of the Turco-Italian War and to compel her to accept their terms. In the face of this new danger it is tolerably certain that Turkey will hasten to conclude peace with Italy, even at some sacrifice, so as to be free to meet her new enemies. The position of Turkey is undoubtedly serious, because while she is strong enough to defeat Montenegro, Bulgaria, Servia and Greece, one after another, a combination of all of them is a far more serious affair. So far the fighting is confined between Turkish and Montenegrin troops, but Greece is likely to join very early. Bulgaria says she will consult Servia and Greece before taking action, but it may be assumed that they will all join and the confederacy will be complete. Of course the European Powers cannot permit the disruption of the Ottoman Empire, but Turkey will have to fight for her own land in the first instance."

The Turco-Montenegrin War.

9. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 12th October 1912 :—

"Indians who have followed the course of events in Eastern Europe, as reported from time to time by Reuter, will have no difficulty in understanding the cause of the so-called truculency of the Christian States in the Balkans or of the declaration of war by the little State of Montenegro. The Christian people in the Balkans have all their respective grievances against their common oppressor, the Turk, and these grievances are as old as history itself. The creation of the separate States of Bulgaria, Servia and Montenegro by the Treaty of Berlin, in 1878, was a palliative and not a cure for the disease which has taken root in Turkey. It is true that subsequently both Bulgaria and Montenegro threw off their allegiance and became independent. But still the Treaty of Berlin having unwisely split up the Christian population for an artificial geographical boundary, especially in Montenegrin borders, the trouble remain and became the cause of frequent irritation to Turks as well as to Christians. The Turkish atrocities of August last are in themselves enough provocation to the mildest of Christians to take to arms and chastise a Government permitting such inhuman conduct. * * *

After giving details of various atrocities which the Turks are alleged to have committed upon Christian subjects of the Porte the article proceeds :—

"The fact of the matter is the leopard does not change its spots, nor does the Turk change his temper. It is the tiger qualities of the Turk that have driven a handful of Montenegrins to desperation. * * * The Montenegrins are likened to Pathans; but their characteristics bear a closer resemblance to those of Sawantwari people. These latter, it would be remembered, gave incessant trouble to the British Government for upwards of 15 years since 1822. In any case this war cannot fail to win for the little Montenegrins the admiration of the civilized world. * * * One thing seems ominous. Inspired articles in Austro-Hungarian papers attribute to their Government a desire 'to assist the Porte to carry on its policy of adaptation to the actual ethnical conditions of Turkey.' That is to say the police of decentralization has to be executed on racial considerations. How this strikes the British Government and the Indian Muhammadans is worth knowing. Meanwhile Montenegro has been heroically sacrificing itself for the benefit of the confederacy."

Great Britain and the Balkan crisis.

10. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 16th October 1912 :—

"So far the British Government has done its best to pacify matters in the Balkans. Sir Edward Grey and the Cabinet which he represents have so far done nothing in the least degree calculated to encourage the Macedonians to revolt against the authority of the Turks. The Muhammadan newspapers in India, we regret to find, do not in their criticism of the situation in the Balkans do justice to the British Government, and in some cases even go the length of ascribing motives which do not at all exist. It must not be forgotten that Sir Edward Grey has to move very cautiously through the entangled mazes of European diplomacy, and our Muhammadan countrymen should make due allowance for the difficulties which confront Sir Edward Grey and the British Foreign Office. In this connection it may be noted that the All-India Moslem League in London has adopted a resolution emphatically protesting against the policy and tactics of the Balkan Committee which, besides embarassing the British Government in its desire to hold the balance evenly, is certain to encourage and inflame racial and religious bitterness. The League declares that the present war is due to the encouragement of irresponsible enthusiasts. It is stated further that 'in view of the loyalty of Brittanic Musalmans and the identity of interests between the two principal Musalman Empires and the great though forgotten services rendered by Turks during the Indian mutiny, the League strongly deprecates the ill-will shown towards Turkey by a section of the British Press which but adds to the prevailing resentment of Musalmans at what is regarded as the injustice and intolerance of Europe.' Whilst we have nothing but sympathy with our Muhammadan brethren, in the position in which they find themselves placed, we are not sure whether the action of the All-India Moslem League is quite wise."

Russian atrocities in Persia.

11. Writing under the heading "Photographs of Russians' barbarous acts of oppression," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 10th October 1912, publishes a translation of the concluding portion of an article on Persia, recently contributed to the Manchester Guardian by Mr. George Douglas Turner, in condemnation of Muscovite doings. The paper also reproduces three photographs representing the execution at Tabriz of a number of Persians for the offence of being supporters of the constitutional form of Government. In the first picture, says the editor, the Siqatul Islam hangs, and the harrowing scene is "as it were the collar of eternal curses round the satanic neck of Russia," and sooner or later this "eternal wretch" will have to suffer for this from God's wrath. The third picture depicts the execution of the late Yusaf, whose body was cut in two at the instance of the Russia's myrmidon "the Muslim-looking infidel" and base-minded Samad Khan. The deceased hangs by the feet, and his entrails, which bulge out, are, says the paper, calling down everlasting curses on tyrannical Russia and her still more oppressive agent Samad Khan.

(b)—Home.

Pan-Islamism in India.

12. The Afghan (Peshawar), of the 19th September (received on the 10th October) 1912, publishes a communication headed "Pan-Islamism and Indian Muhammadans." After summarising the Times' recent article on the subject, the correspondent admits that general excitement has, of late, been prevalent among Muhammadans in this country. There have been many occurrences, in quick succession, in India and outside, which have inflicted wound after wound on the hearts of Musalmans. Italy's aggressive and savage conduct in Tripoli, French oppression in the Moors' country, and Russia's cruelty in Persia, are typical instances. Indian Muhammadans, he adds, were in hopes that the British Government would befriend Turkey and prevent Italian brigandage. Contrary to their expectations, however, it published a proclamation of neutrality, which proved injurious for Turkey, inasmuch as it prevented the passage of her troops through Egypt although that country is still looked upon as a Turkish possession. The writer considers it a sin to conceal the fact that this conduct on the part of the British Government caused much pain to the followers of Islam. Again, nothing came of the numerous meetings held by them to request their Government to end Muscovite aggression and to try to secure the restoration of "the treasures" carried away by Russians from the Meshed shrine. It was but natural that this event also should have caused feelings of sorrow and disappointment among the believers in the kalima. Muhammadans have too been much troubled by the reversal of the partition of Bengal, the non-fulfilment of Government's promise to repair the injury thereby caused to the Muhammadans of East Bengal, and the Secretary of State's refusal to give Muhammadans a university such as they desire. It is not surprising then that Muhammadans have shown their feeling in speeches and writings, and the result has been the cry of the revival of Pan-Islamism in India. That the excitement prevalent among Muhammadans has assumed dangerous proportions is absolutely untrue. It is to be admitted that excitement permeates all classes of the Prophet's followers; but if Government wish to keep this feeling in check nothing is easier. It can win the hearts of Muhammadans, not by rigour and oppression, but by "sacrifice" and kindness. No danger should be associated with "the national awakening" that is taking place in them; otherwise it would seem that the English do not approve of the slight quickening among Muhammadans, and do not wish them to demand their rights. All responsible authorities should win the confidence of Musalmans by reposing trust in them, and should also consider Muslim demands in a spirit of liberality. If Muhammadans are always told to rely on themselves they will, in time, cease to trust in Government.

Pan-Islamism in India.

13. Writing under the heading "Pan-Islamism: New and Old," the Millat (Lahore), of the 11th October 1912, publishes a translation of several passages in the letter which recently appeared in the Times on the above subject; making a running commentary on the same and taking exception, in the course of its remarks, to the statements made about the Amir in the aforesaid writing. It also denies the existence of the Pan-Islamic movement in India, and asserts that the propaganda exists only in the imagination of some Europeans or "in the reports spread about by some traitors to the (Muslim) community." Further, it refers to the undermentioned observations by the writer in the Times, and makes the following comments on the same:—

1. All Muhammadans believe that the Christian powers of Europe have been intriguing to ruin and annex the Muslim States that still remain.—This opinion is undoubtedly held by a large number of Muhammadans, but none of them entertains any suspicion in regard to England. Nor has their distrust of Russia, Italy, Germany, &c., anything to do with Pan-Islamism.

2 Many a Musalman is under the impression that the Mehdi will appear in Central Africa, and that he is (even now) among the mysterious Sennousis.—There is absolutely no truth in this. The Prophet's followers entertain quite a different belief in regard to the advent of the Mehdi. Hasan Nizami, of Delhi, is the only Muhammadan who holds the opinion mentioned by the Times' correspondent, and the reason why the latter has ascribed it to the entire Muslim community is that the former has undoubtedly assured "well informed Englishmen" that the same is shared by all his co-religionists.

3. Muhammadans are convinced that England supports Russia in Persia.—Not a single Musalman holds this view. A Lahore paper (the reference is to the Zamindar of course) has tried to create this impression. It is also this paper which has adversely criticised Sir Edward Grey and has published articles supporting Pan-Islamism, or charging England with having partitioned the Shah's dominions. There is, however, just a possibility that a section of Muhammadans may have come to entertain the above views under the influence of "these people."

4. Extremist Hindu papers have been trying to assure Muhammadans that they have been abandoned by Government; referring to (the treatment of) Eastern Bengal (Musalmans) in support of their assertion.—This is perfectly true. The Millat has been warning Muhammadans for the last twelve months not to allow themselves to be misled by the Hindu Press. Those very (Islamic) papers, however, whose writings have now brought odium on the entire Muslim community, have thrown a spell over the unwary and have placed them under the influence of intemperate Hindu journals.

5. Many mysterious Turks and Arabs have been seen at Delhi, Lahore, Peshawar and Lucknow, during the past few months, while strangers from Baghdad, the Hedjaz and Constantinople, "who worked in a most energetic manner," have visited noted shrines and places of worship.—This statement is wholly unfounded.

One Lahore paper (? the Zamindar) certainly once spoke of the arrival of a Turkish general and urged Muhammadans (lit. the people) to see him. As regards Syed Rashid Raza, who presided at the last session of the Nadwat-ul-Ulema, and the Pir of Baghdad, they are among the admirers of the British Government.

It is a mystery how the suspicions (mentioned by the writer in the Times) have all at once come to be entertained in regard to the Prophet's followers. The Editor has long been telling his co-religionists that certain reckless (Islamic) priests will bring ruin on the entire Muslim community. The Times' correspondent has blamed all Muhammadans for the fiery writings of these papers and the nonsense talked by a few Musalman young men. Muhammadans are still as loyal to Government as they have ever been: the blame rests only with a few short-sighted editors and speakers who have been publishing fiery writings and making strongly worded speeches to prosper their business. If Muhammadans were to throw them overboard and to condemn their views, even now matters would be certain to improve.

Indians and the colour prejudice.

14. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912, has a letter under the heading "Ill-treatment of Indians on the score of colour." The writer, Mr. Muni Lal, M.D., M.A., Barrister-at-Law, refers to some instances, in which he was personally concerned, to show how invidious distinctions are made between Europeans and Indians in this country, and how the latter are treated in an inconsiderate manner by Anglo-Indians. He also cites several instances of the ill-treatment to which he has been subjected in America, South Africa, Australia, etc., on the score of his colour, showing how grossly Indians are ill-treated while travelling through, or staying in, foreign countries.

Commenting on the above, the Editor remarks that thoughtful Indians hold the opinion, which has been endorsed even by Lord Morley, that "the difficulties which are now being experienced in India are more racial than political in character." There are, indeed, very few sensible Indians who wish to drive the English out of the country or can even tolerate the idea of the latter's expulsion. There is, nevertheless, perhaps no self-respecting Indian who does not feel pained at being insulted by a haughty Englishman. Lord Morley advised such Englishmen to mend their ways, but his words have been of little avail. It is high time that Government looked into the matter.

Sikh Defence Association.

15. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), dated 11th October 1912:—

* * * * * *

"In the meantime it may be of use to place the two sides of the question before our readers. Those that are for such an association advance a number of reasons and so do those who take an attitude of dislike towards the idea. We shall take the latter first. Their main argumcnts are two. The first is that the Sikhs should eschew politics and various forms of agitation which, in their opinion, are absolutely undesirable, and the second is that the Sikhs should continue to limit their activities to the educational and social spheres, etc., refusing to fritter away their limited energies and resources in matters that do not directly conduce to the welfare and happiness of the community. They further take up their stand on the firm rock of history and tradition when they suggest that the Sikhs are knitted to the British Throne and the British Government in a special manner. The Sikhs, not merely by words, but by actual deeds, have shown in hundred and one instances, that they are even prepared to lay their all at the disposal of their rulers and their Government. In Asia, Europe and Africa, the Sikhs have shown beyond question or cavil that their lives and life-blood are not grudged at the call of duty or honour, and the various appreciations by His Gracious Majesty the King Emperor and his large-hearted representatives in England and in India vouch for the truth of the above facts. It is contended, therefore, with considerable weight of reason, that when the Sikhs have placed everything at the disposal of Government, they should, in their turn, leave everything entirely in the hands of Government, leaving it entirely free to do by them what it pleases and how it pleases and when it pleases. Why should the Sikhs who have so firmly linked themselves to their British rulers by the silken ties of love and devotion adopt the rôle of 'impatient idealists,' and join the sister communities in kicking up agitation in season and out of season. The force of these weighty contentions no sensible man will deny. These will form one scale of the balance.

"The advocates of the establishment of such an association, call it the All-India Sikh Association, the Sikh League, or the Sikh Defence Association, express their fullest concurrence with the above. They place the most implicit reliance in the justice and impartiality of the Government. They, however, have to offer various grounds no less weighty to form the other scale. Quoting the high and dispassionate authority of Mr. A. Macauliffe, who has devoted life-time to the study and research of Sikh scriptures and history, they contend with equal force that Sikhism stands in danger of losing its entity, getting absorbed by sister communities, ever anxious to claim it as their own. Where vigorous and pushful communities are struggling for mastery, ready to obtain the lion's share of the loaves and fishes by hook or crook, disdaining to leave the Sikhs even the crumbs of office and preferment, surely the Sikhs too should gird up their loins and be on the alert to dispel the mists of mis-representation and mis-understanding. To keep the seal of silence on the lips would not only be suicidal but unbecoming, for we should be departing from the attitude of full and implicit trust in our benign and sympathetic Government. Mr. Macauliffe takes the cases of several religions that divorced of state-help fell into the back ground or totally disappeared, and urges that the religion of Baba Nanak runs the same danger without help from Government. Absorption into orthodox religion against many sides and features of which Sikhism was a protest is a likely fate in the opinion of that learned writer on Sikhism, and aggression from outside is another danger that no less threatens the independent entity of the Sikhs as a community. And it is absolutely essential, it is contended, that there should be an accredited organization of the community that may be completely in touch with the powers that be. It would be the function of such a body to take up from time to time, as they arise, questions that intimately affect the community, to act as an interpreter between the Government on the one side and the Sikhs on the other, to serve as a medium between the two for the expression of their respective views and sentiments, and in every possible and desirable way to promote the mutual interests of both. With the growth and expansion of education and enlightenment numerous questions of the highest importance crop up from day to day that interest and at times irritate and excite the community and require that they should be brought forthwith to the notice of Government and the responsible authorities. Apart from such occasional problems, there are others of far-reaching importance, for instance the share of Sikhs in the Imperial and Provincial Councils, the seats secured to members of the Sikh community on the Municipal Committees and the District Boards, the proportion of appointments in the public service made available to Sikhs. Such and similar are the grounds on which the advocates of a Sikh Association, like the one foreshadowed by our contributors, urge the need of it and condemn inaction as akin to disregard of communal interests.

"There is one point which a contributor in the current issue tries to bring out with some force, and that is the meaning to be attached to the word 'political' in connection with such an Association. It must be obvious to any one who gives the question a moment's thought that the Sikhs can never be a party to 'agitation' or undesirable political effervescence, or to courses of action that would merit the condemnation or opprobrium of our rulers. They cannot and shall not lend their countenance to anything savouring even in the remotest degree towards disloyalty or ingratitude. Their definition of the objects of such an Association would be similar to that adopted by Government in the Imperial Council with reference to the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, viz., an Association established to protect and safeguard the interests of the Sikh community and carefully eschewing undesirable or objectionable courses of action, or courses held to be such by Government or the authorities.

"The two scales of the balance are now before the community. It is for the community to weigh and decide. For obvious reasons we withhold our own opinion pending that of the leading lights of the Panth and to their sober judgment and wise afore-thought we may safely commend the question."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Afghanistan affairs.

16. The Civil and Military News (Ludhiana), of the 14th October 1912, reports that in the course of his speech held at Kabul on the 28th ultimo, His Majesty the Amir made the remark that both men and money were needed for the permanent defence of Afghanistan. It is to be hoped, adds the paper, that the words will raise a large number of recruits for the regular Afghan army.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 15th October 1912, also makes the same comment, and reports that the Mulla Powindah and his followers, who are State guests, have been permitted to buy guns and powder in the Kabul bazars, and that the purchases are being forwarded to the Mahsud country.

III.—Native States.

Kashmir affairs.

17. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 9th October 1912, has a letter headed "Viceroy's visit to Kashmir and reception by the Kashmir Muhammadans." The writer, one Abu Zafar, a Kashmiri, complains in the course of his remarks that, in connection with Lord Hardinge's visit to the Happy Valley, thousands of Muhammadans have been impressed to do different things without being paid for their work.

Maharaja of Kashmir and his Muhammadan subjects.

18. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 12th October 1912 :—

"His Highness the Maharaja of Kashmir has generously given Rs. 40,000 towards the cost of repairing the Jumma Masjid at Srinagar. This famous and historic mosque has twice been damaged by fire, and was last repaired under the auspices of the Emperor Aurangzeb. The Chief Minister, Rai Sahib Dewan Amar Nath, C.I.E., has undertaken the formation of a committee with a view to the collection of subscriptions for this object, to which he has himself liberally subscribed. The Muhammadan community are exceedingly gratified at His Highness' action, and are offering special prayers in their various mosques for the long life of His Highness and his Chief Minister. We publish elsewhere a letter on the subject."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Punjab Hindu Sabha.

19. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 8th October 1912, publishes a letter headed "The Punjab Hindu Sabha and the work before it." The writer—Dina Nath (Editor of the Hindustan)—says that the Sabha professes to aim at rendering social service to Hindus, but that the social differences between the various sections of Hindus are so great that no society can render such service to the Hindu community. It is only in regard to politics that Hindus of all persuasions can stand on a common platform, and this renders it necessary for the Sabha to take up the work of safeguarding the political rights and interests of Hindus. It should endeavour to remove the suspicion with which Hindu loyalty is still regarded, and to improve the relations between Hindus on the one hand and Government and Europeans on the other. Further, it should take steps to secure more effective representation of Hindus on the Legislative Councils, and should also set up a strong agitation against special favours being conferred on Muhammadans on the score of their supposed political importance. Hindus should attend the ensuing Hindu conference (in large numbers) with the object of bringing pressure to bear upon the office-bearers of the Sabha to leave nothing undone to serve th e Hindu community.

The Hindus and Muhammadans of Multan.

20. Writing under the heading "Swaraj in Multan," the Afghan (Peshawar), dated the 26th September and 5th October 1912, complains that the Multan Hindus have, under the impression that they are being supported by the local Hindu officers, been so emboldened that they have begun to make murderous assaults on Muhammadans in broad daylight. According to the Hindustan they consider it, forsooth, sinful to patronise Muslim tailors and artisans, and have vowed not to buy from any Muhammadan. Some too have decided to kill Muhammadans; and God alone can protect "us" if they continue buying from Hindus even after this. The only way for Musalmans to preserve their existence is to boycott Hindus, just as they themselves are boycotted by the latter. The paper here publishes the details of a case in a Multan in which a Muhammadan, named Pir Bakhsh, is said to have been killed by one Vir Bhan, because some drops of water accidentally fell on the Hindu's foot from a cup out of which a Muslim boy was drinking. It is, says the Afghan, abundantly clear from this that the unfortunate Muhammadans of Multan have been reduced to a very low state when such a thing can happen. It means too that the Hindus are at the zenith of temerity and cruelty. So long as Diwan Narindra Nath has under him a large number of pro-Hindu officers like Lala Gobind Ram, these "Muslim-killing and animal-worshipping people" will grow more emboldened from day to day. The interests of peace demand that "the clique of the powerful party" should be broken up and that the reins of he Multan district should be made over to a European Officer.

21. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 12th October 1912 :—

All India Hindu Sabha.

"Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath, Joint Secretary of the still-born organization of 1911 has addressed a few words of explanation to the Allahabad Leader for the collapse of the previous attempt. He says every one was engrossed by the Durbar and people could not be persuaded to assemble in large numbers in Benares. He practically suggests that the movement now projected by our friends at Delhi should be started on lines new and independent, distinct from the abortive attempt initiated at Benares. Referring to the list of questions proposed to be discussed at the next sessions of the Punjab Hindu Conference, he points out that, with the exception of one or two local matters, everything affects the Hindus as a body. He goes on to say :—

"The present is a very proper opportun'ty of forming an All-India Hindu Sabha. If, however, it be thought undesirable to include politics in the programme even to the limited extent the Punjab Sabha does, let an association be formed for only educational, social and religious reform. Each of these three is a very wide field of work, especially education, where the necessity of an association to watch and control the policy pursued in the system of both Government and private education, is becoming every day very paramount.'

"What is meant by politics in tabooing that subject from consideration or why there should be so much dread of politics it is incomprehensible. The Hindu Sabha has neither foreign politics nor foreign policy. It neither forms rifle clubs nor drills and equips soldiers. It has no idea of raising contingents for the defence of Tripoli or the Porte. All the politics it can talk about hardly go beyond the bread and butter problem of the many millions of ignorant and superstitious peop e trudging painfully in the background. If Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Associations can obtain the active and influential co-operation of the Judges of High Courts for the solution of this bread problem among the members of the community there is no reason why the Hindu Sabha cannot do likewise for the betterment of its community whose lot is infinitely worse than that of Eurasians and Anglo-Indians. Politics is not synonymous with bombs and Browning pistols, and no one with a clear conscience need dread it. As the delicate imagery of the Austrian would phrase it—'If the clothes were removed from our body so that we should stand before the solid phalanx of a practised C. I. D. in political nakedness and completely unveiled no spot would be visible on which the dark doubts of allegiance to the British Raj should be proved to exist.' Men of clear conscience should insist on the inclusion of every question that is of the highest and most enduring interest to the community. We trust that the delegates from this province will behave like men and like Panjabees. The counsel of Rai Bahadur Lala Baij Nath that in the last resort the All-India Hindu Sabha might confine itself to an annual educational conference is behind himself."

VII.—General Administration.

(d)—Education.

The proposed Benares University.

22. Writing under the heading "Attempt to breathe life into the half-dead body of the Hindu University," the Parkash (Lahore), of the 15th October 1912, says that the Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya's recent visit to Lahore was intended to serve the above purpose. It also refers to the strong Muslim opposition to the conditions laid down by Government in regard to denominational Universities, and asks Hindus not to accept the sort of University they would be given, employing arguments already used by it (vide paragraph 22 of Selections No. 32). The paper's suggestion is that the money collected for the Hindu University should be utilised in establishing a Central Technical College or in promoting free primary education among Hindus.

The Khalsa College.

23. One 'Lakshman Singh, Honorary Member of the Khalsa College Council,' contributes from Rawalpindi the following letter to the Tribune (Lahore), of 17th October 1912 :—

"We have been requested to publish the following letter :—

"To—The President, Khalsa College Managing Committee, Amritsar.

"Sir,—I crave leave to submit the following lines for favour of your consideration and that of the Members of the Managing Committee of the Khalsa College,

"I am a member of the now defunct Khalsa Diwan, Lahore, which inaugurated the Khalsa College movement and subsequently handed it over to a registered body called the Khalsa College Council. I was elected a member of the College Council in 1897 and continued as such until 1908 when changes were made in the constitution of the College and I and other active members of what was called the Lahore party were replaced by men who had the confidence of the Amritsar party. As an active member of the Managing Committee, when the Lahore party was in power, I contracted a passion for the institute and worked for it with great zeal and earnestness. This passion for the institution has prompted me to approach you with this petition.

"In the memorable meeting of the spring of 1908, I protested against the undue haste with which radical changes in the constitution were being rushed through; but it was all crying in the wilderness. Men had come prepared to say ditto to a pre-arranged programme. The only person who heard me with consideration was Colonel Younghusband, Commissioner of Lahore, who had been elected president of the Managing Committee at the previous meeting. The Sikhs mostly looked at me with stupefaction, and those who understood me seemed to be greatly elated at their success in having been able to oust those who had been their critics erstwhile. I urged for five things particularly :—

"(a) Abolition of the rule by which members once appointed were appointed for all life time.

"(b) Appointment of electoral colleges in all Sikh centres to enable the return of representative Sikhs to the Managing Committee.

"(c) Effective Government control to guard against the possibility of the Khalsa College ceasing to exist, as a result of the rivalries and jealousies of the various factions in the Council.

"(d) Provision for the exclusion from the Council of men who, though Sikhs by appearance, may not be so at all.

"(e) Increased representation on the Council of men of light and lead from the British districts.

"I rejoice to note from a close perusal, which when writing the leading article in the Khalsa Advocate of the next issue I could not afford, of a printed copy of the proposed changes in the constitution, that the Managing Committee of the College have come to regard the reforms, suggested in points (a) and (c) as called for. Dual control has proved a curse everywhere. Now that the Government shall have a comparatively free hand in the management of the College, I trust that the staff will be considerably strengthened by the appointment of men of high intellectual and moral calibre whose chief aim will be to honestly endeavour to take the Sikh youths by the hand, and attend to their harmonious development. But I beg deferentially to submit that the newly proposed constitution does not go far enough. The note to Article (4) has not prevented the election to the Council of men, Sikhs in appearance, but in league with the most inveterate foes of Sikhs and Sikhism. If the note is amended as follows the defect pointed out will be remedied :—

"Members of the Council other than European members nominated by Government, shall be professed Sikhs, i.e., Sikhs who are ready to declare that they adhere to the tenets of the ten Gurus and that they do not belong to any other religious sect. They shall be required to sign this declaration and confirm it by an oath before the Council.

"The matter referred to in point (b) is of paramount importance. If the suggestion is approved it will be possible for public spirited men of light and lead to come in the Council and add to its power of doing good.

"The point (e) has not only been lost sight of, but a very retrograde step is contemplated when it is proposed to reduce the number of members from British districts from 26 to 13. I have discussed this point at length in the leading article in the Khalsa Advocate of the issue above referred to, to which I respectfully invite your attention. Here I would only submit with deference that this proposed reduction in the number of members from British districts is sure to result in the deterioration of the Council. The members from the Native States, brought up under peculiar circumstances, will never bring that amount of independent judgment to bear upon the deliberations of the Council which the elected members from the British districts will be able to do, on account of their training and culture, under the liberal and enlightening influence of the British Rule, than whom none else can be more interested in its stability, for much of what importance they possess they owe to the good-will of British administrators."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

War in the Balkans.

1. The Watan (Lahore), of the 16th October 1912, reports that the Editor has received a cablegram from Husain Hilmi Pasha, late Prime Minister of Turkey and now President of the Red Crescent Society, Constantinople, appealing for funds, and asking that the appeal should be sent on to all newspapers in India for publication. The Editor has no doubt that the Watan's contemporaries will, without distinction of colour or creed, give publicity to the appeal and will urge all good-hearted people to give money for the sufferers of the war in the Balkans. He has also received a cablegram from the Muslim League, London, to say that Turkey stands in sore need of help and that Muhammadans in all parts of India should open relief funds and pass resolutions condemning the action of the Balkan States.

War in the Balkan.

2. The following is from the Comrade (Delhi), dated 12th October 1912:—

"With the Montenegrin attack on Turkey, the ruthless and open conflict of race and creed, which had been the nightmare of European diplomacy for more than a generation past, has at last begun. The stake is the Empire of the Turk in Europe.

"* * * The very idea of Montenegro challenging Turkey to battle is ludicrous. She has dared to step forth into the arena in obedience to a concerted and well-planned scheme of action. The Servian, Bulgarian and Greek Cabinets, too, have a correct measure of their military strength and would not indulge in tall talks and bellicose attitudes—the delirious war mobs notwithstanding—if they had not based their calculations on the strength of very definite assurances from other quarters. European diplomacy may stand aghast at their audacity, but not even a tyro can mistake the fingers of some of the agents of that diplomacy pulling the strings from behind the scenes. The issues of the present struggle are, therefore, big with fate. They involve the question of life and death for the Ottoman Empire in Europe.

"* * * Within the next week the crisis is bound to take a decisive turn; and Turkey may have to deal with the combined assault of the 'Confederacy.' If the crisis develop no further, Turkey may confidently look forward to the issue of the impending struggle. It is, however, when she has decided the military issue and finds her insolent enemies lying helplessly at her feet, that the real question of the Balkan settlement will arise. Will she be allowed to enjoy the hard-earned fruits of her victories? Sir Edward Grey is reported to have said that, in case war breaks out in the Balkans, every effort will be made to preserve unity of purpose amongst the Powers. Will he also endeavour to make sure, when the day of reckoning comes and the war is over, that Turkey is allowed to settle her account with her neighbours without interference or 'friendly' advice from the Powers? Let the 'Confederacy' have war, by all means, if it so desires—with all its consequences. If it succeeds in beating the Turks out of Europe, it is welcome to retain the spoils and divide them amongst its members. But if the Turks win and their generals hold 'parades at Sofia' and other centres of the 'Confederacy,' then no sentimental charlatans or interested schemers will, we trust, be allowed to interfere on behalf of 'struggling nationalities.' Will the European Concert be capable of this degree of self-restraint and fairplay? All history teaches us to be sceptical. Russia will not allow her protégés, the little 'Tsar of Bulgaria' and the King of Servia, to be driven into exile. Austria-Hungary has her own treaty obligations to discharge by saving Montenegro. Greece—the ancient Hellas, the land of Plato and Aristotle, the sacred haunt of the Muses—cannot of course be left to the tender mercies of the Turk. The result of the struggle would be that Turkey, after immense expenditure of blood and treasure, will be left where she was, to begin the struggle over again before another decade is over.

"* * * England has shown every desire to respect the susceptibilities of Turkey in 'the exchange of views' that took place between the Powers before the forces of diplomacy could be mobilised. We trust she will play an honourable part in settling the grave issues now confronting Europe. In the event of a European war she will find the Turks her most useful allies, while the Moslem fellow-subjects of the British nation can feel no greater honour than to fight for their sovereign as well as for their brethren in faith.

"The combined aggression of the Balkan States against Turkey is bound to create a profound impression throughout the Islamic world. If the Montenegrin attack brings about a general war, every Moslem will feel an irresistible call of duty to help those who will have to carry on a life and death struggle in defence of their honour and their rights. The feeling would be as strong and natural as the spiritual and moral ties that unite the followers of Islam. Some mischief-mongers have often tried to read into this feeling an aggressive political ambition or a burning hatred of Christendom. It is nothing of the kind. The Musalmans desire nothing more than that their brethren should be allowed to live in peace and freedom from the aggression of the racial and religious bigots in Europe. If ever a nation possessed the right to defend its home and liberties, the Turks possess it to-day in full measure. In trying to crush the forces of anarchy, organised revolt and militant 'confederacies' they would be striving to preserve the birth-rights of their nationality. No Musalman, in whose breast there exists the least fraternal feeling that has been the glory of his creed can see unmoved the struggle of his fellow-Moslems in a just and noble cause. He would regard it as a great privilege if he can share actively the stress and burden of that struggle. If, however, that privilege is denied him, he would never cease to pray to his God, Who has ever exalted righteousness and hated iniquity, that Right may triumph and Wrong may be trampled underfoot."

End of the Turco-Italian War.

3. Writing about the conclusion of peace between Italy and Turkey, the Watan (Lahore), of the 17th October 1912, says that, unless they are driven out by Italy, the Tripolitan Arabs will continue defending their country. As for Turkey, she knows her interests, wants, and duties better than the rest of the world, and must have concluded the peace only after mature deliberation.

In its issue, dated the 18th October 1912, the paper remarks that the terms of peace are the most acceptable that could have been devised under the existing circumstances. Turkey, it adds, has displayed wisdom in not having formally cut all connection with her African possession. This would give her the right to expel the Italians from Tripoli in the event of the local Arabs proving unable to do so.

The following on the same subject is from the Observer (Lahore), of 19th October 1912:—

"The news of the signing of peace between Turkey and Italy has been definitely confirmed. But the terms are by no means favourable to Turkey, and it looks as if the Arabs in Tripoli, who had so long maintained an unequal contest with the Italian forces, are about to be abandoned into the hands of a Power whose treatment of them so far has been characterised neither by humanity nor by justice. Nevertheless, there is considerable excuse for the course of action which Turkey has taken. With the Balkan Confederacy trying to aim a dagger at her very heart, it was of the utmost importance for Turkey to release the Ottoman fleet from the fear of Italian interference nearer home and to free her naval forces for action in the Balkan war. That is the sole reason why the Turks have concluded a peace which is bound to lower their prestige in the eyes of the entire Muslim world, especially the Arabian races of North Africa. The latter, it may be confidently predicted while deeply resenting the terms of the peace treaty, will redouble their efforts to resist the Italian aggression, and notwithstanding the conclusion of the war with Turkey, it will take Italy long before she can pacify the Arabs and claim their country as her own; while it is not unreasonable to expect that Turkey's severance of all connection with Tripoli may lead to the rise of a new Muslim Power in Africa."

England and Italian suzerainty over Tripoli.

4. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 22nd October 1912, says that it has saddened Muhammadans to learn that the British Government has acknowledged Italian suzerainty over Tripoli. After deprecating Sir Edward Grey's hurry in making the announcement, it observes that time will show whether the actual rulers of Tripoli are Sheikh Senoussi and Enver Bey, or the King of Italy and his friends. Sir Edward, it adds, cannot be congratulated on his foreign policy for the last 12 months, so far as it concerns the followers of Islam. Should, asks the Editor, the Foreign Minister of an Empire, which owns 10 crore Muhammadan subjects, follow such an unsympathetic policy towards Persia, Tripoli and other Islamic countries?

Italy and Tripoli.

5. Writing under the heading "The God-given Kingdom of Tripoli," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 23rd October 1912, states that Reuter's telegram about "Sir Edward Grey and Company," having acknowledged Italian sovereignty over Tripoli has fallen like lightning on the Muhammadan world. It does not wish to discuss in this article the freedom-killing and Muslim-offending policy of Sir Edward Grey and his "liberal" friends, for the reason that honest and fair-minded people have already formed their opinion on this subject. It will not, therefore, enquire whether England, who abolished slavery, who has always stood by the oppressed, and who, until 1897, had such regard for other nations' love of freedom that she did not allow the Turkish occupation of Thessaly, has so fallen away from morality and justice as to acknowledge Italian sovereignty over Tripoli, in spite of the Porte's firman conferring independence on its African possession. Nor will it ask whether Sir Edward Grey has not the least regard for the patriotism and love of liberty of those brave and self-respecting Arabs who have been sacrificing themselves at the altar of freedom for the past twelve months. Nor will it enquire whether he feels no shame in acknowledging Italy's imaginary sovereignty over those desperate Muhammadans, who carry their lives in their hands and have vowed to God and the Prophet not to bend the knee to Italy so long as even one of them is left alive, and whether the (present) Ministers deserve to be called Liberals even after having made over such a brave and freedom-loving people to an unclean, tyrannical, and barbarous nation like the Italians. It knows that, if it were to put these questions to Sir Edward Grey and his "boon companions," they would only hang down their heads in reply. It will, therefore, confine itself to speaking of the feelings of lakhs of Muhammadans, whom the severance of Tripoli's connection with Turkey has plunged into the profoundest grief. The general Muslim public is asking "if Tripoli was to be made over to the Italians (in the end), why was not this done at the very outset? Should the bloodshed for one year . . . . . have ended in the most sacred legacy left to Muhammadans by the Caliphs being quietly made over to the unclean and filthy Italians?" This proceeding is, in view of the defeats sustained by Italy, wholly antagonistic to the traditions of the Islamic religion. It is true that the Turks are now in trouble; that they have been simultaneously attacked by Servia, Bulgaria, Montenegro and Greece; and that their troubles would have been greatly increased by Italy joining their assailants. But what guarantee is there that Italy, Russia, Austria or some other Muslim-tearing wolves of Europe—who care nothing for treaties and lose no opportunity of attacking Islamic countries—will let Turkey live in peace, in spite of her having given up possession of Tripoli? Do not Turkish statesmen know that Europe could have forcibly prevented the Satanic Balkan confederacy from letting loose the dogs of war, but that it has refrained from doing so with the set purpose of convening an International Conference, after Turkey has been weakened, to prevent injury to the confederates, even if they are defeated, and to have Macedonia made independent? This being so, why have the Turks, for the sake of the wretched provinces of Macedonia and Albania, more than half of the population of which consists of turbulent and vile Christians, made over to the Italians a purely Islamic country like Tripoli, thereby casting on Turkish history a foul blot, that has degraded Islam and its followers in the eyes of the whole world? These thoughts are harrowing Muhammadans, and the Editor has received numerous letters to this effect from his co-religionists. After reproducing one of these communications; the writer of which is "Mistri" Azizullah of Gujrat, he states that he sent a reply pre-paid telegram to the Prime Minister of Turkey to say that the terms of peace as cabled by Reuter had caused a panic among Indian Muhammadans. He also enquired whether Tripoli had really been made over to Italy; but no reply has so far been received.

A suggestion regarding the establishment of commercial relations between Indian Muhammadans and the Turks.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 22nd October 1912, has a letter under the heading "The commercial aspect of the the Tripolitan War," in which the writer urges Indian Musalmans to enter into commercial relations with the Turks; boycotting the manufactures of Italy, Greece, Austria, Germany, Russia, &c. They should also curtail their wants and utilize the money thus saved for promoting "Islamic trade" between India and Turkey, a course which would end not a few of their difficulties. The first step towards the attainment of this object consists in expanding their trade in India itself and placing the same on a stable footing. Just as the Bengalis made use of the partition of their province to further the cause of Swadeshism, they also should utilize the Tripolitan war for gaining the above end.

Indian Muhammadans and Turkish affairs.

7. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 18th October 1912, publishes some Urdu verses entitled "The Tripolitan war." The writer—Maulvi Ghulam Hazrat Khan, Haziq, Professor, Ramsay College, Almora—begins by referring to the past greatness of Muhammadans and says that they are now in serious trouble. Next he speaks of the alleged Italian atrocities in Tripoli and urges his co-religionists to shake off their sleep and close up their ranks, for their enemies have laid an ambush for them. He also calls upon rich Musalmans to earn merit by rendering pecuniary help to the Arabs (in Tripoli), if they have not the courage to wage jehad with the sword. Continuing, he thus addresses the Sultan of Turkey :—

"O Caliph of Islam! This is the day of war.

"Let the flaming sword remain out of the scabbard.

"The oppressors are harassing from all sides.

"It is necessary to display a sense of honour to-day.

"Let there be decisive war with the mischievous ;

"Let the sword of ghiza and jehad stagger the world."

After referring to the war fever (in Turkey), he writes as follows :—

"O great monarch! If the present excitement continues,

"(Thy) rule will extend up to the heavens.

"It is not our practice to give way to any one.

"(Our) head may remain on our shoulders or be struck off, but we will not live a life of disgrace.

"We will sacrifice our lives and our 'country and religion'—;

"We will so fight, that the very earth will shake."

Proceeding, he asserts that the Islamic army is strong enough to crush a combination of the Balkans and Crete. "Let the poets of the nation therefore compose verses to encourage Muslim warriors" and warm the hearts of inert members of "the nation," and let meetings, to collect money, be held everywhere. Finally the poet addresses a prayer to God to preserve the honour of Muhammadans and save them from ruin.

Commenting on a note in the Jhang Sial (Lahore) charging Indian Muhammadans with devoting their sympathy and money to the aid of their co-religionists in Islamic countries and neglecting Indian affairs, the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 18th October 1912, remarks that Hindus, being confined to India, cannot understand what Pan-Islamism means. The Jhang Sial is, however, right in complaining that the Prophet's followers do not pay the requisite attention to the wants of India (lit. local wants). But it should rest assured that now, when their eyes have been opened by Government, Muhammadans will soon engage, side by side with Hindus, "in the struggles of political life."

Indian Muhammadans and Turkey.

8. The Panjabee (Lahore), of 24th October 1912, has the following under the heading "Politics and Religion" :—

"It is interesting to note with what ingenuity political fervour is excited by religious motives and religious fervour by political designs in Muslim countries. One of the Turkish leaders is said to have recently sent an appeal to the Muhammadans in India denouncing the aggressive political attitude of European States against Turkey and asking for funds to aid the defenders of Islam who have fallen in the battle. Though the object of the appeal is humanitarian and deserving of aid, it should not be mixed up with political motives and disputes. If the Indian Muslim concern for Turkey has a religious and not a political basis, we fail to see why religious fervour should be excited through political menace. Is the war declared to establish the supremacy of either Christianity or Islam in the region affected? In this connection it is useful to note that a London correspondent dealing with the Balkan situation, points out that 'on the confines of Turkey religious tolerance is as yet an unknown emotion. How to comb out the mixed population so that Christians and Muhammadans may exist, though side by side, in separate water-tight compartments, will be the great problem of the future, the solution of which, as far as details are concerned, is hopelessly out of sight at present.' This seems to show that religious intolerance or prejudice still actuates the countries dominated by Muhammadan rule, and one of the results of the war will be the establishment of conditions leading to tolerance."

The following note is also from the same paper :—

"Have Indian Muhammadans any more interest in Turkish politics than Hindus have in the affairs of their Mahants? For Muhammadans Turkey is a name to conjure with, even as ecclesiastical estates are to religiously minded Hindus. In the heyday of his prosperity, Tippoo, the Tiger of Mysore, was manœuvring to obtain a Sannad from Turkey, investing him with the title of Sultan. Before the British attack upon Seringapatam, Tippoo was in intimate alliance with the Sultan of Turkey. What did Turkey do to save Tippoo? Tippoo was then a Power at least as great as that of the Amir of Afghanistan. The Nizam was another Power, but he threw in his lot with the British in order to crush Tippoo who was a thorn in his side. What did Bahawal Khan do when Auckland decided upon the Afghan War? The new cult of Pan-Islamism should explain these and similar historic conundrums, before raising a contingent of Indian Muhammadans to fight the enemies of Turkey."

Muslim Volunteers for Turkey.

9. The following is from the Comrade (Delhi), dated 12th October 1912 :—

"We have received the following letter from Mr. Shaukat Ali, which we hope will be read with considerable interest by our Muslim readers :—'May I beg for a little space in your esteemed paper to make an earnest appeal to Muslims in India to organize a Volunteer Corps to fight against the fillibustering gang of dacoits in the Balkans? There is no doubt about the feeling of the Mussalmans all over the country; but I think we should give a more practical proof of our strong sympathy. A few thousand young men could easily be found in the country willing to fight for a great and glorious cause. I know many Musalmans are anxious to go out to help their co-religionists if some one takes upon himself to organise a Volunteer Corps. I would have gladly taken this duty upon myself; but unfortunately I have many things on my hands just now. However, I would be proud to be one of the Volunteers and will pay my own expenses. It would do the Musalmans—specially those of us who have not always lived up to its high ideals—no end of good if we learn it to die for our great faith. Surely, we in India have not forgotten our past traditions. A glorious death in fighting for Islam is a thousand times better than the kind of life many of us are leading. Our Government, I am happy to say, is on the side of truth and righteousness, and would not like to see Turkey swallowed up by her unneighbourly neighbours. I am sure that the Government of India will help us in fulfilling the desire of every true Muslim's heart.' We need hardly say that Mr. Shaukat Ali's appeal to his Muslim brethren is simple, direct and sincere: and those who know his over-flowing optimism know as well that it is at times very infectious. But, will his appeal succeed in evoking what he calls 'a practical proof of our strong sympathy'? We rather take it as a challenge to the Musalmans; and we confess we are curious to learn the way in which the challenge will be received. Many things tempt us to revise our estimate of the Indian Musalman of to-day. We may be wrong. They may not be pigeon-livered, nor lacking in gall to make disappointments bitter. All we do know is that they possess an enormous fund of wordy sympathy. Is action reserved for a final effort in the last ditch? We would rather wait and see. The cup of Turkey's troubles is now full to the brim. If Turkey is to perish better far it should perish sword in hand. That awful catastrophe may not come. But if it ever comes, will it find many or few among the Musalmans in this country who would not wish to be on the side of their brethren fighting for their honour, faith and fatherland. The present crisis is full of grave possibilities; and while every Indian Muslim will, we trust, send material help for the wounded soldiers and widows and orphans of the heroes who may fall in battle, we should like to see if there will be many whose one desire would be to go and share with their Turkish brethren the privilege of defending Islam or the glory of death in a righteous cause. As regards the attitude of our Government, we are happy to think the British Foreign Office has taken a leading part in trying to curb the belicose tendencies of the Balkan States. The situation has, however, grown out of the control of European diplomacy. A big struggle, with immense potentialities for becoming world-wide is imminent. Under the circumstances the Indian Government, we are sure, will not feel the slightest objection against the Indian Mussalmans going out to fight for Turkey. Volunteering for a good cause has been the privilege of the individual in every civilised State. We know of scores of brave and generous-hearted Englishmen who have fought in defence of right, freedom and justice in foreign lands. Lord Minto fought as a volunteer on the side of Turkey in the last Russo-Turkish War. As long as the requirements of neutrality are scrupulously satisfied, the Indian Muslims will, we trust, experience no difficulties in going out as volunteers to Turkey. The Bulgarian Premier is reported to have said that 'the impending war is the appalling ransom we are going to pay for our Christian brethren thrust back by impious men into the godless pandemonium branded by Gladstone's immortal words.' Here is another direct challenge to the whole world of Islam. Is the sense of honour and shame of the Indian Muslim quick enough to realise what this challenge means?"

10. The Watan (Lahore), of the 18th October 1912, has a note headed "Is it neutrality?" in which it refers to the Powers' protest against the seizure of some Greek ships by Turkey, and goes on to say that, while their hearts have been filled with feelings of love and sympathy for Greece, they did not consider it unlawful for Italy to invade Tripoli without a warning, and to practise satanic oppression, not only on combatants, but on helpless women, children and old people. Again, while Italy was held justified in capturing and searching ships belonging to neutral powers, the contrary treatment is being accorded to Turkey for having seized, in her own waters, a ship owned by an avowed enemy. Nor is this all. The powers have made a pronouncement regarding the preservation of the States, whatever may be the result of the war in the Balkans. After asking why the same step was not taken in connection with the Tripolitan war, the paper says that (Christian) Europe is not to blame for all this; the strong have always similarly treated the weak. The Editor is of opinion that Russia and Austria are likely to profit by the war, and will secure some "rich morsels."

The Powers and Turkey.

11. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 23rd October 1912, has a note headed "Release of Sheikh Shawadesh." It will please the lovers of justice and liberty to learn, says the paper, that Sheikh Abdul Aziz Shawadesh, Editor of the Hilal (Constantinople), who was recently arrested by the Turkish Police on a charge of sedition and sent to Egypt, has at last been discharged, probably for want of sufficient proof against him. The paper then remarks that the Sheikh deserves congratulations on his third escape from calamity, in which respect he bears an extraordinary resemblance to the noted Bengali nationalist, Arabindo Ghose.

Sheikh Shawadesh.

12. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 22nd October 1912, publishes the following under the heading "British treason and British tolerance";—

The Irish Home Rule agitation in England.

"It is not easy to describe the feelings of the Indian people at the progress of treason in Great Britain and Ireland over the Irish Home Rule question and the suffragette movement. Open rebellion and armed resistance are preached by certain persons of both factions and the Government has yet taken no action. Sir Edward Carson is not aware of any treason in his policy, but he said if he was a criminal it was the Government that made him one! For a hundredth part of the offence of this nature any Indian would have been either deported or sent to penal servitude for life. And yet what is treason in India is not apparently treason in Great Britain, whose fine examples are a lesson to all the empires and the world. No one wants that Indian repression and Indian highhandedness should be imitated by the Home Government. But when a Cabinet Minister of the stamp of Lord Morley unhesitatingly sanctioned deportation without trial and all the repressive measures which will never be forgotten or excused by the Indian nation, the attitude of the British Government is ununderstandable. The Tory Party is willing to concede all that the Ulster resisters under the lead of Carson and Cecil have adopted. These are said to be the 'natural rights' of all minorities against 'Government tyranny.' Well, if the precedent is a sound one, the Tories must beware of finding eager imitators of the same policy of resistance in other parts of the British Empire. We can scarcely view the British tolerance of treason without discomfort, especially when British authorities in India are so prompt to take severe action against sedition discovered in cloth borders, match boxes, scent bottles, and private conversation. Look at this picture and on that!"

13. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 22nd October 1912, publishes the following under the heading "Unappreciated citizenship":—

The Afghans in Ceylon.

"A report is published that the Ceylon Government have represented to the India Office the urgency and importance of prohibiting the emigration of Afghans from India to Ceylon. Now, India is not the home of the Afghans in any sense, and the Indian Government is not interested in protecting them. They come from the 'only' independent and flourishing Moslem Kingdom in the world, namely, Afghanistan; and it is certainly uncomplimentary to the citizenship of that State, that its superfluous and emigrant citizens should be 'not-wanted' by Ceylon, in common with Calcutta, Bombay and other Indian cities. We believe it is not a question of colour or Asiatic prejudice. But the Afghan element is too good for the mild affairs of India or Ceylon. We wonder whether His Majesty the Amir would regard the protest of the Ceylon Government as uncomplimentary to his people. It is more likely that the Indian Muslems will put it down as another menace to their religion. In any case, we recollect that the Times correspondent has regarded Afghans and their State as the central pivot on which the future Islamic power turns. Now that Turkey is in trouble and Persia is paralysed, Afghan citizenship should be at least comparable to the Roman citizenship in the Augustian age or in the time of Julius Cæsar. Afghans should go into all parts of the world carrying the high value of their civilisation, religion and arts. If the light of Pan-Islamism should illumine the darkness of the infidel world, who else could carry the torch but the imperial Afghans, assisted by their veteran Indian compatriots? Is it not a little incongruous that at a time like this the Ceylon Government should seriously address the India Office to prohibit the Afghan emigrants?"

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Afghanistan affairs.

14. In a note headed "Our real gate-keeper" the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 16th October 1912, reports that it was remarked by the Amir in his speech at the Darbar held by him on the 28th September last that, if the Afghans wished to ensure the safety of their country for all time to come, they should not hesitate to sacrifice both life and money for the purpose. The Pioneer's Frontier correspondent regards His Majesty's words with suspicion, but it should never be forgotten that the ruler of Kabul is the real gate-keeper of India, and that, if his military strength is not up to the mark, it will not be possible to prevent Russia from invading this country from the north-west.

Raids in the Punjab.

15. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 22nd October 1912 :—

"Lala Harji Mal, Banker and Rais of Peshawar, has addressed a letter to the Punjab Hindu Sabha Conference setting forth what appears to be the official view of the dacoities and raids. We do not doubt the fact that the Government were doing something to prevent the raids, but certainly no one can say that they have given adequate protection to the Hindus, who are the bulk of the victims. Had they done so, either by supplying arms or giving armed police, the dacoits would have been repulsed in most cases. Lala Harji Mal says that the raids were mainly due to the proximity of the wild and lawless borderland, but he forgets that when Government does not allow the people to have fire arms, it is bound to protect their life and property. In spite of all that Government could do, they have not prevented looting and attacks, particularly on Hindus. We do not want excuses and apologies for the failure, as Lala Harji Mal gives. The failure is there and must be candidly admitted. The measures adopted have been unavailing. Whose then is the obligation to protect the disarmed people? What does it avail the victims of loot, if official apologists adduce extenuating circumstances? We hope that Lala Harji Mal will realise the inadequacy of the present police 'protection' and the necessity of applying more effective means both by allowing the people licenses for keeping fire arms aad vigorously setting about to arrest and punish the dacoits. As the dacoits' home is the North-West Frontier Province, the authorities there must first 'muzzle their dogs' and adopt stringent measures."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Hindus and Mu hammadans, and Muslim interests abroad.

16. Writing in the Hindustan (Lahore), of the 16th October 1912, under the heading "Don't abuse the Turks," the Editor says that a friend of his, a Muhammadan of Delhi (the reference seems to be to Hasan Nizami) has written to ask him to cease opposing and abusing the Turks. After contending that he has not so far been guilty of the charge laid at his door, he says that his paper does not, of course, pray for victory to the Turkish arms. Indeed, no member of the Hindu press ought to offer such a prayer, and that is the only position which the followers of Hinduism can honestly take up. Muhammadans may take this ill, but they themselves are to blame in the matter. They demand special rights and preferential treatment from Government, saying that, politically, they are more important than Hindus; a claim which they base on the fact that their co-religionists wield the sceptre in Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan. This is the treatment that Hindus receive from the Osmanlis; and, consequently, to ask them to pray for Turkish prosperity is tantamount to requiring them to pray for further humiliation for themselves. It would be unnatural in Hindus to pray that the Turks may prosper and rule, as long as they know that Turkish prosperity and rule are used to insult Hindus. On the one hand, Muhammadans claim that the fact of the Turks wielding the sceptre is a source of honour to them and of disgrace to the followers of Hinduism; but, on the other, they ask Hindus to join them in prayers for increase of prosperity to the rulers of Turkey. "These living personifications of tyrannical jesting" say to Hindus—"Such and such an Islamic kingdom is in danger. Come, let us, the two communities of India, unite in the name of liberty and patriotism and bring pressure to bear on the British Government to use its influence to ensure the safety of this Islamic kingdom." This demand on their part is grossly unreasonable, selfish, and insulting to the laws of nature. They should withdraw their offensive claim to political pre-eminence before requesting Hindus to join them in prayers for the continued rule of the Turks. So long, however, as they persist in this claim, it is perfectly natural for Hindus to desire the extinction of all those causes on the strength of which the claim is made.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

17. Writing under the heading "The Hindu press in agony," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 17th October 1912, says that Hindus lost the sceptre several hundred years ago. Some of their papers, it adds, feel angry at the thought of Muhammadans also not having been deprived of their liberty and become slaves of others; at the thought of Turkey, Afghanistan and other Islamic countries not having passed into the hands of Europeans. They are showing their anger in different ways, as is shown by the two extracts quoted from the Panjabee and the Jhang Sial, which regard the war in the Balkans as presaging evil for Turkey. Continuing, the paper says that the acutest pain has been caused to it by the appearance in the Hindustan of an article headed "Don't abuse the Turks," (vide paragraph 16 ante). No one, it remarks in conclusion, asks the Hindustan to pray for victory to the Turks, but it should not on the other hand heap abuse on that poor nation.

Mul ammadans.

18. According to the Vakil (Amritsar), of 16th October, Indian Muhammadans have two claims on Government: firstly, their loyalty to Government, and secondly, the mere fact that they live in India.

As regards their loyalty, the incompetence of their own leaders has resulted in every action of Indian Muhammadans being represented to Government as something disloyal; and, although from their second claim they should be allowed to live a life of peace, unmolested, the actual state of affairs is evident from the following incidents:—

1. A Hindu Munsif at Meerut makes over a mosque, "in spite of admitting the proof" (sic!), to a bania, by a decree, which is, thanks to Hindu Ahlkars, upheld on appeal. Again, the Municipal Secretary harasses the mosque people in various ways; "and the collector passes orders against them and even a copy thereof is not given."

2. The Tahsildar, the Sub-Inspector (of Police), the Postmaster, the Sub-Registrar and the Girdawar at Sardhana, Meerut district, are all Hindus. Last year the (local) Muhammadans sacrificed as usual a cow in their Mohulla, which does not contain a single Hindu house. They were, however, prosecuted by the Hindus, and the case is still pending. In Ramzan last, the Hindus made "arrangements for cymbals and conches to be played" while the Muhammadans were engaged in prayers.

3. The Lahore Municipality has caused nearly 100 graves, near the shrine of Shah Abdul Maali, to be demolished in connection with the construction of a subterranean drain.

4. There was a dispute over a Muslim graveyard between Pandit Kishori Lal and the Muhammadans of Dholana, Meerut district. A case was instituted in the court of Pandit Pyare Lal, who ordered the dead bodies to be exhumed and the ground to be levelled. The Musalmans filed an appeal, but it was rejected by (Pandit) Kanhya Lal, Additional Judge, Meerut. The original order was upheld by Mr. Justice Banerji, even on appeal in the High Court, Allahabad, and has been now carried out.

A consideration of the above should show that gross oppression is being practised on the Prophet's followers. Under no Government in the world had dead bodies been subjected to such oppression; but this is now being done in India. Muhammadans should not, however, lose heart. Government bears them no enmity, and there is, consequently, no reason why their efforts (to mend matters) should prove ineffective. If they keep quiet over insults to their religion and to the dead bodies of their ancestors, they must undoubtedly suffer the consequences.

The Hindu Conference.

19. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of 19th October 1912 :—

* * * * *

"That inert mass of humanity called the Hindu community, whose different units for the last twelve hundred years have cared more for dissension than unity, is just now face to face with a critical stage in its history. It is obsessed by perils which no longer support an attitude of supreme indifference to its surroundings and urgently call for combined action in order to live. Thanks to the growing 'political importance' of united, vigorous and self-assertive communities at its expense on the one hand, and on the other hand its own colossal apathy towards what is called the submerged classes forming the bulk of its population, the Hindu community is fast losing ground both politically and numerically. The discordant elements of Hindu society have begun to feel the impact of the crisis, and there are welcome signs on all sides of a growing consciousness to the need of combined action for self-preservation. The Punjab Hindu Conference, inaugurated in Lahore in 1909, brought the first message of hope in this happy direction, and its fourth session at Delhi is going to see the further expansion of a growing national self-consciousness among the Hindus.

"The Hindu Conference is thus clearly not an aggressive movement. It is prompted by instincts of self-preservation. Hindu unity, if ever this fateful consummation is achieved through it, will be a colossal factor in the progress and prosperity of India and the peace of the world. A compact Hindudom, tolerant yet invincible, will be the only stable foundation of an Indian nation and the best fruit of British rule."

The fourth Punjab Hindu Conference.

20. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 23rd October 1912 :—

"The fourth session of the Punjab Hindu Conference is come and gone. From all accounts it appears to have been a success. Although the number of delegates was not large, the attendance was large and the proceedings were marked by steady enthusiasm, while most of the speeches were thoughful. Not the least noteworthy feature of the gathering was the presence of the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey, the Chief Commissioner of Delhi, with the Deputy Commissioner, at the first sitting of the Conference. The Chief Commissioner listened throughout to the address of the President. This shows that the choice of the first Chief Commissioner had fallen on a really sympathetic administrator. The success of the recent session of the Conference had fully dissipated the gloomy apprehensions of those who feared that the lamented demise of its founder and main pillar would prove a death-blow to the Sabha and its activity. Its future is now assured. To use the language of metaphor, the barge has successfully weathered the storm and the breakers and has proved its sea-worthiness. It is true that the Sabha and the Conference have had more than their usual fill of criticism, both helpful and hostile, but they have not run the gauntlet in vain. As the President of this session observes, the Sabha has gathered strength begotten of the course of discipline to which it has been subjected. Yet compared with the venom and vitriol that have been poured on a bigger and a greater assembly—we mean the Indian National Congress—the onslaught on the Sabha has been quite trifling. And the Sabha, any more than the Congress, cannot be put down by scowls. No doubt the Sabha has its lachez and they are neither few nor small. But these can only be remedied by its candid friends putting their shoulder to the wheel instead of skulking like Achilles in the tent. It is only by the wakeful vigilance of the entire community that the Sabha can be what it should."

The following on the same subject is from the Punjabee (Lahore), dated 22nd October 1912 :—

* * * * * *

"The Conference would have been different had the Punjab taken a little more interest in it. We regret to find that, apart from the delegates returned from Delhi and environs, the Punjab proper was not represented as fully as might have been. It may be comforting to state that even at Amritsar the number of delegates from the districts was not much larger. But that does not justify the attitude of indifference assumed by men who blame the Hindu Sabha. The list of delegates sent from several parts of the province makes a respectable show, but the actual representation of the Province at the Conference is miserably small. We do not overlook the fact that the Conference is held during Dusserah when Hindus are generally engaged in worship and when they are disinclined to permit an intrusion of worldly affairs. Every allowance has therefore to be made to the inconvenience felt by the pious and orthodox classes of people. Still it should not have been difficult to secure the attendance of select representatives from every district, if not also from every Tahsil in the Province. In any case the inconvenience of absence from one's own place during festivities having been felt successively during the last four years it now behoves the Hindu Sabha to alter the time of meeting from Dusserah to Easter holidays, as suggested by Lala Harji Mall of Peshawar. There is no doubt that the Hindus are fully alive to the numerous disabilities to which they are at present subject. But they are essentially a spiritual people and refuse to be disturbed from their spiritual engagements during Dusserah. By persisting to hold the Conference during these sacred days the leaders would be unwittingly creating the impression that either the disabilities are unreal or the people do not feel them as such. That delegates do make a sacrifice even under the existing conditions and that in spite of their religious inclinations they gather together in such numbers from distant parts of the Province indicate their determination to give expression to their inmost feelings on the public questions of the day. We are confident that with better organization, with better management and with a more convenient date for the Conference these annual sessions will become a valuable and helpful force in the regeneration of the Hindus of this Province. The parent association at Lahore will have to work with unflagging zeal and organise working agencies in every district. The first effort in this direction is the appointment of a paid Secretary to put into execution the resolutions passed at the Conference. We trust this question will be taken up forthwith and the programme of the Sabha during the next few months settled without loss of time.

"As regards the resolutions of the Conference there is not much to say. Nearly all of them are old propositions. The subjects that are new and pressing are those which relate to the raising of the status of the Punjab Chief Court, the extension of the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the Punjab Chief Court to the North-West Frontier Province, the protest against the tendency of the income-tax officials to discredit the account books of merchants and traders, and the necessity of starting a daily newspaper in Delhi to advocate the cause of the Hindus. The first two of these resolutions may seem inconsistent in view of the fact that one of the contentions of the Government of India before 1901 was that the Frontier Districts formed part of the Punjab and that the Chief Court should be a minister of justice, 'so that it may be able to issue to the subordinate courts orders and directions in a way that would be out of the question in the case of a High Court.' In the course of the debate that was raised in the Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, in 1911, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor also stated that the separation of the North-West Frontier Province from the Punjab had altered the circumstances and seemed inclined to think that that was by no means an unimportant ground for the creation of the High Court. It is not clear how the Conference can ask simultaneously both for a High Court and for the extension of the Chief Court's jurisdiction to the North-West Frontier Province. Perhaps the second proposal has been adopted as an alternative; and considering that this also finds favour with the people of the Frontier Province, the Government of India may be pleased to consider favourably the resolution passed by the Conference on this subject. One of the two remaining resolutions, viz., that relating to income-tax was briefly referred to by Rai Bahadur Pyari Lal in his opening speech; and we gather that the mercantile community at Delhi keenly feel the effect of the attempt to discredit their account books. If the account books of merchants and bankers are discredited by the Courts of Law in the manner in which the income-tax officials do there is an end of all business. As it is, we have the anomaly that what is good evidence for judicial proceedings as between man and man is inadmissible as between the State and the subject. This is a matter which should be taken up for more direct representation by an association of merchants and traders. We are glad that Delhi is alive to the necessity of a daily newspaper. It wants not one but two papers, one for all India in English and another for Hindustan in Hindi. It is mainly a question of funds; and Delhi is rich enough to find funds. If it takes the initiative, the Punjab and the United Provinces will not hesitate to co-operate."

The Panjabee (Lahore), also publishes the following in its issue of 24th October 1912:—

* * * * * *

"Over twenty resolutions were passed at the Conference and these cover a wide range of public work and duties, some of which devolve more on the people themselves. Whether we have to do it or get the help of Government for it, persistent work is necessary. The Government of India lately remarked that they were not aware of any dissatisfaction of the Punjab Hindus in regard to Punjab Police appointments, since a solitary memorial was addressed two years ago. This causes surprise to us, but we must also remember that Government have a large number of public questions on hand and require constant reminding and urging in matters which call for a change of policy and precedent. The scanty representation of the Hindus, the disabilities of communal benefits, the question of physical (and, we fear, followed by mental) degeneration of Hindus, the inadequate protection to the people in the mofussil, conciliatory boards—these are all subjects regarding which fresh facts and more convincing arguments arise every year. All these have to be duly brought to notice and, wherever practicable, redressed. The branch Sabhas in the towns should not only be started wherever there are Hindus, but arrangements ought to be made to regulate their work and connect them with the central organisation. To do all this and to bear the brunt of the responsibilities, we require a more settled and organised form of work. We hope that with the closing of the Delhi Conference, the Hindus will not also cease their activities till another year. We hope also each Hindu will not consider it is wholly the duty of some one else to do all and he himself may do nothing. We must constantly remind ourselves of the simple truth that man does not live and work for himself apart from society, but he is a social and political unit. It is the duty of every Hindu to contribute to the public work in some form or other. Let us hope that this patriotic spirit, now lying dormant, will be roused and utilised for the constructive good of the society.

"The resolutions passed at the Conference will, in due course, be submitted to the Government. In this connection we venture to make a suggestion. We would like to ask if it is not more advantageous to adopt the Congress form of meeting the head of the administration in a deputation and submitting the resolutions to him personally. We remember Lord Curzon once refused to receive the Congress deputation, but subsequently a more sympathetic Viceroy established the precedent that Government is for the good of the people. We have no doubt that Sir Louis Dane will encourage such direct personal representations by popular organisations to the Government. The occasion may serve to create a more hopeful outlook for the dejected people in their expectations from Government and also a more responsible and sober representation of public wants. We trust that these and other questions will engage the earnest attention of the Punjab Hindus and their leaders."

VI.—Legislation.

The Revised Council Regulations.

21. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), dated 18th October 1912:—

"When the Regulations for the Punjab under the Reform Scheme were promulgated for the first time and the Sikhs were left out in the cold, it was considered that this was due to an over-sight. His Honour Sir Louis Dane, it was thought, who had spent most of his time in the Frontier Province, was perhaps then not intimately acquainted with the circumstances obtaining in the province and therefore he did not move the authorities for an adequate representation of the community.

"The nation was for the last three years, upheld mainly, by the hope that if they represented their real grievances the balance would be set right at the next election.

"All this, however, has proved a fool's dream as far as the elected members are concerned. In the Revised Council Regulations for the Punjab there is not even a mention of the Sikh claims. His Excellency and His Honour have on more than one occasion expressed their anxiety for the protection of the Sikh interests, while Sir Louis Dane had given a pledge on the specific point of the Council representation in his reply to the address of the Chief Khalsa Diwan at Amritsar. In spite and in the face of all this and even when the arguments which have determined a differential treatment for the Moslems apply with much greater force to this community and are even larger in number, absolutely nothing has been done in the Revised Rules to provide any safeguards for Sikh interests. The extremely cold treatment has thrown the community into a depth of disappointment. The voice of the whole nation has gone for nothing and not the least attention seems to have been paid to the pre-eminently just demands which have been recognised even by un-Sikh papers, of a people who have unflinchingly stood by the Union Jack ever since the annexation of the Punjab.

"As loyal subjects of the crown we cannot but submit to His Honour as well as to His Excellency that unless substantial provision is made for the conservation of Sikh interests, the disappointment of the community will sink deep into the hearts of its members.

"We regret that if nothing is done Sir Louis Dane's regime will be associated in Sikh minds with utter disregard of their just rights."

Council regulations in the Punjab.

22. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 22nd October 1912 :—

"The revised regulations for the Punjab extend the franchise to 9 Municipalities in the Eastern group, 5 in the Central group, and 7 in the Western group. In addition they grant franchise to the District Boards also, though to a limited extent. The country is doubtless thankful to the Government for small mercies. But examined closely the boon disillusions even official apologists. It will be seen from the special article we publish to-day that the elective element in the Punjab is not as strong as in other provinces. For instance, in the Municipal groups we have out of a total of 386 only 274 elected members while in the District Board groups out of a total of 421 we have only 52 elected members. But our complaint is not merely against the smallness of the proportion of the elective element in the aggregate. There are Municipalities like Gurgaon, Rohtak, Montgomery and Lyallpur in which the elective element is either totally wanting or is only nominal. The mixing of the Cantonment Committees with the Municipalities is likewise detrimental to the independence of the electoral groups. However, the object of the Government in maintaining existing conditions seems to be to steady popular influences. We have to accept this decision in a good spirit, but at the same time press for more liberal concessions."

Hindus and Muhammadans at the ensuing elections.

23. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 22nd October 1912 :—

"At the forthcoming elections Hindus and Muhammadans may co-operate, recognise each other's rights and help forward the cause of progress which must be dear to both. The Government has allotted eight seats for elected members. Of these one is neutral, viz., the member who represents the University. Another who represents the Punjab Chamber of Commerce may also be regarded neutral. Out of the remaining 6 seats it should be possible for Hindus and Muhammadans to allot three for each community, and give their votes to candidates without any racial distinction. For instance, if it can be arranged that the Hindus might represent the Eastern and Central Municipal groups and the Western District Board group, Muhammadan candidates need not contest seats in the respective groups. Similarly Hindu candidates need not contest the two District Board seats, viz., Eastern and Central, and the Municipal seat in the Western group. If such an understanding be possible between Hindus and Muhammadans, there will be a fair contest between rival candidates (Hindu and Muhammadan) in each one of the six constituencies. Failing such a course, Hindus should merge their differences and unite in order to secure at least 3 seats for themselves. Unhealthy rivalries leading to a splitting of votes will spell ruin to Hindu interests. Intending candidates should, therefore, be invited to a conference on this subject. There is no time to be lost and the Hindu Sabha should move promptly in the matter. In this connection we note the question was moved at an informal meeting at Delhi. But as no decision was arrived at it should be taken up again."

Lala Lajpat Rai and the coming Council election in the Punjab.

24. Writing under the heading "Lala Lajpat Rai as a candidate for membership of Council," the Hindustan (Lahore), of the 16th October 1912, reports that it has learnt from a most reliable source that the Lala will this year offer himself for election to the Punjab Legislative Council, and in all probability will contest the seat assigned to the Cis-Sutlej group of municipalities. A candidate for election to Legislative Council should, says the Editor, possess keen judgment and independence of opinion, and he should be a true patriot and free from the least taint of selfishness. No one, it adds, can deny that all these qualifications are to be found in Lala Lajpat Rai. Even his bitterest enemy cannot, in view of the moderation and "statesmanship" with which he has worked as a public man during the past 4 or 5 years, have the temerity to impugn his loyalty, or try to cause misunderstanding between him and Government. It is hoped that all the voters in the group he may select will unanimously vote for him.

The following on the same subject is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of 19th October 1912 :—

"Lala Lajpat Rai, it is understood, will stand for election to the Punjab Legislative Council for one of the three groups of Municipalities in the Province. His choice, it appears, lies between the Central Punjab group, which includes Lahore, and the Delhi-Rohtak-Hissar group. If we are not mistaken, Lala Lajpat Rai prefers the latter group, where there is less likehood of competition than in the Central Punjab group, where the Hindu leaders are yet to learn the wisdom of forgetting their personal differences in the interests of the community. There is no one in any of the three groups of the Punjab Municipalities better fitted to represent the Hindu community in the Council than Lala Lajpat Rai, and it may not be quite an easy task for anyone anywhere in the Province to beat him in a public contest, if Lala Lajpat Rai chooses to stand for competition. But he apparently desires to avoid such a scene, and a Hindu who holds the honour of his community above all things cannot fail to admire his wisdom. One of the subjects to be discussed at the Hindu Conference to-day is the desirability of avoiding competition among the Hindus at the elections to the Provincial Leglislative Council. We earnestly hope the Hindu leaders will arrive at a practical conclusion in the matter."

Delhi disfranchised.

25. The following is from an article headed "the Penalty of Greatness" published in the Comrade (Delhi), of 19th October 1912 :—

"* * * * Delhi was certainly born great; but the suspended animation of the last century robbed it of all that greatness, and to-day, even if it has not achieved greatness but has only greatness thrust upon it, the penalty of this new greatness would be too great if the people of Delhi are wholly disfranchised. We are not unmindful of the difficulties of the situation. The toy Province of a Thana and a Tahsil may not at present be given a separate seat for election to the Imperial Council, and we cannot conceive of a Provincial Legislature for Delhi consisting of a small fraction of an Hon'ble Member, if numerical proportion is to be maintained. But we have a suggestion to meet the situation, and, in view of the fact that the rulers of Delhi will not belong to any single Province but hold sway over all the Provinces, our suggestion is, we think, quite appropriate. It is this :—Let each qualified resident of Delhi declare before the elections to the Provincial and Imperial Councils in what Province outside Delhi he would elect to exercise his franchise, and after this declaration he should be considered a qualified voter in that Province. Many qualified men from other Provinces would now begin to reside in Delhi simply because it is the Imperial Capital, and should not on that account be disfranchised. Many of its old residents would have a vote in neighbouring Provinces in virtue of possessing property or paying taxes and having a domicile in the neighbouring area, now placed just outside the Imperial Enclave. Only a small proportion of the qualified old residents of Delhi would have to exercise franchise in a Province with which they have now no connection, and they would for the most part elect to vote in the Punjab or the United Provinces. Those who select the Punjab would simply keep up their connection with the Province to which they belonged hitherto and with which they have still judicial relationship. The number of those who select the United Provinces or some other Province, would be too small to influence the results of the elections in that province, and the only objection that could be raised against such an arrangement would be merely the technical one that this would be an exception to the general rule of residential qualification. But if all India is the province of the rulers of Delhi, should not the citizens of Delhi claim it as such for purposes of franchise? Of course, in the last resort Government could nominate a member from among the qualified residents of Delhi. But Lord Morley, as Secretary of State, has already condemned the system of nomination severely enough, and Delhi, which had for too long been yoked to the Punjab against her will, would no longer like to share the glory of nomination with the land of the Five Rivers and many more Khan Bahadurs. If Delhi cannot have Home Rule, let it at least be spared the Home Department Rule in the matter of Council elections."

Punjab Pre-emption Bill.

26. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 22nd October 1912 :—

* * * "The authors of the present Act did not profess any anxiety either for the just recognition of the feelings of the people as regards the right of pre-emption or for its strict enforcement. They had a pre-conceived policy and they made no secret about carrying it about. The late Sir Lewis Tupper, who had perhaps more than any one else to do with the present Act, frankly said that the policy of the Act as well as that of the Land Alienation Act was one and the same and that on this material point they never wavered. The essential qualification for a pre-emptor of agricultural land was thus laid down, viz., that he must be a member of an agricultural tribe, even though the vendor may not be such a member. There was, we admit, some justification for this rule, where the vendor happened to be a member of an agricultural tribe. In that case, it was reasonable that the Legislature should see that the restrictive provisions of Act XIII of 1900 might not be rendered nugatory by non-zemindars getting land through pre-emption decrees ; and within these limits, the rule was consistant with the Chief Court ruling reported in 15 P. P. 1905, which decides that a pre-emptor, who cannot buy land under the provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, can not get it by means of a pre-emption decree. But there was not the least justification for any restriction on pre-emptive right in cases in which the vendor is not a member of an agricultural tribe. It is true that a proviso was added to section 11, prescribing that when the vendor is not a member of an agricultural tribe, the right of pre-emption may be exercised not by members of agricultural tribes only, but also by the members of the same tribe as the vendor, provided that the pre-emptor or his ancestor in the male line has been recorded as owner or occupancy tenant in the estate for 20 years. But this proviso is a poor set-off against the arbitrary restriction of pre-emptive right in cases where the vendor is not a member of an agricultural tribe. Nor is the proviso anything in the nature of a real concession, for sections 21 and 26 insisted on a strict conformity with the provisions of the Land Alienation Act in case of every sale in respect of which pre-emption is claimed.

"Let us now examine how far the new Pre-emption Bill has removed the aforesaid objections and anomalies. Section 14, which is the most important section of the new Bill, runs as follows :—'No persons other than a person who was at the date of sale a member of an agricultural tribe in the same group as the vendor shall have a right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land sold by a member of an agricultural tribe.' The new provision is decidedly an improvement in so far as it removes the arbitrary restrictions imposed by the present Act on the right of pre-emption in cases where the vendor is not a member of an agricultural tribe. We do not, however, see why he should be a member of an agricultural tribe in the same group. It is true that section 3 (1) (c) of the Land Alienation Act says that in cases where the alienor, who is a member of an agricultural tribe, desires to make a permanent alienation of his land, the alienee must be a member of the same tribe or of a tribe in the same group, and it may be said that section 14 of the new Bill only follows the precedent of the Land Alienation Act. But the notification of agricultural tribes and the separate classification of Brahmans and the few Hindu notified castes outside the group leave a very unfortunate impression on the public mind as to the real import of these notifications. The general impression, and the elaborate explanation given last year by Sir James Douie has not shaken that impression in the least, is that the net result of these notifications is to favour the Muhammadan notified tribes and to exclude the few Hindu tribes by assigning them to the place of a separate classification. We strongly insist on the deletion of the words 'in the same group' and suggest a similar deletion in section 3 of the Land Alienation Act. Such an alteration will remove the invidious and the artificial distinction between the Hindu and the Muhammadan notified tribes and will also in some measure save these Acts from the reproaches commonly made against them.

"We reserve for separate consideration the manner in which the existence and enforcement of the right of pre-emption has been extended quite out of proportion with the recognised rules of Muhammadan law and custom. We shall here only express our regret that the new Bill has made no alteration or improvement in respect of one of the most objectionable provisions of the present Act. We refer to section 27 of the present Act, which has been bodily incorporated in section 29 of the Bill. That section enjoins upon the civil courts to send to the Deputy Commissioner a copy of every original decree granting pre-emption other than decrees in respect of urban immoveable property and authorises the Deputy Commissioner to appeal against it if he thinks fit. The object of this provision is to guard against any possible evasion of the provisions of the Land Alienation Act through the collusion of parties or the mistake of the court, but its effect has been only to lower the dignity of the civil courts and to invest the Deputy Commissioner with the authority of quasi-superintendence over the work of the civil court as far as the provisions of these Acts are concerned. Familiar as we have been with instances of the Executive sitting in judgment over the highest Courts in Gulab Bano's, Hoti Mardan and other cases, we cannot but strongly condemn this provision. We are aware that this section was very much prized by Sir Lewis Tupper. Sir Lewis Tupper in his speech said :—'One flag it flies has cheered me very particularly. Clause 27 provides for the transmission of pre-emption decree in the great majority of cases to the Deputy Commissioner and enables him to apply for revision if he considers that the decision of the Court of first instance is contrary to the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act.' For the honour and the prestige of our courts of justice, we do insist that they should be free from this humiliation of having their decrees passed in review by the Executive."

The Land Alienation Act.

27. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 24th October 1912 :—

"In another page we publish the first portion of a long paper on the working of the Land Alienation Act in the Punjab, by Pandit Kripa Ram of Amritsar. The paper was intended to be read before the Hindu Conference at Delhi and contains useful facts showing the disabilities it imposes on the Hindus. We shall publish the whole paper in parts and we hope it will be read with profit and will go to convince Government of the reasons for the repeal of the Act. Pandit Kripa Ram incidentally refers to Government as master and to the people as servants and understands their relationship to be such. He is evidently led to draw this inference from facts learnt in the mofussil places and from district experience. District life and official treatment can hardly be said to be modern. There is yet the spirit of the Moghul Nawab and the humble slave, but it is unfair to the Government of to-day to regard its attitude as such. We have hundreds of recent events to show that administration is not a master-and-servant business, but a more agreeable relationship. The principle of the associationship of the people with Government is established and, whatever may be the experience in the districts, the Government is perfectly respectful and solicitous of popular welfare. Due attention is given to popular wishes and opinions, and in Councils and Durbars popular representatives are treated on equal terms. We hope that this idea will pervade in the districts also and that a more modern and dignified idea of the status of the people and the attitude of the Government will be created in the country."

(a) Judicial.

The Rangoon Defamation case.

28. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 23rd October 1912 :—

" * * It is very rarely that an Anglo-Indian journalist is sentenced to imprisonment on a charge of libel, and the heavy sentence in this case is explained by the serious nature of the offence. Very grave accusations were made against the complainant in his capacity as a Magistrate and the charges were proved to be as unfounded as they were unjustifiable. Our correspondent says that the sentence was received with amazement and in profound silence in court, but it is difficult to express any sympathy for the accused. The sentence is heavy but the offence was very serious and was aggravated by the line of defence pursued by the accused."

Writing under the heading " Deplorable end of the Rangoon defamation case," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 23rd October 1912, reports that Mr. Arnold, Editor of the Burma Critic, who raised his voice in defence of an unfortunate Muslim girl, has been sentenced to undergo one year's simple imprisonment. Of late, it adds, Muhammadans have been surrounded by troubles on all sides, and even any noble-minded and good-hearted person writing or speaking in their favour has to suffer severe punishment. The end of the case against Mr. Arnold has undoubtedly brought one administrative advantage to Government, namely, that no editor will henceforth be in a hurry to take up his pen against Government officials.

(b)—Police.

The Punjab Police.

29. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of 19th October 1912 :—

" In a previous article on the subject, we referred to the remarkable increase of crime in 1911, showed that the increase argued the necessity of enhancing the efficiency, if not reducing the number, of superior officers, and dwelt on the inadequacy of the law about offences relating to marriage and a growth of the drinking habit among the people as among the chief causes of crime in the Province. There is, however, a third factor which equally deserves the serious attention of the authorities, and that is the usurious rates of interest charged by the money-lender, combined with the spirit of haughtiness which has, of late, been manifested by the bania class towards the villager. The increase of dacoities has been most noticeable in Western Punjab. It has been also observed that the villagers have, as a rule, refrained from coming forward to the help of the victims, while the dacoits have in some instances concluded their raids by making a bonfire of the account books of the sowcar. In answer to the questions of Hindu members of the Legislative Councils, Government has repeatedly declared that it sees nothing extraordinary in the increase of dacoities against the Hindus, as the latter form the wealthiest portion of the village community. It would have, however, been well to point out that in the Western districts of the Punjab the ordinary rate of interest charged for by the money-lender is 30 per cent; and instances are not unknown where as much as a thousand per cent. has been levied. As a consequence, when once an agriculturist falls into the clutches of a sowcar, the former's death alone can release him from the toils. But the villager, so far from smarting under the slavery, has hitherto hugged the chains as a rule, because the bania, while bleeding his victim, treated him with all apparent signs of respect and honour. He has, however, developed new notions of self-respect. He refuses to follow the attitude that he previously adopted towards his debtors and in some cases regards them as worms which he can crush under his heel by a resort to the law courts. The result is a growth of enmity in the villages between sowcars and non-sowcars, a state of feeling which has encouraged the depredations of dacoits. This does not and cannot justify the slightest breach of the law and we do not mention the point to excuse the conduct of those who commit offences against the person or property of money-lenders. Far from it. But it is necessary to state facts to enable the authorities to appreciate the situation properly and to devise means to improve it. And, we are persuaded to think, there can be only two remedies for this state of affairs; either the bania should resume his former behaviour towards his victims or the rate of interest should be reduced. As for the former alternative, the money-lenders are equal subjects of His Majesty with the agriculturists. No one can compel them to adopt an attitude towards their debtors which is humiliating towards themselves. But Government can and ought to fix the rate of interest within proper limits. Usury laws, it should be remembered, have been enforced not only in Europe but are also to be found in the institutes of Manu and other prominent Hindu law givers. Their abolition, in slavish imitation of the advanced communities in Europe, has proved a pest in an agricultural country like India. These laws are found on the statute books of certain portions of His Majesty's dominions, which are not at all less advanced than this country. Why not then re-introduce them here, so far as the rural tracts are concerned, seeing that not only Muslim but Hindu journals like the Beharee have also advocated the same? Such a step would no doubt require great courage on the part of Government. It would have to meet with an incessant fire of criticism. But a benign Government, which has not flinched from enforcing the Land Alienation Act, which is encouraging self-help among the people by the organisation of Co-operative Credit Societies, cannot become faint-hearted when the enactment of another measure for the benefit of the agriculturist, the backbone of the people, is concerned. If usury laws are brought into operation, an incentive to people to give refuge to dacoits will be taken away, the banias will invest their savings in more useful ways, and serious offences against property and the person must grow less and lesser." * * *

The Police.

30. The Munir (Jhang), of the 16th October 1912, has an article headed "Government and the Police," in the course of which it complains that constables are paid only Rs. 9 a month, a sum of money on which a man cannot maintain himself and his family in these days of high prices. The small pay now received by them also prevents constables from displaying bravery, and Government had better diminish crime by giving the Police an increase of pay, fixing their initial salary at Rs. 12, if not Rs. 15, per mensem. After suggesting that the pay of Head Constables, Sub-Inspectors and Inspectors should also be raised, the paper says that all this would make police officials display greater energy in the discharge of their duties, and would also abate the evil of bribery in the force.

The Dacca outrage.

31. The following is from the Comrade (Delhi), dated 12th October 1912 :—

"The assassin of the Head Constable, Roti Lal Roy, who was shot dead in Dacca, has shown once more that the ghastly under-world of political crime is still peopled by political desperadoes of the dastardly and violent type. Some efforts have been made in a section of the Bengal Press to read into the murder some purely personal motive of revenge. A policeman who was a prominent witness in the Dacca conspiracy case and some other political cases and had hitherto been employed to watch the movements of certain notorious members of a dissolved Samiti, is murdered in cold-blood. And yet we are asked to believe that the act is not what, in all likelihood, it appears to be : a fruit of the insensate political feeling that had, not very long ago, flowered into organised Nihilism in Bengal. The temper of the classes from whose ranks the assassin has been usually drawn may be calmer to-day. The prophets are for obvious reasons, silent, and have ceased to supply the necessary stimulus. That, however, should not lead us to infer that anarchism has been altogether killed in this country. Repression has simply scotched it and driven it underground. 'Concession' may also have played the part, often claimed for it, in easing the situation. But those who imagine that the body-politic has been completely cleansed in that way have a very imperfect idea of the character and psychology of the anarchist. He is a microbe that persists in the blood, and no amount of mild 'treatment' or surgical operations can completely annihilate it. Perhaps it would be better to recognise frankly that he has come to stay in this country. It is possible that India is acquiring something of the political and moral climate of European countries like Russia, Italy or Spain, where the monster thrives so abundantly? Whatever the future may have in store, the heart of the country is at present sound, and Government, whatever its shortcomings, has a clear idea of the directions in which it ought to move. The anarchist may not, therefore, perturb our vision of the future or affect the nerves and darken the counsel of the rulers as long as it is frankly admitted that he is always a dangerous possibility, and occasionally a dread presence."

(d)—Education.

The Muslim University.

32. The following is from the Comrade (Delhi), dated 12th October 1912 ;—

"As we had intimated in the last issue of the Comrade, published from Calcutta, we do not intend to publish the Muslim University Voting Paper any longer. The results have been frankly disappointing, though there is not the least doubt that those who have an opinion to offer, or—shall we say ?—those who have an opinion at all are by a very large majority against the acceptance of the terms sought to be imposed on the Musalmans by the Secretary of State. But as we had clearly stated, the effect of this majority would be much lessened by the fact that hardly a third of the number of our Muslem subscribers have voted at all. If we know the abstainers at all—and we think we know them pretty well—their abstention has been due to the political lethargy that has overtaken the community after the sudden and fairly sustained activity displayed during the Separate Electorates controversy. Since then the Musalmans have been resting on their oars, and the numbers of those who have voted on the question of the University is as good an index as any other of the practical energy and effort that the Musalmans can put forth when they cannot secure what they want at the very first endeavour. Much as we feel that in the régime of Lord Minto the Musalmans got only what was rightly their due, and that too only in one direction, their success was a little too easy as political successes go in the world. Is the community capable to-day of a millionth part of the sustained effort put forth by the Irish Nationalists to obtain Home Rule, which will at last be the head and crown of one of the most prolonged political struggles? Nearer home, are they capable of putting forth a quarter of the sustained effort which compelled the Government to unsettle the most settled of facts in Bengal? Resolutions are occasionally passed by the League, its Council and its various branches. Brave words are used in displaying righteous indignation against Italy and Russia, and wily words in finessing as regards the criticism of the policy of Great Britain. Much sympathy is showered on the Turks, the Arabs and the Persians, and by way of change Mr. Montagu is denounced in glowing periods for doubting the solidarity of Islam. But is the farce worth the acting? What is the net result of all this? 'Words, words, words,' as Hamlet would say. The contributions of Indian Musalmans to the relief of the war sufferers in Tripoli could not have exceeded ten lakhs, even if they ever reached that figure. Italy and Russia have not been put in mortal fear of the military prowess of these sturdy sons of Islam, and we doubt if our own Government takes them more seriously than to keep the Criminal Investigation Department eyes a little more carefully on a few scribblers and blabbers. We ourselves are none too valorous to expect or desire anything beyond a jehad of the jaw and the shedding of many ink-bottles in the cause of Islam abroad.

Irádá thá ye nálón ká hilddén rub'-i-maskún ko,

Magar, ay hamnafas, dil kí thakan kuchh aur kahtí hai.

"But the cause of Islam at home was expected to have produced something more practical. After the high feeling noticeable at Lucknow just two months ago, we expected that the Musalmans would convince the Secretary of State that they were in earnest by contributing lavishly to the University Fund, or at least paying up what they had promised towards it, before the 'final' decisions were announced. We at least expected that a few thousand meetings would be held in the country to pray the Government of India to make yet one more effort to convince the Secretary of State that the 'Man on the Spot' could be trusted to deal safely with the question of affiliation. But there is neither money nor meetings, and one or two honourable gentlemen are riding astride the situation with the proposal that the University may be accepted on the Secretary of State's terms, but—for 15 lakhs of rupees! If ever a Musalman possessed the soul of a bazar haggler, it must be the author of this stupid suggestion. Has the community come down so low as to be satisfied with a Banya's bargain? 'What's the use of these bitter words,' one may say. We admit the bitterness with our poet, philosopher and friend:

Rakhyo, Ghálib, mujhé is talkh nawái men máf,

Aj kuchh dard méré dil men siwá hóté hai.

"Ours has mainly been an educational ideal, and we would any day prefer to be a pedagogue rather than a demagogue. Ours has not been the cult of the bomb, but of books, and in so peaceful a cause the opposition of the Secretary of State has taken us completely by surprise. But our keenest disappointment is that the educated members of the Muslem community, who had talked of nothing but education for forty years, should appear so unpractical and lifeless. It is easy to run down the 'leaders', and it is impossible for any honest individual to admire the splendid isolation of some of the greatest of them at a time when their place is here by the side of their people. But what of the people themselves? We accuse the rank-and-file even more than the General, for armies have sometimes won the day even after the death of General, but a General can only surrender or die when the army has been mown down or fled. The following is the final muster of the Muslem subscribers of the Comrade, and it will show that out of every three two have preferred silence, and—shall we add?—secrecy.

33.. Writing under the heading "Future of the Khalsa College," the Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 20th October 1912, deprecates the noise made by certain young Sikhs in 1906 over the interference by Government in the affairs of the College. Next it says that, if Sikhs had, at the instance of certain shortsighted and loquacious persons, raised an outcry against the changes that were recently proposed in the constitution of the College Council, most disastrous consequences would have been certain to ensue. The new changes are then enumerated, and the editor says that he does not disapprove of the same and prays that the College may regain its lost greatness.

The Khalsa College, Amritsar.

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

34. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 21st October 1912, has a note headed "Government's habits and Nature's character," in which it says that frequent settlements and the constant increase of land revenue have "squeezed India dry," and that, whenever rain fails even slightly, agriculturists begin to starve and leave their homes. This being so, it is necessary that a Famine Relief Department, with branches in all divisions and districts, should be permanently opened in the Secretariat Offices. No heavy burden would thereby be entailed on the Indian Exchequer; a famine tax could be levied from the people, who have (by this time), become accustomed to giving money for the relief of the famine-stricken and starving. The reason why the paper has suggested the establishment of the above department is that, while Government will never change its land revenue policy, nature also is not likely to change herself, and the agricultural and labouring classes are likely to be crushed between these two forces. Besides, so long as time does not prove (to the authorities) that the permanent settlement of land revenue is most suitable for an agricultural country like India, some such department as that proposed must be established.

A suggestion.

(h)—Miscellaneous.

35. In the course of an article headed "Bury the Past," the Comrade (Delhi), of [illegible] October 1912, publishes the following remark:—

The new Delhi; a suggestion to demolish the Kashmir Gate.

"We have no doubt that the officers of Government will soon prepare an elaborate programme for the State Entry on the 23rd December next, and rehearsals of the procession are already taking place. Even if Lord Hardinge strove after effect—which we do not believe—the suggestion that we offer would appeal to him. But a Viceroy who desires to make his term of office one that would be memorable for the hatchets it has buried is not unlikely to find in our proposal the best symbol of his purpose and intention. We would recommend to His Excellency that the first official act that he should perform after taking over the charge India's historic Capital should be the demolition of the Kashmir Gate and its reconstruction as a monument of the desire of Great Britain to bury the carrion of the dead and dread past, and of the resolve of the Government to trust that it may itself be trusted * * *. Let His Excellency ride back from the Durbar Hall, where he takes over charge of Delhi from the Hon. Sir Louis Dane, to the Kashmir Gate, and lay the first axe with his own hands to that grim momorial of 'old, unhappy, far-off things,' and immediately afterwards lay the foundation-stone of a new Arch of Triumph, the triumph of cool and calm statesmanship and of charity, hope and faith, over prejudices that blind and passions that lead astray * *."

36. In a note headed "Temerity of the Afghan newspaper: worthy of notice by Government," the Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 17th October 1912, states that (some time back) a Muhammadan of Multan met his death at the hands of a Hindu. The latter was tried and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, which has satisfied even (the local) Muhammadans. The Afghan has, however, taken advantage of this case to make unbecoming remarks about Diwan Narendra Nath and Lala Gobind Ram, and to embitter the Hindu-Muhammadan question in Multan (vide paragraph 20 of Selections No. 42). After quoting an extract accusing the above officers of being pro-Hindu, and applying the epithets "Muslim-killing" and "animal-worshipping" to Hindus, the Editor asks Government to take notice of these expressions. If such mean attacks, he adds, continue to be made on Government officers by bigoted papers like the Afghan, and these attacks are overlooked by Government, then these Hindu officers will find it difficult to perform even their official duties.

Abu Said of Rangoon.

37. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 16th October 1912, publishes a letter from one Abu Said (vide paragraph 6 of Selections No. 41), who, writing from Cairo, states that he is a native of Dhullian, Kharian tahsil, Gujrat district (Punjab); that he owns agricultural land there; but that he has been residing in Rangoon for a long time past. The savage acts of oppression perpetrated by Italy in Tripoli had the effect of reminding him of the following verse (in the Quran):—"And you are not to make war on weak men, on women or children. And say, 'O Lord, drive us out of the city, the rulers whereof are tyrannical; and exert yourselves in the cause of God with your lives and property." This rendered him very restless, and, after having made his will, he left Rangoon prepared to die (at the front). He reached Derna and, since he himself belongs to a country where one cannot freely wield even the pen, it surprised him extremely to see every one armed there. He was given a Mauser rifle and began to learn drill, while Enver Bey introduced him to newspaper correspondents from Austria, Germany and France. From Derna he used to send weekly letters to the (Muslim) press (in India) and wrote several times even to the Nawab Vicar-ul-Mulk, Haji Ahmad Mulla Daud of Medina, and Maulvi Imam-ud-din of Gujrat. He has returned to Egypt, and it is now his heartfelt desire to serve his country and co-religionists (there). After stating that Enver Bey has promised to reply to any letters he writes, Abu Said reports that he sails shortly for Constantinople in company with the younger son of Sadat Lee Muhammad Bek Anis. He wished to see Abdul Wali Khan there, but he has changed his mind in consequence of what has recently appeared about him in the Zamindar and the Siraj-ul-Akhbar (Kabul). A Muhammadan who plays the spy in order to injure Islamic Kingdoms is an infidel, and should not hope for intercession from the Prophet on the day of judgment.

Official corruption; Ministerial Establishments.

38. The Tribune (Lahore), of 25th October 1912, makes the following remarks in course of its leading article:—

"Simple as the life of an Indian village is, it has its complications, as we have already hinted. These, for the most part, perhaps invariably, centre round the countless variations of the old, old, old theme, zan, zar, zamin, with some of which even the most casual observer must be familiar. Security of person (including his nearest and dearest) and security of property are the ideals towards which the Indian peasant primarily strives. Interference with the liberty of his neighbour and encroachment on his neighbour's property are perhaps the inevitable results of his primary ideals, aggression being all the world over the best means of defence. We have already shewn that the complications arising out of these humble aspirations breed discords and disputes which necessitate the interposition of a third party, and we have also shewn that the third party in the first instance generally appears in the form of a constable or a patwari, according as the matter at issue concerns the security of the person or that of property. Having secured the co-operation of the policeman and patwari the peasant is not at the end of his troubles nor is the realisation of his desires by any means assured. He has yet to enlist the sympathy of the courts, which are the final arbiters of his fate, and the road thereto is long and rough and far from straight, and times must be paved with gold or silver, ere the goal be reached.

"Much might be said of the venality of presiding officers and the bartering of justice in our courts, but with such matters we are at present not concerned. We may rest assured that our higher courts are free from blemish in this respect and that the stains, which disfigure the fair face of justice in the courts of some of our subordinate stipendiary and honorary magistrates and judges, are attributable to a faulty method of selection, which too often results in the investment of unworthy persons with the authority, and the exclusion of others who are in every way qualified to interpret and administer the law of the land. Those who, endowed with such authority, betray their trust, are vicious for vice's sake, and for their case there is no remedy. We are here more immediately concerned with the host of greedy underlings, who constitute the ministerial establishments attached to our courts of justice and fatten on the litigation which they foster, and in a thousand ways obstruct the path of equity. With shame be it admitted that these are the offspring of that system of education which, with a characteristic disregard for Indian traditions and Indian needs, Macaulay forced upon the country, and his successors have nursed and nourished. Well may we curse the utilitarian spirit which, unknown till then in India, has flourished since like a green bay tree and has effectually discredited the pursuit of learning for its own sake; breeding a class which looks upon an educational diploma as a passport entitling the holder to employment in Government service, rather than as the outward and visible sign of an educated man. For Government service, honourable as it may be to those who enter it in the right spirit with a patriotic desire to serve their country, is a veritable 'slough of despond,' a quagmire of vice and iniquity for those whose ideals are other than honourable and straightforward. Unfortunately too many of those who seek this outlet for their abilities are of the latter class. With them we propose to deal in the present article. We have attributed the corruption which obtains among certain classes of officials—to wit the policeman and the patwari—to the absence of educational facilities. We cannot go to the same source for an explanation of the vices of our ministerial establishments, the personnel of which is almost entirely from the classes who enjoy the benefits of education and include persons who hold certificates of considerable proficiency. To what then are we to attribute the regrettable fact that even educated persons in the service of Government are not free of the taint of corruption which attaches to their uneducated confrères in other departments ? Is it not in the uneven distribution and the present unsatisfactory system of education, in the absence of moral instruction and public opinion, that we should seek the root of the poisonous weed whose tendrils entwine themselves among the branches of the tree and sap its vitality ?

"The peasant having arranged matters with his village officials proceeds to court. Here his time may be wasted unless he takes steps to secure a prompt hearing for his petition. A douceur to the court orderly or some other of the ministerial servants of the court secures him this amount of consideration. At best he is granted a date for the formal hearing of his suit or is told to present himself at the tahsil and he may be informed that he will be expected to produce such and such documents, documents as to the nature of which he is supremely ignorant. A further douceur secures the necessary information in writing. Successful so far he procures the needful papers (after paying the needful douceurs, of course, to each person connected with the production thereof) and awaits the appointed day. Here again his place on the cause list is determined by the liberality of his gifts. From beginning to end he must pay for the privilege of being litigious and ignorant. Each person in charge of any branch of the public service with which he may have dealings expects to be paid for doing his duty and the litigant knows that it is the best policy to pay quickly if he wishes to attain his object without delay. The honest man may kick his heels against the court steps and waste the time of his dozen witnesses day after day. It is of no use to be bold and complain to the presiding officer of the court, because no such officer can listen to such a complaint unsupported by evidence, no such officer can listen to summary evidence when he knows that it is that of biased persons and, as is often the case, exaggerated beyond all recognition. Therefore it is best to pay and pay all.

"It is this helplessness of a presiding officer in the midst of false evidence, it is the want of a public opinion hostile to falsehood, it is ignorance of the masses, which blinds them to the fact that truth in the long run is more profitable than falsehood. It is the astuteness of the educated members of an ignorant community who realise the superiority of reasonable lies over obvious untruths—it is all these circumstances which combine to make the peasant the prey of the townsman, the prey of the educated armed with authority. * * * * We fear however that little progress will be made in the effort to eradicate this defect of our ministerial offices, until the country as a whole has been educated up to a strong public opinion which will not only disapprove but help to render difficult, if not impossible, the practice of corruption. The idea that a Government official is entitled to extra remuneration for doing work for the performance of which he is already being paid, ridiculous as it may at first sight appear, is so prevalent, that few would be surprised to hear such an axiom announciated. Few officials in charge of offices are ignorant that such a principle obtains under their very eyes and few are bold enough to face the storm of opposition and unpopularity, which would break upon the head of the zealous reformer, were he to stretch forth his hand against the almost masonic system which obtains among ministerial establishments and protects their members from the consequences of corrupt practices.

"The solidarity of the brotherhood of petty clerks calls for passing remark, if only because it illustrates how impossible it is for the reformer to make any headway when his reforms involve an attack on the interests of a whole class. It is this very cohesion that obtains among, and is so conspicuous a feature of, the ministerial classes, which gives rise to much of the dissatisfaction of the general public with the complicated system of administration by which it is sought to secure their welfare; and not so much the fact that time-honoured custom requires the petitioner to open his purse. It is to the red tape of office routine that we all with much justice object, the red tape of a system which allows a petty clerk to annoy the public in a thousand little ways and at the same time to gratify a friend or favour an individual without in any way overstepping the bounds of the authority with which he is vested. * *"

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

Italy and Tripoli.

1. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 24th October 1912, publishes an article headed "The God-given kingdom of Tripoli." In continuation of its previous remarks (vide paragraph 5 of Selections No. 43), the paper accuses Italy of having prompted the Balkan States to make war on Turkey. The European powers also, it adds, in their support of Italy, are guilty of shameful conduct. The object of all these moves was to save Italy, which, by repeated reverses and defeats, had brought disgrace and shame on Europe and Christianity; therefore pressure was brought to bear on Turkey to conclude peace and make over Tripoli to the Italians. As regards the Osmanlis, they were surrounded by enemies on all sides, and considered it expedient to "silence the dog by throwing a sop to it."

In its issue, dated the 25th October 1912, the paper remarks that, so long as the Muhammadans of Tripoli continue fighting the accursed Italians, it should be the duty of all Musalmans to help them "with life, faith and money." It is only now that war in the true sense of the term is to commence in Tripoli, and the time for the Italians to roll in blood and dust has arrived. It behoves, therefore, every true follower of the Prophet to give money for his Tripolitan co-religionists.

War in the Balkans.

2. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 26th October 1912, has a leader headed "The enemy has grown insolent; where is the sharp sword?" Referring to the war fever prevalent among the Turks, the paper predicts that they may be relied upon to acquit themselves creditably on the battlefield. It also quotes extracts from a speech made by Husain Kazim Bek, Governor of Salonica, on the occasion of a military review, saying that the words should influence Muhammadans, not only in Turkey, but also throughout India. The Governor exhorts the sons of Bayezid, Selim and Sultan Muhammad (conqueror of Constantinople) to sacrifice their lives for the sake of their country, their honour, and their religion.

The War in the Balkans.

3. The Tribune (Lahore), of 26th October 1912, remarks as follows in the course of an article headed "The morality of war:—

* * * * *

"War continues to be the final arbitrament in a dispute among civilised as well as savage races. The day when international differences will be solved by a reference to peaceful arbitration is as distant as ever. But civilised warfare is different from savage warfare and a code of morality is observed by tacit consent when two civilised nations are at war. But this has been ignored in the case of Turkey. The declaration of war by Italy against Turkey was utterly unjustifiable and still no European Power came to the rescue of Turkey. Similarly the war declared by the Balkan States and Greece against Turkey is equally unrighteous, but no Power will intervene until the issue is decided one way or the other. Truly, the morality of war is as strange as it is inexplicable."

War in the Balkans.

4. In a note headed "Will any other power also take up arms against Turkey?" the Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 27th October 1912, states that, according to Reuter, the Daily Chronicle (London) has received a cablegram to the effect that still another enemy is threatening Turkey, and that Kiamal Pasha has appealed to England to use her influence to avert the danger. The appeal by the Turkish Premier is touching in the extreme, and, if his apprehension turns out to be well-founded, it will have to be admitted that the war is being waged owing to the present helpless condition of the Turks and with the sole object of driving them out of Europe. If they are indeed attacked by yet another power, all the people of the East should extend their sympathies to them.

5. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 30th October 1912, publishes a copy of "An address by an Egyptian scholar," to the effect that the Balkan States and Greece have now declared war on Turkey, being secretly helped by the great powers of Europe, "all of which are waiting in ambush and will undoubtedly show their hand at the (right) time."

War in the Balkans.

6. The Arya Patrika (Lahore), of 26th October 1912, has the following :—

War in the Balkans.

"The Montengrins are preparing for the attack on Skutari. The Greeks, Servians and Bulgarians are steadily advancing, and the Turks are being driven everywhere from their positions. The official explanation given in Constantinople of the Greek successes is highly interesting. The Greeks are being encouraged to leave their base far behind, in order that when the Turkish attack is delivered it may be absolutely crushing. The sincerity and thoroughness of 'encouragement' will be evident from the fact that the Turks abandoned at Elassona a million cartridges along with wagons, tents, staff maps and even despatches! However, the struggle has only begun, and the course of events cannot be properly judged until Turkey is in a position to bring her whole strength to bear upon the situation. A notable feature of the struggle is that while the Confederacy is trying to excite the religious passions of its troops, the Sultan appeals only to Turkish patriotism. Apparently the Christian allies remain to be told that, once roused, there is no knowing where Moslem religious fanaticism will stop. Since the above was in type a report has been received from Sofia that the Bulgarians have captured Kirk Kilisseh and no less than fifty thousand Turks."

7. Writing under the heading "Muslim Volunteers for Turkey," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 23rd October 1912, says that the cup of Turkey's troubles has now been filled. "The intriguing for centuries by the European powers is about to assume a practical form and the moves that have brought about the death of Persia, Tripoli, and Morocco are to be completed by the universal rising in the Balkans." The Ottoman Empire has to fight, not a few petty States, but the diplomacy of the whole of (Christian) Europe. The Turks are fully aware of the gravity of the situation and know that they will either cripple the Balkans for ever or be themselves driven out of Europe, while their existence even in Asia will be placed in danger. After remarking that they may be relied upon to die sword in hand, the paper enquires whether Indian Musalmans do not wish to die side by side with their co-religionists in preserving the honour of Islam and the guardians of Mecca and Medina. They will undoubtedly give money for the sufferers of the war, but the Editor would like to see how many of them are willing to take an active part in the war. This conduct on their part will not be illegal, seeing that several noble-minded Englishmen have fought in Tripoli on the side of the Turks. The Prime Minister of Bulgaria has, moreover, declared in plain language that the war is of a religious character. This means that the gauntlet has been thrown down to the entire Muslim world, which renders it incumbent on every Muhammadan to do his utmost to maintain the dignity of his religion.

Indian Muhammadans and the War in the Balkans.

In a foot-note the paper says that, the British Government having issued a proclamation of neutrality, "the people of India" should hold themselves aloof from the war.

8. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 23rd October 1912, says that the combined attack on Turkey by the Balkan States has caused excitement in the entire Islamic world. Meetings are being held in all parts of India to sympathise with the Turks and to express indignation at the conduct of the Balkan Confederacy. There are, says the paper, thousands of Muhammadans who are unable to obtain war news. Is there no one among the Prophet's followers, who will visit streets, lanes, and small villages and influence (his co-religionists there) with his words? "We" want unselfish Mussalmans who will give up their personal comfort for the sake of their community, without looking for any reward.

Indian Muhammadans and War in the Balkans.

Indian Muhammadans and the War in the Balkans.

9. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 27th October 1912, publishes a futwa by Ahmad Ibrahim, Zamir-ud-Din Ahmad, Muhammad Kifayatulla, Muhammad Qasim, Zia-ul-Haq, Auzar Husain, Muhammad Abdul Haq, Muhammad Saif-ur-Rahman, Muhammad Abdur Rashid, Syed Muhammad, Abdul Hassan, Ahmed Ullah, Syed Mehdi, Talattuf Husain, Muhammad Karamatulla, Abdul Jabbar, Amjad Ali, Syed Muhammad, Abdul Salam, Muhammad Abdul Ali, Muhammad Ali and Muhammad Abdul Wahab, declaring it unlawful for Muhammadans to utilise Zakat money (the portion or amount of his property that is given by a Muhammadan to the poor, in accordance with the rules laid down in the Quran) for relief to the Muslim sufferers in the War in the Balkans.

Indian Muhammadans and the War in the Balkans.

10. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 28th October 1912, publishes an article headed "Wanted Muhammadan Volunteers for the Balkans." After remarking that to-day Islam expects every one of its sons to prove of use to it, the paper states that Mr. Shaukat Ali, B.A. (Alig.), recently suggested in the Comrade's columns that some Muslim Volunteers from India also should go to fight those Christian warriors in the Balkans who have resolved to dye their unclean hands with Muhammadan blood; for how could Muhammadans better please the spirit of the Prophet than by laying down their lives for truth and justice? Mr. Shaukat Ali also addressed a letter to the Zamindar to suggest the despatch of a Muhammadan Volunteer Corps to the Balkans, adding that he himself is prepared to go to the front at his own expense, and that he feels certain Government will lend a helping hand to Musalmans in the matter. The suggestion is good and the editor most gladly welcomes it, and he blesses Mr. Shaukat Ali for having interpreted the feelings of seven crore Indian Musalmans. The editor further publishes two letters lately received; the writer of the first—Maulvi Shakur Ahmad Khan, Ansari, of Panipat—offers to go to the front as a volunteer at his own expense, and says that he knows and can also teach drill. The other correspondent—Mir Farzand Husain, of Narowal, Sialkot district—also makes the same offer, and reports that three other young men have also vowed to take part in the War. Then follows another communication from one Mirza Anwar Beg, who states that a Diwan Bhagwan Das, of Hyderabad (Sind), who embraced Islam some time back, has attained martyrdom in Tripoli. Commenting on the above, the editor wishes that all his co-religionists (in India) could share the Diwan's end. He also expresses the hope that Mr. Shaukat Ali's proposal will bear fruit, and that "Indian Muhammadans will afford proof of their national life by sending in their names to Mr. Shaukat Ali." In conclusion, he says that "our house" is being looted to-day, it is on fire, and streams of blood are flowing in it. And if "we" raise "our" weak hand to save it, "our beloved Government," the sole champion of honesty and justice in the world, should encourage "us."

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 28th October 1912, believes that all true Muhammadans will heartily endorse the suggestion made by Mr. Shaukat Ali, who is a trustee of the Aligarh College. The Prophet's followers should use the liberty enjoyed by them under British rule, not only to voice their real feelings in regard to the present troubles of the Turks, but also "to give their opinions a practical shape," On the outbreak of hostilities in Tripoli the Hon'ble Lieutenant Montague went there to fight on the side of Turkey, at the risk even of losing his commission. It will be a shame if the Muhammadans of India do not emulate his example and if no young Muslims go to the help of the Turks in the Balkans. Some active and influential Musalmans should, however, first step forth to recruit volunteers and organise the proposed corps. It is also necessary to open a fund in connection with the proposal.

The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 26th October 1912, also publishes Mr. Shaukat Ali's letter, and reports that two educated young men named Bashir Khan and Chitu Khan (address: Sayad Hasham's shop, Kiddarpur Bazar, Calcutta) are determined to go to the front.

The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 30th October 1912, assures Mr. Shaukat Ali that several Muhammadans will accompany him to the front, seeing that "our national existence" is bound up with that of the Ottoman Empire. The object of the Balkan States in waging war on Turkey, and of Russia and Austria in rendering them secret help is to wipe Islam from off the earth. The event is due to the writings of a certain European Professor, which appeared at the beginning of this century, to the effect that it would be a piece of great service to civilisation to banish the Prophet's faith from the world. And, if newspapers are to be regarded as the mouth-piece of a people, the English public also seems to have forgotten the obligations conferred on it by Muhammadans during the Mutiny of 1857.

Indian Muhammadans and the War in the Balkans.

11. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 29th October 1912, has an article headed "A pathetic appeal for help for the Turks wounded in the Balkans." It begins by transcribing a cablegram, which it has received from the London Muslim League, through Reuter's agency, and which says that the War in the Balkans is nothing short of a crusade; that pecuniary help for the Turks is sorely needed; that "National Relief Committees" should forthwith be established in India; that "societies of women" also should be founded; that prayers should be offered for success to the Turkish arms; and that the doctors employed by the Red Crescent Society should be despatched by the first steamer. Next the paper refers to what is being done in Russia for Christian sufferers from the War, and appeals to Indian Musalmans to contribute their mite in aid of the Turks: such conduct cannot displease Government.

The Siraj-ul-Akhbar (Jhelum), of the 29th October 1912, says that in the event of the War, which is of a religious character, being prolonged, Indian Muhammadans should make large remittances to Constantinople in aid of the wounded.

The Millat (Lahore), of the 1st November 1912, also asks Muhammadans to render all possible help to Turkey.

Indian Muhammadans and the War in the Balkans.

12. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 29th October 1912, has a note entitled "Religious side of the War," in which it refers to, and defends, the conduct of Indian Muhammadans in regard to the Balkan War. Those people, it adds, who place a sinister interpretation on the efforts of Musalmans to make Government end the Porte's troubles not only commit a mistake, but also "fan the fire of bigotry, defame the country, and place obstacles in the way of (? the formation of an Indian) nationality," and "cause misunderstanding between the people and Government."

The Turkish Empire.

13. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 31st October 1912, publishes the following note under the heading "Islamic Abhimanyu";—

"The Amrita Bazar Patrika compares the position of Turkey to that of Abhimanyu in the Mahabharata. The analogy is far-fetched. Abhimanyu neither made pledges to the Kurus nor brandished his sword before them on the pretext of carrying out manœuvres. Nor was there a general massacre at the instance of any of the Pandus justifying declaration of war by Kurus. The 'righteousness' of the Islamic Abhimanyu cannot be judged absolutely and in disregard of the feelings of the Christian Kurus. The Patrika would be better able to judge the conduct of its Abhimanyu by exchanging places with the Kurus in the Balkans."

The Islamic world.

14. The Zamindar (Lahore), of 25th October 1912, says that the story of the wolf and the lamb has been illustrated by the civilised European powers in their treatment of Turkey in the near East. The followers of Christ have thrown the teachings of the Bible overboard, and daily commit bloody deeds with their tyrannical hands. Their oppressive moves and cruel doings have been fully revealed to the world, while the hollowness of their civilisation and sense of justice has been thoroughly exposed. These sheep of Christ, who have no fear of God, do not let the followers of Islam know peace even for a moment. The Turks are a kind-hearted and peaceful people, but civilised Europe leaves nothing undone to represent them to the world as being cruel and barbarous in the extreme. Bombs are thrown in some Christian spot (of the Ottoman Empire) and a few Christian sheep put to death in some other place, and the outcry over the bloodshed leads "friends" to attack the Turks, leaving them no rest "till a large piece of flesh has been torn off their body."

This is how Muhammadans fare outside India. As regards this country itself, there has arisen a nationalist party here, which has taken upon itself the task of harassing and defaming Mussalmans. The paper has recently stated in several issues how Doctors Modi De and Ram Sarup, of the Agra Medical School, have been ill-treating their Muslim pupils. It has now come across a short but highly offensive note in the Hindustan, dated the 19th October, in which it is alleged that for some time past beef has been cooked in the boarding-house attached to the Murray College, Sialkot; that recently, on coming to know of this, the Hindu boarders complained to the Principal, but that he declined to interfere in the matter. Continuing, it asserts that there is absolutely no truth in the complaint published by the Hindustan, and that the same has been made owing simply to the employment of a Muhammadan waterman in the College, which has reduced the earnings of the Hindu halvai concerned.

15. Writing under the heading "Gratitude towards Britain," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 27th October 1912, adverts to the recent understanding between the Russian and British Foreign Ministers in regard to Persia, and thanks the British Government for its sympathetic attitude towards that country. It also endeavours to justify the appeals made by Muhammadans to Great Britain on behalf of Persia, which is being oppressed by the Muscovites.

England and Persia.

16. Writing under the heading "Britain's graces," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 23rd October 1912, says that the arrest and subsequent release of Sheikh Shawadesh was a stroke of policy on the part of the British Government, which has thereby manifested its might and told the Egyptians that they are of very little account. After remarking that the event has opened the eyes of the nationalists and made them fear, the paper asserts that Muhammad Bey Farid, formerly a leader of the Nationalist party, is undoubtedly the most courageous man in the Islamic world. English newspapers therefore look askance at him, and the British Government also is afraid of him. His ideas may be seditious and mischievous, but even his enemies admit that he is a most independent and sincere nationalist, and "this is what we want; this is what we call honour."

Sheikh Shawadesh and Muhammad Bey Farid.

17. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 26th October 1912:—

Indians in South Africa.

"A Reuter's message from Cape Town says that Mr. Gokhale, in replying to the addresses of welcome presented to him by British Indians in South Africa, said that his compatriots in that country would find that India would support them, but he advised them not to do anything which might jeopardise the real interests of the Empire. The first question that arises in our mind on reading this is: Have British Indians in South Africa so far done anything to jeopardise the real interests of the Empire? It will be admitted in this connection by all fair-minded people that the grievances of the Indians in the various South African Colonies are serious and legitimate and their conduct so far has succeeded in evoking expressions of opinion, distinctly favourable to their case, even from those who might reasonably be expected to be hostile to it. In the course of his speech on his Resolution in the Supreme Legislative Council on the prohibition of Indian indentured labour in Natal, Mr. Gokhale said that no single question of our time has evoked more bitter feelings throughout India than the continued ill-treatment of Indians in South Africa. And we have seen that by the sufferings that a handful of British Indians, men, women and children, have undergone patiently, self-sacrificingly, and patriotically during the last few years they have been able to raise their country and their countrymen in the estimation of the entire civilised world. As we said yesterday, it would not be proper to form any exaggerated expectations of the outcome of Mr. Gokhale's visit. It may, however, be expected that the visit will bring about a better understanding between the South African Colonists and the British Indians resident in that part of the Empire. It is a significant fact that the Mayor presided at the meeting at Cape Town referred to above at which Senator Schreiner delivered a speech of welcome."

Maulana Shibli on Muslim politics.

18. The Millat (Lahore), of the 25th October 1912, publishes an article headed "Did Muhammadans practise oppression on India?" The writer says that Shamas-ul-Ulema Maulana Shibli has recently contributed an article on Muslim Politics to a Lucknow paper (the Muslim Gazette), the Editor of which holds curious religious views and zealously urges Muhammadans to agitate and to join the National Congress. Even a casual reading, however, of the article shows that it has been dictated by motives of personal enmity and revenge. The writer's condemnation of the Muslim League and praise for the Congress is exaggerated in the extreme and regardless of the truth. His wish seems to be that Muhammadans should sever their connection with the League and join the National Congress, whose policy and views are, he believes, of a "most universal" (All-India) character. The writer in the Millat, however, contends that this policy is far less practicable than that of the Muslim League, and let "us" remember that "we" are Muhammadans first and only Indians afterwards. Self-styled (Muslim) politicians—like Maulana Shibli—however, would merge Muhammadans in the Hindu majority, and they have come to be so fascinated by the idea, that, to gain their object, they do not hesitate even to deny the truth of historical events. The Maulana says that it is well-known that the Hindus never invaded Persia and Arabia, but that Muhammadans did invade India, destroying the famous Hindu "Kaaba, viz., Somnath" and the temples at Mathra and Benares. But the Maulana should remember the conspiracies hatched against Subaktgin in Raja Jaipal's Court, and the fact that the Raja assembled, without any cause, a very large army on the frontiers of Peshawar. In the event of success Jaipal would doubtless have practised oppression on the Muhammadans of Afghanistan. No fair-minded person can be in doubt as to whether the responsibility for the invasion of India by Subaktgin or Mahmud of Ghazni rests with the invaders or Jaipal. Hindus had, besides, become effete and it was to their good that a more virile people should infuse new life into them, by ruling over them. It is God's law that able nations should govern incompetent people; and, but for Muhammadans, Hindus would have been non-existent to-day. As regards the question of iconoclasm, Maulana Shibli should first say why the idols in the Kaaba were broken after the conquest of Mecca. Mahmud of Ghazni's conduct in doing what the Prophet did with his own hands was, according to Islam, highly commendable. Muhammadan Kings have never practised wanton oppression on Hindus. Maulana Shibli praises Hindu Native States, but, in view of the (wretched) condition of Muhammadans in Kashmir, Bikaner and Bharatpur, no Mussalman can have the cruelty to endorse his opinion. The Maulana also writes that Sivaji and the Sikhs of course raised the standard of rebellion, but, since they were claimants to the country, their conduct was in no way rebellious. These words, comments the Millat, emanate from a person who claims to be able to point out a proper policy to the Muslim League. "Fie on such knowledge of history and a curse be on such seditious politics!" In conclusion, the paper says that the burning of incense by Shams-ul-Ulama Shibli at the altar of Hindus is highly suspicious. He cares only for his secret object, no matter what fate befall his community.

Muhammadans and the Sepoy Mutiny.

19. Writing under the heading "A savage charge against Indian Muhammadans," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 27th October 1912, says that "the attack which the Balkan Confederacy has delivered against Turkey with gun and sword, is far less dangerous than the extremely base, nay, satanic arrows of attack with which the quiver of foul falsehood and disgusting lying is filled" ; and the men who use these arrows are arrayed all over Europe. These children of villany have raised a party of supporters even in England by sending lying telegrams and fabricated stories. And just as they themselves have been inflaming the religious passions of Christians against Muhammadans, in the name of the Cross, their supporters also have begun to shoot the arrows of missionary anger and Christian indignation in the columns of certain (English) newspapers, the object in view being to destroy even the little sympathy which England now feels for Turkey. These journals have, in order to justify the satanic attack which Servia, Bulgaria, Montenegro and Greece have made on Turkey, and the shedding of the streams of blood that are flowing in Macedonia and Albania, begun to indulge in the extremely dangerous, nay, insane ravings that the war (in the Balkans) is one between the Cross and the Crescent, and that the Crescent—being tyrannical, usurping and oppressive—the time for the Cross to lay it in blood and dust for ever has arrived. But perhaps the most savage attack delivered by these newspapers against Indian Muhammadans is the revolting lie that the Prophet's followers were the authors of the rising of 1857. These missionary rags have indulged in this nonsense with the object of making the British Government attach no importance to the voice of Indian Muhammadans against the war in the Balkans. "We protest with all our power against this devilish lie, and hope that our kind Government will prevent our hearts from breaking by putting an end to such foul ravings." Next the paper thanks the Right Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali for having entered a spirited protest in the columns of the Times, and expresses the hope that "our Government will not be influenced in the least by the ravings of these insane missionaries and demented journalists."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

Government and the tribal country.

20. Writing under the heading "Further precaution," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 23rd October 1912, says that the Pioneer's frontier correspondent reports that Mullah Saiyid Akbar addressed a meeting of Afridi and Orakzai tribesmen at Bagh on the 11th idem ; that he repeated some of his old stories about the tribes being threatened with danger from the Indian frontier ; but that his discourse was mainly directed against headmen suspected of furnishing news to the British authorities and of maintaining friendly relations with the latter. He urged that on proof of this kind of behaviour all such maliks should be expelled from tribal territory, and the meeting is said to have endorsed his views. This, however, according to the Pioneer, must have been mere pretence ; the Afridis rely greatly upon the allowances paid by Government, and the majority of their headmen willingly journey to Peshawar when the jirgas are summoned to assemble. They are not, therefore, likely, concludes the said journal, to listen to the fanatical appeals of the Mullah. It is the duty of the British Government, nevertheless, comments the Rafiq, to conduct itself with the greatest care and not to pin its faith only on the payment of allowances to the Afridis. These tribesmen are undoubtedly a greedy people, but they are also very patriotic and willingly lay down their lives to preserve their liberty. To interfere with their independence is to stir up a hornet's nest, but the paper knows that Government has no such intention. There is absolutely no truth in the report that it intends building a railway to the tribal country ; indeed, its responsibilities are so great that, as is known even to itself, it cannot be advisable, now or hereafter, to engage in a war. There is consequently no likelihood of its ever commencing hostilities on the frontier on the pretence of constructing a railroad. This being so, tribesmen also will not interfere with Government and may, therefore, have things their own way within their own territory. As regards any irregular force on that side of the frontier ever developing into a great power, the British or any other Government cannot prevent this. Afghanistan must advance, as also the tribal territory which is not under the present Rulers of India.

The rulers of Kabul.

21. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 25th October 1912, says that, according to the Pioneer's (Frontier) correspondent, the Amir intends holding a Darbar at Jálalabad and making an important pronouncement at it in regard to the foreign policy of Afghanistan. The Editor takes exception to the Pioneer's hostile attitude, and contends that, in order to ensure the defence of the (north-western) frontier of India, the ruler of Kabul should be placed above suspicion and allowed the fullest liberty of action.

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Alleged ill-treatment of pilgrims to the Hedjaz at the Kamran quarantine camp.

22. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 19th October 1912, publishes a communication entitled "Hardships at Kamran," in which it complains that pilgrims to the Hedjaz were subjected to the following serious hardships at the quarantine camp at Kamran this year :—

1. They were detained there for 40 days instead of a week or so, although they had only 7 days' food with them.

2. All the luggage with them was desecrated (? dessicated) by being thrown into "the hellish engine."

3. The edibles with them were destroyed.

4. They were not allowed to walk on the sea shore.

5. They were not allowed to say their prayers in the mosque attached to the camp.

6. They could not get sufficient water to drink.

7. The shop-keeper at the camp charged exorbitant prices, e.g., two annas for a box of matches, twelve annas for a cake of soap and eight annas for one chapatti.

8. The lady-doctor attached to the camp serves the purpose only of a companion to the male doctors; it is the latter who examine the female pilgrims and consider it a duty to hurt "our feelings."

The writer ascribes all this to the "kindness of European powers," whom he also accuses of preventing Turkey from spending in her own way the fees realised from the pilgrims.

Muhammadan officials and Friday prayers.

23. The Rafiq (Delhi) of the 25th October 1912, publishes a communication, in which the writer—Hafiz Ahmad Khan, an Ahmadi of Delhi—suggests that, instead of requesting Government to allow Muslim officials leave to say their Friday prayers, Muhammadans ought rather to ask that offices should on that day work from 6 or 7 A.M. to 12 o'clock. This arrangement, he adds, would preclude the possibility of Government work suffering in any way.

Commenting on the above, the Editor says that the suggestion would entail great inconvenience on the litigating public. He is, therefore, of opinion that Muhammadan officials should instead be granted leave for some time to say Friday prayers.

Preferential treatment among Hindus.

24. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 31st October 1912 :—

"An unusual instance of rivalry among the members of the same race and religion has cropped up in Behar, over which the Calcutta press has already raised a strong protest. It is proposed to frame certain rules of admission to Government Colleges in Behar, which give all round preference to the Beharees as against domiciled Bengalees. In one case only 15 per cent. of the admissible students will be taken from the domiciled Bengalees and in another students from United Province and Central Province will be given preference over Bengalees. A third case is that the class fees will be Rs. 1-8-0 'except for non-domiciled Bengalees who shall pay Rs. 8.' Moreover, 75 per cent. of the scholarships are reserved for 'Beharees by race.' It is also stated that preference will be given generally to Beharees over domiciled Bengalees. This sort of differentiation between members of one community on territorial grounds is, we admit, a very painful one and calculated to foster no friendly sentiment among those unfavourably affected. But we believe that the object of the Government is not to split up communities or discourage the progress of any section of the subjects of the same Government, but to give encouragement to such of those who are admittedly backward. The Beharees, it is well-known, have not hitherto received the benefits of education as well as the Bengalees. The object of separating Behar from Bengal is partly to advance the progress of Beharees whose unequal competition with the more advanced Bengalees was much against them. We, therefore, perfectly understand the objects of the Government, and it would have been only fair if the Calcutta papers had admitted this. We are not aware of the exact proportion of Beharee and domiciled Bengalee population, but we hope that every facility will be given for the latter in point of education and service. For, though backward communities should be adequately helped forward, sections should not be subjected to disabilities and their progress blocked. A domiciled Bengalee should be as good as a natural-born Beharee."

VI.—Legislation.

Lalas Lajpat Rai and Harkishen Lal and the forthcoming Council elections in the Punjab.

25. The Punjab Samachar (Lahore), of the 26th October 1912, publishes a note headed "Who are entitled to seats on the Punjab (Legislative) Council?" The paper says that titled or rich Hindus have no claims to the elective seats, seeing that they wish only to please the authorities, and are incapable of indulging in plain speaking in the Council. Only those who desire to serve, and sympathise with, the (Hindu) public should be elected by the Hindus of this province. Of the gentlemen who have offered themselves for election this year, Lalas Lajpat Rai and Harkishen Lal deserve special mention. Their past services entitle both of them to seats on the Council, and it behoves their co-religionists to vote for them. It is, however, to be regretted that certain titled persons, who hanker after fame and honours, object to their being elected. They have, therefore, issued a confidential letter to prejudice people against them, and to secure the votes for themselves. These men are in the habit of deceiving the authorities by posing as public leaders, whereas, if they were to die to-morrow, not a single member of the public would mourn for them. Such people are equally dangerous to the country, the nation and Government, and the Hindu community should not, therefore, allow itself to be imposed upon by them.

The White Slave Trade Bill.

26. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 31st October 1912:—

"In our opinion the White Slave Trade Bill and the Black Slave Trade Bill should both be embodied in one Bill and suitable provisions should be made to prevent trade in immorality, without distinguishing white or black. We notice that the Government of India have referred Mr. Madge's White Slave Trade Bill to the Local Governments for opinion, and expressed their desire to 'arrive at a decision' before the close of the approaching session. Apparently they are not so urgent about Mr. Dadabhoy's Black Slave Bill. We do not know if there is any great difficulty in taking the two together and embodying both in one. We have to deal with crime of one sort, though it affects different classes of persons. We do not want such provisions as deportation or interference with questions of personal morality of individuals. It has been found that the provisions of the Penal Code are insufficient to punish individuals who trade in vice and inveigle young and apparently innocent women and girls. In England the White Slave Traffic Bill was strongly opposed and some of its effective clauses considerably weakened as they were believed to interfere with the liberty of individuals. Apparently the White Slave Traffic does prevail in England and the Continent on a large scale. There are special social conditions in the Punjab which have to be carefully considered before legislating in this direction. The safety and purity of women are precarious in this province of wretched customs and low social ethics. Primarily there is the great deficiency of female population which probably accounts for defective laws and vicious customs. If immorality is banished from the Punjab and traffic in women stopped, in whatever form it may be carried out, it would be the dawn of a new and wholesome social era. But women must be imported in some form or other to supply the deficiency of nature."

27. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), dated 30th October 1912:—

Communal representation in the Punjab Council.

"The Panjabee, which like most other Hindu organs of the Province is chuckling over the initial reverses sustained by the Turks and would probably be most happy if the Oriental rulers of Eastern Europe were turned out of the West by the Balkan Confederacy, makes a very naïve suggestion to the Muhammadans in regard to elections to the Punjab Legislative Council. After shedding crocodile tears over the unfortunate differences that divide Hindus and Muhammadans in this Province, our contemporary advises both the communities not to fall out among themselves over the coming elections, but to settle the matter amicably in the following way :—Of the eight seats to be filled by election, the two seats representing the Punjab University and the Punjab Chamber of Commerce should be treated as 'neutral,' and of the remaining six seats, Muhammadans should not contest the election of Hindus as representatives of the Eastern and Central Groups of Municipalities and one Group of District Boards, and in return Hindus should leave the Musalmans to elect Muhammadan representatives for the Western Group of Municipalities and the two remaining Groups of District Boards. This, according to the local tri-weekly, would secure three seats to Hindus and three to Muhammadans, and, therefore, preserve the balance between the two communities. Our contemporary, however, conveniently forgets that no Muhammadan can hope to be elected as a representative of either of the 'neutral' Groups. The Punjab Chamber of Commerce is sure to elect a Hindu, if it does not elect an Englishman, while the Punjab University may be regarded as a safe seat for Mr. Shadi Lal. Thus the result of the Punjabee's suggestion, if accepted, would be that out of 8 elected representatives, only 3 will be Muhammadans, and at least 4 Hindus, that is to say, the community which is in the majority with regard to population will be placed in a minority as regards representation by election !

"Such a one-sided proposal cannot obviously be acceptable to the Musalmans of the Punjab. If, however, the Hindus really want to eliminate inter-communal contests, they should suggest a scheme which would secure 4 out of 8 seats to the Muslims. The following proposal ought to satisfy our Hindu friends :—

|---|---|
| Municipalities. | |
| Eastern Group ... ... ... | Hindu |
| Central Group ... ... ... | Muhammadan. |
| Western Group ... ... ... | Muhammadan. |
| District Boards. | |
| Eastern Group ... ... ... | Hindu. |
| Central Group ... ... ... | Muhammadan. |
| Western Group ... ... ... | Muhammadan. |
| Punjab University ... ... ... | Hindu. |
| Chamber of Commerce ... ... | Neutral. |

"The above scheme would give 4 out of 8 seats to Musalmans, who in point of population deserve more than 4, and at least 3 to Hindus. It has the further merit that it will secure Hindu representation to tracts where the majority of inhabitants are Hindus, and Muslim representation to Groups where the majority of inhabitants are Muslims, it being hardly necessary to point out that Hindus preponderate in Eastern Punjab, and Musalmans in Central and Western Punjab. If our Hindu friends are really in earnest about union between the two great communities, they ought to prove it by their acceptance of our equitable scheme or make some counterproposals on the above lines. Otherwise mere empty pretensions of good-will can do no good. And when such protestations are accompanied by proposals which are calculated to hoodwink the Musalmans, their effect can better be imagined than described."

VII.—General Administration.

(a) Judicial.

Mian Muhammad Shafi and the Bench of the Madras High Court.

28. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 26th October 1912, has a note headed "Mian Muhammad Shafi and the Madras Judgeship," in which it reports that the Government of India intends appointing the Mian to succeed Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim, of the Madras High Court, who has been selected to serve on The Royal Indian Services Commission. While the Hindus of the Punjab, it adds, cannot obtain their legitimate rights even in their own province, their Muslim neighbours are appointed to highly-placed posts in distant parts of the country, as well as in the Punjab.

Elsewhere the paper refers to the vacancy to be caused on the bench of the Madras High Court in consequence of Mr. Justice Ayeling's departure for England (on leave), and suggests that Government should confer the same on some deserving Hindu in the Punjab.

29. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 26th October 1912, publishes the following as "The Tamman Dacoity case."

The Tamman Riot case and the jhatka-halal controversy.

"To-day we publish the text of the judgment in this important case. The judgment is the one delivered by Mr. F. H. Burton, District Magistrate of Attock. The conviction and sentence having been confirmed by the Sessions Judge, Mr. Burton's judgment stands and deserves the widest publicity. It would be seen that the Muhammadans concerned in the case resorted to cow-killing and even to looting in revenge for the slaughter of a goat by Jhatka. Mr. Burton says: 'Even if Jhatka were performed it is evident that it was not done with any intention to wound the feelings of the Musalmans, but quietly and was only discovered by chance.' Yet such was the bigotry and intolerance of the men that one of them brought his own cow and killed it in front of a Hindu's house to the beating of a drum. In addition to this sacrilegious act the men had the brutality of forcibly detaining a Hindu to witness the slaughter of the cow. Not satisfied with these malicious and spiteful acts they looted the shops of the Hindus and scattered in the streets the wares kept in the shops. The Lambardar is a Muhammadan and he is said to have stated that the men dared not loot their shops. Yet in spite of his assurance the shops were looted, and in the court the plea was set up that the complainants themselves had thrown their wares, in order to concoct a charge against innocent men. Mr. Burton has generally taken a judicious and strictly independent view of the whole question. A remarkable passage in his judgment is this: 'It seems to me that this cow-killing was done with the approval of all Mussalmans of the village and no one thought of interfering with it until the riot degenerated into looting.' It is for the Government to state what such a state of affairs signifies. Mr. Burton has convicted 22 men and awarded them varying sentences from six months' imprisonment to a fine of Rs. 200. But the facts disclose a state of affairs more serious than the sentences suggest. Mr. Burton overlooks the fact that as a rule in villages common people among Hindus and Muhammadans live side by side in amity and concord and that trouble comes in when outside influences prevail. The new theory of the sacredness of the goat to Islam and the objection to Jhatka is spreading, and numerous Marconi stations have been erected for the transmission of wireless messages. We suppose it is pertinent to inquire whether since the British occupation of the Punjab no goat was slaughtered anywhere by the Jhatka process, and whether each time a goat was so slaughtered, Islam resorted to avenge itself by cow-killing and loot. We commend Mr. Burton's able judgment to the earnest attention of the Government and trust that the Government will see its way to terminate this vicious agitation finally and satisfactorily.

(c)—Municipal and cantonment affairs.

30. Writing under the heading "An undeserved hardship on Peshawar Muhammadans," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 25th October 1912, complains that although Peshawar is a "purely Muslim city" the Municipal Committee there, seven of the members of which are Musalmans with large paunches, has so oppressed the local followers of the Prophet, as to cause consternation throughout the place. Next it publishes a telegram from the Muhammadans of Peshawar stating that great excitement has been caused among them by the new rules regarding the sale of mutton and beef in the city. They are right in saying, the Editor adds, that, if they had been supported by their co-religionists on the committee and if the latter had not been devoid of all sense of "national" and Islamic self-respect, they would not have suffered their present troubles. In conclusion, it asks Sir George Roos-Keppel to take immediate notice of the matter.

(d)—Education.

31. The Siraj-ul-Akhbar (Jhelum), of the 22nd October 1912, has a note headed "British flags on schools," in which it commends the Madras Government's proposal to plant the Union Jack on the buildings of every public school in that Presidency. Other parts of the country also, it suggests, should adopt the idea, calculated as it is to promote feelings of loyalty among the students.

A suggestion.

32. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 31st October 1912:—

The Hindu University.

"The Draft Bill of the proposed Hindu University of Benares has been submitted to the Government of India. The desire of the University Committee has also been intimated to the Government that the questions of affiliation, name and other particulars could be settled at a private conference. But it has been pointed out that the name of the Benares University would not be so well appreciated by the people as that of the Hindu University, and that the affiliation of mofussil colleges would not impair the value of inspection. Yet we must remember that the Secretary of State has finally decided the questions and for the present we have to accept his decision. As we have stated before, the affiliation would be found necessary at a future time when we could very well press the matter. In the Draft Bill provision is made for the affiliated colleges in the mofussil, but this could either be changed or left alone. And as for the name, we think the Government of India would have no objection to substitute the name of Kashi for Benares, which though national has been corrupted beyond recognition. But we do not think that it is such a vital part of the University scheme that the ancient name should be revived in connection with a purely modern scheme. The Hindu University Committee regret that the Viceroy could not become the Chancellor of the University, but desire that the names of His Majesty the King Emperor and His Excellency the Viceroy should be associated with the scheme as protector and patron respectively. It would, indeed, be a source of gratification if this could be agreed to, but in view of the denominational nature of the new ventures, we are not sure if the Government will readily accede to the request.

"The Draft Bill submitted to the Government provided for a constitution which reflects the liberalism and manysidedness of the Hindu religion itself. It is remarkably short and free from extravagant provisions. It shows that the Committee have rightly valued the scope and purpose of the proposed University as an academic seat, providing for secular as well as for religious education. The University is open to all classes, races and creeds without distinction, and also to women, and the religious side is not compulsory to those who do not care for it. This is as it should be, and we are sure that the fears of those who expect that a sectarian spirit will be fostered will prove altogether groundless. There is nothing in the Draft Bill to show either a sectarian tendency or a narrow view of educational uses. Due provision has also been made for the teaching of Jainism and Sikhism and for adequate control by the representatives of these religions. * * * * We are of opinion that the constitution is on the whole very sound and while giving the Hindu people adequate voice in the management of the University, it makes adequate arrangements for efficiency and progress. The Draft Bill ought to find the approval of the majority of the thoughtful men, whether Hindus or others. The Hindu University is Hindu only so far as Hinduism is taught to those who require it, and in all other respects, it is purely and avowedly educational. The existing Universities, though useful, have not been able to attend to the development of the vernaculars and promote Sanskrit learning. All these the new University proposes to do, and in addition includes in its scheme original research and practical application in arts, sciences and industries. No doubt, success depends on the practical work and the amount of funds available. We hope that the Hindus will continue to make donations so that the funds may constantly increase and yield revenue for extensions. The University Committee have provided for every donor of Rs. 500 exercising his or her voice in the formation of the main governing body and we believe this privilege will be given even to non-Hindu donors. It is a good, just and liberal provision and as it is not beyond the ability of almost every Hindu educated man to give a donation of Rs. 500 to the University funds, we hope that donations will continue to be made and the funds will be augmented and brought to a figure which will enable the authorities to undertake all the items in the programme."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Sat Dharm Pracharak and the Press Act.

33. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of 26th October 1912 :—

"With a sense of profound regret we have learnt of this descent of the bolt from the blue! Inscrutable are the ways of the powers that be. Security Deposit! Security against what? If it be to protect the paper from the attacks of caluminators of which there are many, the deposit money ought ungrudgingly to be paid. Why on earth is money needed for such a purpose we are at a loss to know. If the object be to prevent its entrance into the regions of politics, has it ever done so before? Is not its past policy a security in itself for maintaining a sane one in the future? It is idle to find causes for all these actions. Whatever agnostics or atheists or rationalists may say there is something as 'The Unknown' or preferably that of the unknowable. By the bye, 'is Delhi far from the maddenings crowd's ignoble strife, to have a branch of the Gurukul started there? Probably the authorities are moving with the times. Anyhow even this is as unknowable as the "Security amounts" cause for deposit. But it is better for a layman to "wait and learn."

'H.'

The North-West Frontier Province.

34. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 29th October 1910 :—

"It appears the Government of India has under consideration a proposal to transfer the Revenue and Judicial Jurisdictions of the North-West Frontier Province to the Punjab,

If this be so, we dare say that they will remove some at least of the causes of dissatisfaction The creation of the Frontier Province has not been successful. There is evidence to show that the border men have, instead of becoming more docile, become less obedient both to their own chiefs and to the Government of India. Whereas formerly these men used to go to Peshawar to receive what they regarded as buksheesh or rewards for keeping peace and protecting trade routes, they now go and demand what they call kists or revenue ! They have come to regard this as their claim and seem to assert what they think to be their rights. This remarkable. change in the attitude of the border tribes does not indicate success of the Frontier Province. Moreover, the raids and the disobedient conduct of the people are a source of anxiety. Mr. Harji Mal in his letter to the Punjab Hiudu Conference says that the tribes who had full confidence in Mullicks or leaders and feared them have lost both. We believe they have acquired individual rights to do as they like and a few of them have given up their national dress and preference to modern fashions and Turkish caps. We do not know how the Government regards these changes, but, if these are the indications of success, we certainly do not object, only the new ideas and changes should take a more peaceful and law-abiding shape. Education has apparently made little progress, to induce the tribes to appreciate the benefits of more peaceful and disciplined life. But we hope that with the proposed changes these advantages will ensue."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

War in the Balkans.

1. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 31st October 1912, publishes a letter from its Constantinople correspondent—Muhammad Abdul Wali Khan—giving an account of the war fever in Turkey and praising the rapidity with which Turkish forces are being mobilised and concentrated on the frontier. After predicting victory for the Turks, the writer reports that a great event has occurred at Constantinople; on Friday, the 4th October, thousands of Muhammadans went to the St. Sophia Mosque to say their prayers. The Imam ascended the pulpit in a green robe and with a sword instead of his usual staff, to show Muhammadans that the sword also must frequently be used to maintain the unity of God "in the dark places of heathenism and the Trinity."

War in the Balkans.

2. Writing under the heading "The Blaze in the Balkans" the Khalsa Advocate of 1st November 1912, makes the following remarks:—

* * * * * * *

"Evidently the fortunes of war are so far going deadset against the Turks, and, unless a turning-point reaches soon, disaster and humiliation stare them in the face. The enormous military strength and staying power of Turkey may, however, still come to the rescue and avert that sad contingency for that much-troubled country."

War in the Balkans.

3. The Watan (Lahore), of the 5th November 1912, disbelieves the report that the Porte has requested the Powers to mediate between it and the allies. After remarking that Greece, Bulgaria and Servia are being crushed by the Turkish forces, the paper regrets that the Turks are not likely to be allowed (by the Great Powers?) to have things their own way. They are certain to prove losers in the end, whether they continue the war or not.

War in the Balkans.

4. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 6th November 1912:—

"* * * But there is no longer room for doubt that the status quo is dead and Macedonia is hopelessly lost to Turkey. The fall of Turkey is a great blow to all Asia, for after Japan, Turkey was looked upon as the greatest Asiatic Power."

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan war.

5. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 31st October 1912, publishes a communication from one Abdul Hamid Chisti, of the firm of Abdul Rashid Brothers, Anarkali, Lahore, saying that Persia, Morocco and Tripoli "are things of the past." After remarking that the Caliphate is now about to be wiped out by its enemies, he asks his co-religionists to shake off their sleep and reflect why their enemies wish to end their days. Recent events, he adds, are due to their weakness; and, if they wish to preserve their existence, Muhammadans should display a spirit of sacrifice, curtail their expenses, and render pecuniary help to the Turks. Continuing, he says that the poor Muhammadans constitute the backbone of Islam, and that no good should be expected from those rich Musalmans who have amassed wealth by sucking the blood of the poor. The former alone can preserve the honour of Islam, and should make for the purpose whatever sacrifices they can.

In its issue of the 4th November 1912 the Zamindar has a note headed "Arabic newspapers have not arrived to-day," in which it states that no Arabic journals, or letters from its Egyptian and Constantinople correspondents, were received by its office on the 3rd instant, although the overland mail was delivered at the usual time on Sunday last. The Muslim public, it adds, has been most eager of late to gather authentic news about Tripoli and the Balkans from these newspapers. It would, therefore, request Government to ask the department concerned not to subject them to unusual scrutiny but to let them reach Muhammadans without any hindrance. Continuing, it reports that on the 30th ultimo it remitted Rs. 300 by telegraphic money order to Mr. Abdul Wali Khan at Constantinople and asked him to wire back news about the war in the Balkans. Nothing has, however, been heard from him up to the present, which is rather suspicious.

In another place the Zamindar of the same date publishes an article headed "Proclamation of neutrality and Muhammadan Volunteers." It begins by transcribing a letter from Mr. Shaukat Ali, who reports that 54 Muslim Volunteers are fully prepared to go to the front; that most of them are very strong and healthy, while some know even "military work (? drill)"; that not a few of them wish to sell everything they possess, to cover their expenses; that Musalmans (lit. people) are most eager to take a hand in the war; and that no great efforts are required to raise a large number of Volunteers. The writer himself cannot spare time to organise the proposed volunteer corps, and would, therefore, request some able and zealous Muhammadans to undertake the work. After stating that he will join the corps at the place of embarkation, he expresses his conviction that Government will allow Muhammadans to take steps to protect their religion, especially when thousands of Christians are going to the front to fight for the allies and are being openly inflamed by Christian missionaries to exterminate Islam.

Commenting on the above, the paper endorses Mr. Shaukat Ali's conviction, but suggests that the gentlemen named and others desirous of going to the Balkans at the head of the corps should first apply to Government for permission and passports.

In its issue of the 5th November 1912, the Zamindar publishes two communications giving an account of the Muhammadan meetings held at Calcutta on the 27th and 28th ultimo in connection with the war in the Balkans. The writer of the letter about the first meeting—one Barkat Ali, B.A.,—reports that the Editor of the Hilal, who was president, declared, in the course of his speech, that the time had come when every Musalman should prepare himself for a jehad. He also deprecates the conduct of Muhammadan nobles in having taken no part in the meeting and says that, if they continue treating their community like this, they will one day be driven out of it.

The Comrade (Delhi) of the 2nd November 1912, writing under the heading "The sacrifice," makes the following remarks :—

"When amidst the world's idol temples the first House of God was to be built, as Iqbal puts it, Abraham was required by Allah to make a sacrifice of that which he loved best, and, as every Mussalman knows, it was Ishmael, his dearest son, that was chosen by a loving father for this sacrifice to his Maker. In that trial the ancestor of the Prophet of Islam proved himself worthy of the choice of Allah to be the builder of His first dwelling on earth, and nothing that history has recorded or romance has invented has yet equalled the sublime nobility of the sacrifice of Abraham. The time is fast approaching when the anniversary of that great sacrifice would be celebrated throughout the Moslem world, and in India too the old convention will be carried out just in the old way. But is it not a fitting time to consider whether the demands of the Islamic creed can be satisfied with the observance of mere conventions? Is nothing happening to-day which was not happening a year ago, that the Mussalmans of this country can be content with slaughtering a few sheep and goats and quarrelling as usual with the Hindus over the sacrifice of a few cows? Those of them at least that offer their prayers to the God of K'aba repeat five times a day the prayer, that He should bless Mohamed and the posterity of Mohamed as he had blessed Abraham and the posterity of Abraham. God has already blessed Mohamed and he stands in no need of Moslem prayers. But the spiritual posterity of the last of the Prophets is in dire need of fervent prayers for Allah's blessings. Never in the whole history of Islam has its worldly prestige been so low as to-day, and the successor of the Prophet, according to many, and the Protector of the Sacred Places, according to all, has unfurled the banner of Islam for the protection of such temporal power as he still wields in the name of Allah. Need we describe in detail the horrors of the stricken field and the woes and miseries of the soldiers of Islam who lie maimed and bleeding after their valiant struggle against the foes of the Moslem faith, in order to rouse Indian Mussalmans to the supreme sacrifice that is demanded of them to-day? That would, no doubt, provide us with an opportunity for much studied eloquence which would earn us the poetaster's meed, and our Moslem readers with an occasion for tears that are the only weapons of a woman. But if the temporal power of Islam, for the continuance of which the Mussalmans pray when they ask for hasanatan-fid-dunya (good in this world), is to be saved, tears and elegies are equally unavailing. Islam has not lacerated the affairs of this world from those of the next, and temporal power is as good an index as any other of spiritual salvation. The Mussalmans cannot, therefore, console themselves over the loss of temporal power by promising themselves the Kingdom of Heaven. This, therefore, is for the present their only world, and, if Heaven can ever be purchased, the price can now be paid on the earth to-day. All that is required is that, in support of the defenders of K'aba, the Mussalmans of India should nerve themselves for the supreme sacrifice such as was willingly offered by the builder of K'aba. We do not sound the trumpet for a muster of the forces of Islam to wage a bloody war. Of that there is no need in India, and we trust there would never be. Moreover, the God of Islam is not a Moloch, propitiated only by human sacrifice. On the altar steps of Allah there is no need to sprinkle the blood of Indian Mussalmans, and their brethren in Turkey do not require it. But money, which the whole philosophy of the East far more than that of the West has taught us to regard as dross and filthy lucre, can to-day bring to the soldiers of Islam the munitions of war and to the wounded and ailing much needed food and medicine. We have already published more than one appeal and our contemporaries have been not a whit less enthusiastic in this matter. Some money has been collected, but there is no central organisation which could control and direct these widely scattered agencies for the collection of funds. It is, therefore, not possible for us to form even a rough estimate of the aggregate amount hitherto collected. We would incidentally suggest that the All-India Moslem League should organise a central body for the purpose, and in the meantime we would repeat our earnest desire to be placed in a position to publish from week to week the progress of various Turkish Relief Funds. But in the absence of a well-established organisation it is not easy to collect as large a sum as the situation urgently demands, and it is necessary to look somewhere else for speedy aid. Now, it is only too well-known that the hopes of the best Mussalmans of India are centred in the proposed Moslem University, and even the delay that has taken place in inducing Government to accept the Draft Constitution has caused them a disappointment unparalled in its magnitude. Many who are no doubt as keen in their enthusiasm for the Moslem University as ourselves have rushed forward ere this with schemes showing how the thirty lakhs collected should be spent, as if it was the spending and not the collecting of money that was the task worthy of the efforts of educational enthusiasts. We have ourselves deprecated in no uncertain manner such schemes of expenditure, and we trust we are permitted to believe that in a considerable measure our steadfastness has prevented the coming scramble that the wild-cat schemes of some leaders had clearly indicated. But the situation has entirely altered, and to-day it is we who beseech the leaders to scatter their hard-won treasure, and that too in the name of something other than the education of Indian Mussalmans. We refer to the need of Turkey and our conscience is clear when we appeal to the Mussalmans to sacrifice, even the University to the cause of Islam abroad. For our part, we trust we shall be believed, when we say that this decision has been arrived at after much consideration and that it has caused us many a pang in the process. We have, however, nerved ourselves to this great sacrifice, and it is now for those who have contributed lavishly out of their wealth to nerve themselves for the same. A poor man's mite comes out of his bare sustenance, while the rich man's gift mostly comes out of his superfluity. Nevertheless, if the rich men who have contributed in lakhs and thousands to the Moslem University come forward with the request that their contributions should be sent over to Turkey, we are sure the poor men will not say 'nay' as regards their small change. 'Will the rich be bold enough to do it?' is now the only question.

"It may be said that, if the money so assiduously collected is spent so easily, the Mussalmans may never be able thereafter to endow a University. We, therefore, suggest that the Muslim University Fund be sent to Turkey in the first instance only as a loan. With reference to this, the correspondence which we have had with Government will no doubt be read with keen interest, and elicit in favour of Government, which has acted with such conspicuous fairness and justice, the same enthusiasm that swept over Delhi when His Excellency the Viceroy's declaration, wired after clearing the line of all other traffic, was announced.

"The following telegram was sent by us on the 1st instant to the Privato Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy :—

"'Some Mussalmans are anxious to advance a loan to Turkey. I understand such action would not contravene His Majesty's declaration of neutrality. May I beg you to place this telegram before His Excellency the Viceroy to ascertain if such action is in any way contrary to law or British policy. Indian Mussalmans gratefully recognise the great efforts made by England to prevent Balkan aggression and are convinced of her desire for the preservation of peace. An authoritative declaration that Government will not oppose the contemplated loan will confirm their confidence in the good-will of England towards Turkey and such sympathy as is not inconsistent with neutrality. I beg you to kindly send the reply by express telegram to enable me to announce it in the Jama' Masjid after Friday prayers and publish in Saturday's Comrade.'

"The following reply was received from the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy :—

"'Clear the line. The advance of a loan by Mussalmans to Turkey would not contravene His Majesty's declaration of neutrality.

'P. S. V.'

"We telegraphed to the Private Secretary to His Excellency as follows :—

"'Please convey my hearty thanks to His Excellency for the message of assurance regarding advance of a loan by Indian Mussalmans to Turkey. The message was read out to a large congregation in the Jama' Masjid and elicited great enthusiasm and grateful recognition of Government's sincere sympathy. Shams-ul-Ulama Syed Ahmad Sahib, Imam of the Jama' Masjid, invited the congregation to express the thanks of the Mussalmans of Delhi for this clear declaration by His Excellency, and the congregation authorises me to convey their respectful gratitude.'

"There is now no let or hindrance, and, if after this clear and authoritative declaration the Mussalmans fail to succour their brethren in the fighting line, nobody in the world would care a straw for the international position of the community out of which much capital has at times been made, and Mr. Montagu would have good reason to take back his recantation. If this is not the time for the display of Muslim solidarity, let them rest assured no other would ever come. If the community offers thirty lakhs as a loan to Turkey and the leaders gird up their loins to collect a crore more for the real 'Ransom of Islam,' Turkey would have a useful loan in her hour of need and the coffers of the Muslim University would also be replenished. We have every confidence in the generous devotion of the masses and the classes to Islam and have no fear of failure. But if the worst comes to the worst, would it be a matter for deep regrets that Indian Mussalmans did not try to cure themselves of fevers and colds and such other minor ailments when Islam itself was done to death? With a dagger at their throats, they must either be abnormally cool or abnormally stupid if they can think of pills and potions."

One Muhammad Asaf Ali, from Delhi, contributes the following to the Comrade (Delhi), of 2nd November 1912 :—

"SIR,—A more critical moment than the present for Islam can hardly be imagined, especially because the prestige of Turkey is synonymous with the prestige of Islam, and the existence of the Ottoman Empire is essential for the secular progress of the Moslem races. Not only have the Balkan States conspired to make common cause against Turkey as a State, but they have (nothing can be more evident) determined to make war upon Islam as a rival religious force.

"We need not be concerned with the utter want of international ethics in the European Nations, which do not seem to get tired of vaunting their shallow enthusiasm for the 'cause of civilization,' because the present is the time when our attention should be concentrated upon our own weaknesses, so that we may strengthen ourselves to meet the enemy. There are certain questions which naturally arise in every Moslem's mind at this time, and the following are some of them :—

"(1) Is Turkey the back-bone of Islam? and does the defeat of the Turks mean the lowering of its prestige?

"(2) What can I do to ease my conscience under existing circumstances?

"(3) Does an Indian Moslem owe a duty to the Turks?

"These and a stream of other questions surge up in every Moslem's mind in India, and he tries to answer them as best he can according to his lights.

"There cannot be two answers to the first question. Islam as a civilising force will disappear with the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire. And it necessarily follows that as soon as an 'Independent Caliphate' yields place to a 'Vassal Caliphate'—a consummation that is well within the ambition of a section of European diplomacy—Islam will become a byword for hypocrisy. It would mean the substitution of the spurious for the genuine; and will gradually lead to a complete demoralisation of the Moslem world. If Turkey falls, Islam cannot stand. Turkey is, therefore, the back-bone of Islam, and this does not leave the answer to the other half of the first question in doubt. I need not repeat the oft-quoted example of the poor Hebrews or other people who are in the same plight. Our prestige cannot survive a great disaster to the Turkish armies. If ever there was a time for the Moslem units to range themselves on the side of their religion and the cause of righteousness, that time is now. The present world is slowly forgetting that the Moslem can sink all paltry differences (and we have so many schools of theology) before he is sunk. He is sinking now, and it is high time for him to come to the rescue of his faith, be he a Shia or Sunni. It matters little what his particular sect is, as long as his essential creed is summed up in 'God is one and Muhammad is His Prophet.' The common tie which binds us all together is this external formula, and no matter what the details of our beliefs are, if we do not all feel like one man, then that formula is in jeopardy.

"We can all best think out for ourselves what each of us can do to help those who are fighting for the cause of righteousness, and for the cause of the Prophet's faith; but I desire to draw the attention of the Indian Moslems specially to the fact that Islam, when it is in peril, has the strongest claim upon them, as they form the largest number of the Moslem population inhabiting any single country, and, again, because they have ever so many things in their power to do. They have all along been boasting of their solidarity and the influence they claim to possess as a living body; should they suffer anything to stand in the way of their religious sentiments? If then Islam has a strong claim upon us, and since Islam owes its dignity and status to the existence of Turkey, each and every Moslem owes a duty to the Turk, which if unperformed to-day shall make every defaulter accountable to his conscience and to his God.

"Some leading Moslems are, we know, afraid to express their religious sentiments, not because they consider such an expression seditious or in any way illegal, for it is not, but because they seem to associate the cause of the Balkans with Christianity and they associate Christianity with British Raj, and they fear they might earn the displeasure of the rulers and lose the last chance of getting the long coveted 'title'!

"If this is the logic of their argument, there is a still 'shorter cut' to their goal. But there are others, and they mistakenly think that an Indian's duty at all times lies in India! This is a noble but misinterpreted sentiment. There are times when our duty calls us more imperatively outside India. We live in the land of 'peace' and now our duty lies in the land of war."

The Watan (Lahore), of the 2nd November 1912, publishes a communication headed "Muhammadans wounded and orphaned by the Balkan war." The writer—Dr. Abdul Hakim Khan, of Rampur,—takes exception to (Mr. Shaukat Ali's) proposal about the despatch of Indian Volunteer Corps to the front, saying that men ignorant of the art of war will prove a source of trouble rather than of help to the Turks."

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 1st November 1912, publishes some verses by Shaikh Nur Ilahi, of Mahrauli, formerly Municipal Commissioner, Delhi, referring to the war in the Balkans and saying that arrangements have everywhere been made to exterminate the Turks, who are a thorn in the side of Christian Europe. He then writes as follows:—

"The Turks, who rely only on God, are single-handed,

"But numberless Christians are against them;

"Strange is civilisation, thriving as it does on cunning and the dagger!

"Strange is the pretence of religion! Still such impudence is displayed (by Christians)!

"They claim to profess the religion of the Bible, but their practice is different;

"They fight with their neighbours at all times.

"Their object is to combine and drive the Turks out of Europe."

Therefore, says the writer, let all Indian Muhammadans render all possible help to the Turks.

In its issue of the 5th November 1912, the Paisa Akhbar publishes an article headed "Indian Muhammadans and relief to wounded Turks." It begins by reporting that the Ullemas of Deoband have issued a fatwa making it incumbent on Muhammadans to give money for the Red Crescent Society and declaring it lawful for them to hand over even sakat money, offerings, skins of sacrificed animals, &c., for this good work. They are also subscribing towards the Society's funds, and it is to be hoped that the example will be followed in other parts of India also. After remarking that lakhs of rupees could be collected in a few days by these means, the paper suggests that the Turks being involved in serious trouble the Prophet's followers in India should not celebrate the coming 'Id, but should remit the money thus saved for the relief of the wounded, and should curtail their expenses in every way for the same purpose. Every one of them is willing to contribute his mite, but there is no one at present ready to collect the money from lakhs and crores of Musalmans ; therefore necessary arrangements in every village town, tehsil and district must be made. Rich Muhammadans should also lend money to Turkey, and the paper wishes that thousands of them would spare some of their wealth for the purpose. Next it refers to Mr. Shaukat Ali's proposals to send a corps of Muslim Volunteers to the front, and says that the first step in the matter ought to have been to ask for permission from Government. Muhammadan Volunteers would, besides, prove of no use to the Turks, being ignorant of the latter's language, as also of the art of war. Again, Turkey wants, not men, but money, and is making appeal after appeal for funds.

In its issue of the 6th November 1912 the Paisa Akhbar refuses to believe that the entry of Egyptian papers into India has been prohibited. If Government has, however, really done so, in order to prevent excitement being caused among Indian Muhammadans by the writing of these journals, it is labouring under a low and unstatesmanlike thought. It is far better to let the Prophet's followers in this country learn what is happening to Turkey than to keep them ignorant of events, especially as the British Government has been doing its utmost to help Turkey and maintain peace.

Writing under the heading 'The War : anti-British sentiments,' the Panjabee, of 5th November 1912, remarks as follows :—

"It is difficult to enter into the mind of Indian Muhammadan leaders and the great bulk of their followers. The recent victories of the Balkans and the defeat of the Turkish forces are naturally regretted by Indian Muhammadans, in common with several Asiatics. But we do not see why there should be any resentment against the British authorities. The pet theory of the Indian Moslems is that great Britain should interfere and protect Turkey and other Muhammadan States against aggression, because in India there are 70 millions of Moslems as British subjects whose feelings are rendered unhappy. We dare say that England would gladly protect Turkey, if Turkey becomes an English Protectorate like Egypt. But consistently with Turkish independence, protection is hardly possible. Moreover the British Government can hardly be held responsible for the growth of extra-territorial patriotism of Indian Moslems who are 'Moslems first and Indians last.' Mr. Amir Ali and men of his ideas ought to prevent the war and protect Turkey. Moreover there is another great problem that the Balkan War is going to settle to some extent. How far can Asiatic nations successfully govern foreign nationalities, and how far can European States govern Asiatic nationalities. If Turkey is made to lose European possessions and be confined to Asiatic ones, then it would show that the political domination of the feeble minority over an alien majority cannot be maintained happily. We believe that intelligent Moslems in India have thought over this problem. It is a question of efficiency, reforms, adjustment and conciliation. The history of India furnishes numerous examples of success and failure of this principle. Instead of entertaining any impractical theories of international duties, Moslems would do well to discuss the broad issues of the war and of bringing about a satisfactory termination."

The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 2nd November 1912, speaks of the unsatisfactory condition of the Muslim world, and of the recent happenings in Asia, Tripoli and Morocco. During the past few months "we" have lost countries containing 14,19,000 square miles of land and 10,00,30,000 followers of the Prophet; while efforts are now being made to raise the banner of the Cross over "the few remaining Islamic possessions in Europe." Should Muhammadans, it asks, put up with "this degradation" and consent to being reduced to the condition of Wandering Jews? Will not the nations which are determined to ruin Turkey attack even the sacred places at Mecca and Medina, of which she is the guardian? Musalmans should give money for the supply of arms and ammunition to Turkish warriors in the Balkans, while those of them who can do so should go to the front and lay down their lives for their religion. It would be as well, however, first to ask permission from Government, by holding meetings everywhere and unanimously requesting Government that, since Englishmen have been taking part in wars in spite of the British Government's proclamations of neutrality, they (Muhammadans) also may be allowed to fight in the Balkans.

Elsewhere the paper publishes a letter headed "It is our duty to sympathise with the Turks." The writer—Sardar Muhammad Aslam Khan, Biloch, Editor of the Muin (Amritsar)—says that the Balkan States and their patrons—Russia and Austria—wish to sweep the Turks off the face of the earth. If they succeed in doing so, they may be relied upon to make mischief even in Arabia, Syria and Asia Minor, while Mecca and Medina will be placed at the mercy of the enemies of Islam. It is, therefore, the duty of Muhammadans to sacrifice their lives and property at the altar of holy Islam. Indian Musalmans should rise and render help to those of their oppressed and friendless brethren who are, for the sake of their religion, being trampled under the hoofs of the horses of Islam's enemies. They should also appeal to England which is practically an Islamic power, to lend a helping hand to Turkey. Their lives and property are dedicated to the service of the British Government and they have, consequently, the right to ask it to help the guardians of Mecca and Medina.

Hindus and the Balkan war.

6 The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 31st October 1912, complains that several narrow-minded Hindu papers in the Punjab not only feel jubilant over the present troubles of Turkey, but are also beside themselves with joy over the supposed Italian conquest of Tripoli. They endeavour to justify their conduct by arguing that, as Indian Muhammadans claim political importance over, and look down upon, Hindus—owing to the existence of Islamic kingdoms abroad, especially of Turkey—every Hindu who feels for his community ought to wish for the extinction of the Ottoman Empire. It is, however, a matter for thankfulness that the number of such narrow-minded Hindus is very small, and that prominent and influential Hindus, as well as Parsi leaders, in all parts of the country, regard any injury to the Turks in the light of damage to the importance and greatness of the entire East.

The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 30th October 1912, says that the European Powers wish to crush the Turks, but that even a combination of all of them cannot work the slightest injury to the latter. The Turks have the sympathy of crores of Arabs, and indeed of all fair-minded persons in both Asia and Europe; while the entire East is willing to render them help and support. Every one in India, and in Muslim countries in particular, is rendering help; and even Hindus in this country are subscribing towards the Turkish Relief Fund. There exists disunion between the followers of Islam and Hinduism, but being neighbours, the two communities become one on occasions like the present. It is to be hoped that the British Government also will do all it can for Turkey. In conclusion, the paper asserts that the time has come when Muhammadans and Hindus will become one and learn to help each other.

Writing under the heading "Muhammadans themselves are to blame,' the Hindu (Lahore), of the 2nd November 1912, says that some Muslim papers disapprove of the attitude of their Hindu contemporaries towards Turkey. The fact of the matter is that, since Muhammadans favour a separatist policy and insult Hindus by claiming importance over them, the latter also feel compelled to think only of themselves. The Prophet's followers themselves are therefore to blame for the feelings of the Hindus and their papers. It is strange, indeed, that they should expect Hindus to sympathise with distant co-religionists of the Muhammadans, when these Muhammadans themselves humiliate their very neighbours (Hindus), insult their religious feelings and traditions, and cause them offence in a thousand ways.

The Powers and the Balkan war.

7. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 8th November 1912:—

"The request of the Porte that the Powers should prevail on the allies to a cessation of hostilities or a declaration of truce pending the negotiations for peace has been rejected. There is nothing to be said against this course in the abstract. In a war the winner is entitled to the fruits of victory and to dictate his own terms for the imposition of peace. But neutrals are concerned in the maintenance of the balance of power and the prevention of the undue aggression of any single Power. Thus when Napoleon became the scourge of Europe, all the Powers combined to crush him. France and England made common cause against Russia in the Crimea. In the present war if the circumstances had been reversed and the allies had been defeated and Turkey demanded annexation of the Balkan States, the Powers would have intervened to prevent the undue preponderance of the power of Turkey. In the war between Japan and China the latter was defeated and Japan seized Port Arthur, but three European Powers compelled Japan to abandon that naval base, which was calmly appropriated by Russia, which had not fired a shot in the war. Port Arthur passed to the possession of Japan only after the Russo-Japanese war when there was no longer any pretext for any other Power or combination of Powers to dispute the right of Japan to the main fruit of her glorious victory. If therefore the Powers wanted it, there would not be much difficulty in presuading the Balkan confederacy to declare a truce, but it is not the interest of the Powers to do so and Turkey cannot hope for any help in her dire distress. The allies will demand the complete independence of the Balkan States and they will get it. Whether they will proceed further and insist on a slice from the province of Thrace also remains to be seen, and probably the Powers may intervene at that stage. But it is useless to disguise the obvious fact, that the sympathies of the Powers are not with Turkey and she will not get much help from them in her present tribulation."

Christendom and Muslim kingdoms.

8. Writing under the heading "An eye-sore to Christian kingdoms," the Hindu (Lahore), of the 2nd November 1912, states that the impression is fast gaining ground among non-Christians that the Islamic States that still remain are a thorn in the side of Christian kingdoms. Two Christian preachers at Calcutta have of late been saying that the prophesy in the Bible about 'Christ's inevitable (atal) rule can be fulfilled only by the expulsion of the Turks from Europe.' The expression of such sentiments in India, containing as it does a very large number of Muhammadans, is palpably wrong and calculated to disturb the peace and injure the feelings of Musalmans. The paper also finds fault with the Prophet's followers in this country for trying to impart a religious colour to the Balkan War.

The Turco-Italian peace.

9. Writing under the heading "Peace is good," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 30th October 1912, says that the peace negotiations between Turkey and Italy have resulted in the bestowal of autonomy on Tripoli, and that the event cannot but prove beneficial for the Ottoman Empire, while it argues wisdom on the part of the Turkish authorities. Although, adds the paper, Turkey has had to conclude peace to enable herself to fight the Balkan confederacy, it is noteworthy that the Sultan will have, even after the nominal surrender of Tripoli, a very close connection with that country, which the Italians are not, moreover, likely ever to subjugate completely. Next it observes that the Balkan war has special importance for the Islamic world; it is no local affair, but partakes, rather, of the character of the Crusades waged in the 12th century. After contending that all the European powers, not excluding even England, are likely to be drawn into it, the Vakil remarks that the allies not only wish to secure independence for Macedonia and certain rights for the Christian subjects of Turkey, but that they are also after the Caliphate and the Islamic religion. They wish to drive the Turks out of Europe with the open or secret help of the Powers, and thereby to curtail the influence of the Caliphate, and even to end it both in Europe and in Asia. The Turks wish to save themselves and Islam from this ruin, and, in all probability, it is for this reason that they have, to some extent, left the Arabs (in Tripoli) at the mercy of Italy, and have resolved to devote all their energies to fighting in the Balkans.

10. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 5th November 1912 :—

Mr. Gokhale at Johannesburg.

"Speaking on the occasion of the public banquet at Johannesburg the Hon'ble Mr. G. K. Gokhale said he had experienced the greatest kindness in South Africa and had every facility given him for the study of the Indian question. He mentioned three principal difficulties in the settlement of this question, viz., the fear of Europeans being swamped, the fear of political institutions being affected, and trade competition. He recognised the seriousness of the first two difficulties and seemed to admit the necessity of giving 'reasonable assurances' to the South African Government on these points. 'Unless Europeans were, he said, 'able to feel that no more Indians would be allowed to enter, there would not be satisfaction. If that point were conceded, he hoped that Indians would be granted liberty. The third was a question of justice, pure and simple, for Indians in the country.' It is difficult to comment upon the meagre telegraphic summary proceeding from such a quarter as Reuter's. Nevertheless we confess our inability to reconcile Mr. Gokhale's two statements—'reasonable assurances' and 'no more Indians.' If the two are interchangeable, that is to say, if the rights of British Indians are proposed to be abandoned in order to procure justice for existing settlers, we would suggest the return of every Indian from South Africa. The public discontent will then gain in strength and volume, and we can prevail upon the Government to retaliate effectively against South Africa. The spectacle of one part of the Empire erecting embargos against another is not very pleasing, and it is none of our choosing. We are taught to do so, and in fact we are driven to it in self-interest. The fears of South Africa being swamped and its political institutions being affected are greatly exaggerated. We are willing to make reasonable concessions, but we consider that British citizenship should be interpreted alike for Indians and Europeans. King Edward has styled that Indians are British citizens and not merely British subjects. Consistently with the language employed by the Sovereign in his proclamation we should have the rights of British citizenship. Indians should, and we are confident they would, protest with all the emphasis they command against the attempts now made to whittle down the language of the proclamation and reduce us to the status of political Pariahs."

11. Writing under the heading "British Troops for Persia," the Observer (Lahore), of 6th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

England and Persia.

"Telegraphic messages from Bombay published in the Anglo-Indian journals announce the approaching departure of some Indian troops for Persia. It is not explained whether these soldiers will relieve those who form the consular guard for the British Consulates or serve some other purpose. We feel it our duty to point out that apprehension is expressed in some quarters that, now that the weakness of Turkey, the principal Muslim Power, has been revealed, the European Powers may have decided to destroy the independence of Persia and Afghanistan and bring all the lands of Muslims under Western control. We think there can be no reason for such fears, so far as the British Government is concerned. When our benign Government has at last succeeded in persuading Russia to withdraw her troops from Persia, it cannot send troops to occupy a part of Persia on its own account. Nor can there be any reason to doubt the sincerity of the British protestations in regard to the necessity of the maintenance of Afghanistan as a buffer State between India and Russia.

Indians in South Africa.

12. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 7th November 1912 :—

"The cordial reception which South African officials and Colonists have given to Mr. Gokhale has led some of our countrymen to form exaggerated expectations of the outcome of his visit to South Africa. We have already pointed out that, when the British Government and the Government of India have failed to influence materially the policy of the Union Government, we do not hope much from Mr. Gokhale's visit. But it would be a great gain, if the visit leads to a better understanding between the European Colonists and Indians. * * * * According to ordinary moral and legal standards Indians have as much claim as other subjects of the British Empire to go to all parts of the Empire. For the present, however, they do not demand unrestricted immigration into South Africa. What they demand is an equitable and just treatment for those who are already in that part of the Empire. Unless the Union Government are prepared to do this, it is plain that there can be no hope for a satisfactory solution of the South African problem."

(b)—Home.

13. Writing under the heading "Contradiction of a dangerous and sensational rumour," the Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 3rd November 1912, says that it was reported by a Madras Anglo-Indian paper, some time back, that the Nicholson Committee would recommend the replacement of 27 native regiments by 6 British battalions. This led certain German papers to criticise Jack Sepoy adversely; the example being followed by some of their English contemporaries especially the Manchester Guardian, which used grossly abusive and defamatory language towards native soldiers, particularly Sikhs. The writing in the Manchester Guardian was reproduced by the Canadian press, which made still more offensive comments on the same. Enquiries in well-informed quarters, however, have satisfied the Editor that the rumour referred to is wholly unfounded; while he has learnt from reliable official sources that Government reposes the fullest trust in its native forces and admires the warlike qualities of Sikhs. In conclusion, he asserts that Government is not likely to make the dangerous mistake of disbanding as many as 27 native regiments.

The Nicholson Committee.

Swaraj.

14. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 2nd November 1912, has a note headed "Experiments in Swaraj in India," in which it observes that Swaraj only means that "we should have the right of expressing our opinion about the administration of our country, and that due weight should be attached to this opinion." Experiments in such Swaraj have so far been made in Baroda, Rampur, etc., and no one can say that they have proved a failure. The Maharaja of Bikaner also recently granted Swaraj (parliament)* to his subjects, and the news has now been received that the example is going to be followed by the Cochin State. The success of such experiments is strengthening the belief that, if the British Government also were to confer Swaraj on its Indian subjects, it would not have to regret the step.

III.—Native States.

Hyderabad affairs.

15. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 26th October 1912, publishes a note headed "Hyderabad's freedom from bigotry." The State of Hyderabad, says the paper, treats all religions alike, sometimes it even seems to favour other religions at the expense of Muhammadans. For some time past the influence of Christians has been steadily on the increase in the State, with the result that educated Musalmans are gradually succumbing to it, and the religious condition of the Islamic population is becoming precarious. There are several reasons for the preferential treatment accorded to Christians, but the consequence is that Musalmans are being drawn towards Christianity and the spread of that religion is being helped forward by the State. In conclusion, the paper asks the Nizam's Government to treat Christians and Muhammadans alike.

Bikaner affairs.

16. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 30th October 1912, publishes a letter entitled "Muhammadans of the Bikaner State." The writer reports that the case in which an ox was injured at Charu some time back (vide paragraph 17, Selections No. 21) was finally disposed of in September last; one Muhammadan having been imprisoned for seven years and another sentenced to undergo imprisonment for one year and pay a fine of Rs. 500. After asking whether this is just, he states that it was ordered by the Maharaja in the first instance that Rs. 300 a month should be recovered from the Muhammadans of the place until the offenders had been arrested. After over Rs. 7,000 had been so realised and scores of (Muslim) families had left Charu through fear, factions were created among the ignorant local Muhammadans, with the result that two or three Musalmans were named (as the culprits) and feelings of enmity were caused among the Prophet's followers for ever. Next the writer complains that the men arrested have been convicted without a formal trial.

The paper also publishes another letter in which the writer complains that, on all occasions of joy in Bikaner, contributions are levied from all State subjects, including officials of all ranks. One-eighth of the pay received by every official, he adds, was deducted in connection with the present Maharaja's marriage 15 years ago, while a sum of Rs. 4-4-0 was ordered to be realised from every (other) State subject. After alleging that the arrears are being still recovered, he states that, while several sections of Hindus are exempted from the payment of these contributions, no class of the Prophet's followers is allowed this privilege. Next he reports that, on the occasion of the Maharaja's recent silver Jubilee, all big Sahukars and Mahajans, as also State officials getting more than Rs. 10 a month, were required to contribute to different funds. People have, moreover, to pay specified sums of money for the titles and honours conferred on them.

Jeypur affairs.

17. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 30th October 1912, reports that a correspondent writes to complain that the Muhammadans of Khetri, Jeypur State, have of late been subjected to diverse severities. Hundreds of them have been dismissed from the (State) service, while not a few have been thrown into jail on different pretexts. Nor is this all. The (local) officers try cases in mosques, a course which seriously inconveniences Muhammadans in their prayers.

Baroda and Social Legislation.

18. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 2nd November 1912 :—

"Baroda is indeed an up-to-date State. It has a Legislative Council where, at the last meeting, one of the elected members introduced a 'Bill for the Prevention of Caste Tyranny.' It would be worth knowing what wonderful provisions the Bill contained, but there was a vehement discussion, at the end of which the member withdrew the Bill on hearing that the Government would do something on the lines desired. This is the first time we hear of legislation concerning castes. Truly legislation is a powerful and much used weapon in this country. It is a nostrum for all defects due to want of educational zeal."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Muslim League and the Hindu Conference.

19. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 31st October 1912, says that the annual meeting of the Punjab Provincial Muslim League synchronised with the Delhi session of the Hindu Conference, but that the resolutions adopted at it were, with the exception of the one about the raising of the Chief Court's status, antagonistic to those passed by the Conference. After contrasting the two sets of resolutions, the paper asks how any one can say in these circumstances that Hindus and Muhammadans will become one in a short time.

The Hindus of Lahore.

20. Writing in the Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 31st October 1912, under the heading "Banka Dyal's letter to the inhabitants of Jhang," the Editor says that party feeling is rampant among the Hindus of Lahore; that every one of the various factions claims that it alone consists of true workers; but, as a matter of fact, all of them consist of selfish people, who appeal to public sympathy in order to gain their personal ends. The pleaders and professional men also pose as public leaders from selfish motives, and a certain book-seller (the reference is to Pindi Das) refers to his imprisonment simply with a view to increasing the sale of his books. There are, strictly speaking, no (Hindu) leaders in the Punjab; otherwise, the Hindu community would not be in its present unsatisfactory condition. There is also no (Hindu) public worker in Lahore; while in view of the coming elections, the local Hindus have formed themselves into two parties, led by Lala Lajpat Rai on the one side and Lala Shadi Lal on the other.

The Fourth Hindu Conference.

21. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of 1st November 1912 :—

" * * * Lala Shadi Lal is reported to have declared on more occasions than one that he is a Sikh, but we notice that in reviewing the past history of Delhi he admiringly remembered Yuthishtra, the founder of Indra Prastha, even Prithwi Rai and the Moghal Emperors, but he had not a word to say about the martyrdom of Sri Guru Tegh Bahadur Sahib, the epoch-making event that has lent virility and nobility to the people of this Province. In the previous Conferences, the advocacy of the Punjabi language figured prominently in Presidential addresses, but this time not the slightest reference was made to its advancement and literature, though it formed a part even this time of the Provisional List of subjects to be discussed at the Conference. Praises of Hindi have been sung. Hindu Shastras have been extolled; but Punjabi, the mother-tongue of the people of the Punjab, that enshrines the matchless spiritual teachings of the Sikh Gurus and the memories of the innumerable Sikh heroes and martyrs has not been even referred to. Evidently to Hon'ble Lala Shadi Lal there is very little inspiration in Sikh history. But, in this studied disregard of the remarkable part Sikhism has played in the history of the Province, he does not stand alone. He only reflects the views of the aggressive Pan-Hindu fraternity here that goes to Rajputana and Maharashtra in search of illustrations for bravery and valour or alludes to the deeds of the mythological heroes of Ramayana and Mahabharatha, but fails to see anything ennobling or edifying in what many a Sikh martyr and hero have accomplished nearer home and in less distant past. The more we think of this studied and unholy effort to mis-interpret and pervert history the more deeply we feel pained at this mental atrophy of our Hindu friends and we regret to have to say that, if better counsels do not prevail in the council chambers of Pan-Hinduism, the relations between Sikhs and Hindus in this Province will become less and less cordial as time goes on, a consummation which every true patriot cannot think of with a feeling of quietude. The clientele of Lala Shadi Lal are loud in their denunciations of our policy and remember us by such names as Separatists, Tat Khalsas and so forth. While following a policy of absolute exclusiveness they take pleasure in singing the songs of united Bharat. But their Bharat is Bharat inhabited by Hindus exclusively. Musalmans and Christians, even Sikhs, have no place in it. Talking of representation on the Provincial Legislative Council the Hon'ble Lala Ji said 'On the Provincial Council as against seven Muhammadans there are altogether five Hindus, two of them being Sikh gentlemen.' The italics are ours. The admission that Sikhs cannot represent Hindus and vice versâ Hindus cannot represent Sikhs serves to a great extent in clearing the mist of political misconceptions that has darkened our path and hampered our march onward as a community with distinct traditions and distinct ideals. Our friends can now no longer find fault with our calling ourselves Sikhs and nothing more.

"Leaving aside these observations on sectional Politics we repeat that we regard the address as a master-piece of sagacity and breadth of view. The criticism of men and measures was bold and straightforward. There is not one serious problem that concerns the development of the community that has not been handled in a skilful manner. Our friends must have irresistibly contrasted the success of their annual gathering with Hon'ble Lala Shadi Lal as their President with that of the one over which His Holiness Baba Gurbakhsh Singh Bedi had the honour to preside. We are glad our friends appear to have lost faith in the magic wand of Bhagat Ishwar Das and his ilk. Their doings are now more straightforward and therefore they command our respect, however divergent may be our views on public affairs."

Unity between Hindus and Muhammadans.

22. The Tribune (Lahore), of 5th November 1912, publishes the following under the heading "Hindus and Muhammadans":—

"Mirza Sami-ullah Beg, of Lucknow, who is a well-known Muhammadan leader of advanced views, has contributed to an Allahabad journal a thoughtful article on the prospects of unity between Hindus and Muhammadans. The Mirza Sahib is one of those Indians who are firm believers in the doctrine of the identity of Hindu and Muhammadan interests. He already sees visible signs of the approaching rapprochement among Hindus and Muhammadans. The Muhammadan, he believes, will ere long begin to see that co-operation with Hindus will bring more advantages to him in the long run and the Hindu will not take long in seeing that, if progress on certain lines is to be ensured, it will not be desirable to keep 7 crores of the population of India ignorant or backward. An attitude of mutual sympathy and good understanding is what both Hindus and Muhammadans should strive their best to adopt. He says 'there is no doubt that the Muhammadans have been keeping a jealous and strict watch over their economic and social developments as a separate body, but, if serious thought be given to the question, it only amounts to the preparation of another portion of the same ground and is perhaps the only feasible way of doing it to-day.' Mirza Sami-ulla Beg clinches his argument by saying, 'there is still a field for co-operation all round. After, say, 10 years the National Congress and the Muslim League will both sing the same song, though in different tunes. Even now three-fourths of the resolutions of the Muslim League are copied from the annual reports of the National Congress.' We have always held that the operation of the causes which at present divide Hindus and Muhammadans is purely temporary, and that in course of time, as education progresses among the Muhammadans, the platforms of the Muslim League and the National Congress are bound to draw nearer to each other. The men and the public bodies that at present in their own interests keep up the existing difference between the two communities are bound to go under, and wiser counsels are sure to prevail. The interest of the two communities are indissolubly bound up, and those who regard them as separate and apart, labour under a great mistake. The foresight of the patriotic men in both communities has already begun to perceive it."

VI.—Legislation.

The Punjab Pre-emption Bill.

23. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 2nd November 1912 :—

"* * * The main object of the present Pre-emption Act is to strengthen and supplement the provisions of the Land Alienation Act for the prevention of purchase of agricultural land by non-agricultural tribes, and regard for the feelings of the people played only a subsidiary part. It is perhaps at present a counsel of perfection to urge before the Government the repeal either of the Pre-emption Act or of the Land Alienation Act. The Government, we know, are too firmly wedded to their principle of prevention of land purchase by non-agricultural tribes, and we have seen that the opinion of even the Chief Court has had no effect on it. We therefore make no drastic proposal. We are willing to concede that the new Bill should not be hostile in spirit and appearance to the cherished policy of the Government, however much our opinion may differ in respect of such policy of restriction on the right of sale. But we do insist that pre-emption should not be allowed to grow, as it has done, out of proportion to the limits recognised by custom or Muhammadan law. We want that pre-emption should be retained within the boundary line defined by Mr. Justice Powell. To use the words of the Lieutenant-Governor in his review of the Civil Justice Administration Report, let pre-emption remain a device by which in villages agnatic relations may retain agricultural land in the family and by which house-holders in towns may endeavour to maintain the institution of the purdah. But it should not be allowed to grow further. We shall make our meaning clear by a reference to the wording of the Bill. Section 14 of the new Bill runs as follows :—

"'Subject to the provisions of section 14, the right of pre-emption in respect of agricultural land and village immoveable property shall vest —

"'(a) Where the sale is by a sole owner or occupancy tenant, or, in the case of land or property jointly owned or held, is by all the co-sharers jointly, in the persons in order of succession, who but for such sale would be entitled, on the death of the vendor or vendors, to inherit the land or property sold.

"'(b) Where the sale is of a share out of the joint land or property and is not made by all the co-sharers jointly—

"firstly, in the lineal descendants of the vendor in the male line in order of succession;

"secondly, in the co-sharers, if any, who are agnates in order of succession.

"There are two other provisions to clause (b) of section 14, and several sub-divisions in clause (c) of the same section. We would omit them all, as they give an arbitrary and artificial extension to the right of pre-emption in a manner unknown to custom or to the people. We do not for a moment see why distant collaterals or co-sharers or khewatdars or pattidars or mere occupancy tenants should have any right of pre-emption. There exists absolutely no feeling in the province in favour of the pre-emption right of co-sharers or pattidars or any of these folks. It has been created artificially by law and it has been availed of by unscrupulous pre-emptors, who have neither the desire nor means to pre-empt, merely for the purpose of black-mailing the bonâ fide purchaser for value. A legislative measure, which allows to bogus pre-emptors advantage ground wherefrom to harass purchasers for full value stands self-condemned and the least that the Government can do for the relief of the latter is to do away with the vexatious provisions, which confer right of pre-emption to men no way connected by blood with the original owner. As it is, these provisions operate as a punitive measure against the honest purchaser, who is compelled in many cases to grease the palm of the bogus pre-emptors.

"We have already observed the change made in the Bill by restricting pre-emption of agricultural land only to cases where the vendor happens to be a member of an agricultural tribe. Non-agricultural tribes, viz., those who do not come under the schedule will therefore be at liberty to purchase lands sold by non-agricultural tribes and there will be no sword of Damocles hanging over them in the shape of a right of pre-emption by others. We have already suggested the deletion of the words 'in the same group' in section 14 of the Bill and also of section 29. It is true that they are in conformity with the provisions of the Land Alienation Act, but there is no obligation to retain them in either Act. Another amendment we do strongly insist is the limiting of the pre-emption right, as we have already said, to the lineal descendants and co-sharer agnates in cases of villages and to contiguous neighbours in such sub-divisions of towns only where the custom already exists.

"Let us now sum up the improvements. First, membership of an agricultural tribe will, in cases of sale of non-agricultural lands, in itself no more create any special preferential right. Secondly, the anomaly in exempting shops, serais, mosques and dharamsalas in towns only and not in villages has been removed, the new Bill exempting such buildings both in towns and villages. Thirdly, section 8 (2) of the new Bill has been so amplified as to allow a general notification exempting all agricultural land sold in good faith for industrial, commercial or residential objects. The rest of the changes relate to matters of form and draftmanship and need not be detailed here. The Bill will still remain a sore grievance with the non-notified tribes and it is with a view to removal of some of their grievances consistently with due regard to the policy of the Bill that we have made the foregoing suggestions."

The Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces and the Taluqdars of Oudh.

24. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 3rd November 1912 :—

"We cannot congratulate Sir James Meston on the way he has solved the difficulty which had arisen in connection with the election of a member to the United Provinces Legislative Council by the British Indian Association of Lucknow. There were two candidates for the seat, namely, the Hon'ble Raja Partab Bahadur Singh, C.I.E., and the Hon'ble Raja Rampal Singh, C.I.E., and, it appears from the comments made by the Advocate, that there was some danger of dissensions among the Taluqdars of Oudh over the contest. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor saw this, and in the words of our Lucknow contemporary: 'He asked Raja Rampal Singh whether he would agree to place the matter in the hands of a Committee which would decide the question as to who should be unanimously sent to the Council. Raja Partab Bahadur Singh was also called in. He also agreed to abide by the decision of the Committee.' On this a sub-committee was appointed, consisting of the Hon'ble Raja Sir Muhammad Ali Muhammad Khan, K.C.I.E., of Mahmudabad, the Hon'ble Raja Sir Muhammad Tassadduk Rasul Khan, K C.S.I., of Jahangirabad, the Thakur Sahib of Kasmanda, the Rana of Khajurgaon, the Rajas of Mankapur, Amethi, Pirpur Karwar and Salempore, and the Hon'ble Mr. Burn, the Chief Secretary to the Local Government, with the Hon'ble Mr. Lovett, Commissioner of Lucknow, as President. 'The Committee was to go through the correspondence' says our Lucknow contemporary, 'which passed between the two Rajas, to consider the question as to which of the two should be sent to the Council and if necessary to recommend a third person. The Committee met on Thursday at the Commissioner's bungalow and after some discussion came to the conclusion that a third person should be selected and the choice fell on Rana Sir Sheoraj Singh of Khajurgaon.'

"The result of the action taken by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces has been, practically speaking, to deprive the British Indian Association of Lucknow of the privilege of electing a Member for the Provincial Council for the next term. The facts disclosed by our esteemed contemporary, the Advocate, do not prove that Sir James Meston had any the least justification for interfering in the matter. His Honour's action can be supported only if it is agreed that it is undesirable that two candidates should contest a seat. But no reasonable man would advance such an absurd theory in defence of Sir James Meston's unwise intervention. As our Lucknow contemporary very appropriately remarks, 'unless the Taluqdars are to be made bereft of the privilege conferred on the body of sending members to the Provincial and Imperial Councils, and if they are to make the best selections from their body, it will be impossible in future to elect members with perfect unanimity.' The way in which official pressure was put on the Taluqdars appears to us to be the most indefensible part of the whole transaction. If some less exalted officer had interfered in any election in a similar way we can very well imagine what resentment and dissatisfaction it would have caused among the people. The officials, high or low, should not, we think, be allowed to interfere in elections and thereby hamper the fair choice of candidates by electors. Those officers who have to work as attesting and returning officers should not go an inch beyond what their formal duties require them to do. If the Taluqdars of Qudh wanted to settle the differences between the two rival candidates amicably the proper thing for the British Indian Association would have been to appoint a sub-committee from among themselves. We do not understand why it should have been thought necessary to appoint the Chief Secretary of the Local Government as a member of the sub-committee and the Commissioner of Lucknow as its Chairman. It very plainly shows that official pressure was required to bring about the settlement. The whole transaction brings discredit on Sir James Meston's Government and we very much regret His Honour should have adopted such an extraordinary and unwise course."

The Punjab Hindu Sabha and Council Elections.

25. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 5th November 1912 :—

"* * * We join the Hindu Sabha in its hope that Mr. Sinha's constituency will renew its confidence in him, so that he might continue to serve the Punjab and the North-West Frontier Province. As regards Mr. Shadi Lal we refrain from expressing any opinion. Those who have leisure and inclination to examine the pages of the Council proceedings can judge his work for themselves. Before long the Senate of the University will have to judge his work and its judgment will certainly be accepted by the public. The Hindu Sabha ought to be able to settle the disputes of rival candidates for Council elections in the Punjab. It should make a thoughtful, judicious and practical appeal to Hindu voters to avoid the disastrous policy of the last elections and keep in mind the value of compromise for the attainment of the ultimate object of Hindu union, Hindu strength and Hindu triumph. Parallel lines will never meet and disunion will end in disaster and death. Constructive work is always slow and impediments have to be overcome. Wise men and men of foresight ought to welcome almost any proposal which will throw a bridge over the wide gulf between one Hindu brother and another. It matters little who has his innings first, so long as all are agreed that each should have his innings. No less an authority than Sir P. C. Chatterjee is strongly of opinion that every effort should be made to effect a compromise and settle the nomination of candidates by means of arbitration on the lines proposed and accepted at Delhi. The common interests of the community are large and of vital importance; and mutual dissensions should not be allowed to imperil them."

Communal representation in the Punjab Council.

26. Writing under the heading 'Council Elections in the Punjab,' the Tribune (Lahore), of 8th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"* * * If the Hindus do not profit by their experience and insist on disputing among themselves and more than one Hindu is opposed to a single Muhammadan in a single constituency, the Hindus will have themselves to thank if they are defeated all along the line and do not succeed in securing even one out of the six seats. From what we can judge, the forthcoming elections will be treated as a great opportunity for settling old scores and repaying old grudges. Hindus will oppose one another not because they think they have a chance of securing a majority of votes, but because they hope to divide the votes of their rivals. The consideration that this will enable the solitary Muhammadan candidate to obtain a majority of votes does not weigh with them at all. As the Indian saying goes, it is a case of cutting of one's own nose to spite an enemy or a rival. If therefore all seats are lost by the Hindus owing to internal dissensions or mutual jealousies, they will have themselves to thank for it and will not be entitled either to make a grievance of their defeat or to claim public sympathy."

The Punjab and the Imperial Legislative Councils.

27. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912 :—

"Let us take the Muhammedan electorate first. In Bombay the Muhammadan member for the Imperial Council is elected by the Muhammadan non-officials on the local Legislative Council. In Madras he is elected by Muhammadan landowners having income of not less than Rs. 3,000 per annum, or by those who pay an income tax on Rs. 6,000 a year, or by those who are members of the local Provincial Council, or those who are Fellows of Madras University or holders of certain titles. In other provinces the qualifications of Muhammadan voters are practically the same as possessed by the Madras Muhammadans, the only difference being a variation in property qualifications to suit the circumstances of each locality. In the United Provinces in addition to the men of above qualifications the trustees of the Aligarh College, Muhammadan Assistant-Collectors, Muhammadan Honorary Magistrates and Honorary Munsiffs also possess the franchise. In the Punjab, however, the matter stands on a different footing. Here the right of election is not given. Their interests are considered to be best served by a nominee of the Government. The representatives of the Punjab Muhammadans in the Imperial Council need possess no qualifications. On the other hand we find that the greatest force of the Muhammadans is to be found in the Punjab, for they constitute 56 per cent. of the total population of the province. The theory of 'political importance' finds its greatest support in this province. The Punjab Muhammadans are considered to be the most advanced among their community in the country. The separatist policy has been pushed to the extreme in this province, and yet, notwithstanding all this, the Government thinks the Punjab Muhammadans are unfit to elect a member for the Imperial Council. Could not the Muhammadan Fellows of the Punjab University, the Muhammadan members of the Provincial Council, and the Muhammadan title-holders of the province be entrusted with this simple task? * * * *

"The landed interests of Bombay in the Imperial Council are represented by a member elected by the Jagirdars and Zamindars of Sindh and Sardars of Gujrat and Deccan. In Bengal, Madras, United Provinces, East Bengal and Central Provinces property qualification, varying in each province to suit local circumstances, has been fixed. In Oudh the British Indian Association of Taluqdars are given the franchise. But in the Punjab the Government nominates a member first from the Northern Punjab and the next time from the Southern Punjab and so on alternatively. The landowners of this province are considered unfit to possess the right of election. * * * *

"As regards representation of commerce according to the present rules three seats are allotted for them, viz., two for European section and one for Indians. Here again the Punjab is to be found nowhere. In European commerce only the Chambers of Commerce in Calcutta and Bombay are represented. In Indian Commerce only Bombay is represented. Why should not the other provinces share in the privilege of possessing this franchise? Why should not the Chambers of Commerce in Madras, Burma, Upper India, Karachi and Punjab join in the election of a member to represent their interests? Moreover why should European commerce possess two members as against one for Indian commerce? If it be considered that more than three seats cannot be allotted to commerce then let the European commerce possess two members and Indian commerce one member for the first term, and the Indian commerce two members and European commerce one member for the second term, and so on alternately. Then, in order to make representation real, let the franchise be extended. Let all the different Chambers of Commerce in Burma, Bengal, Madras, Bombay, Karachi, Upper India and the Punjab unite and vote together to elect a member for representing European commerce. In the same way let the Indian associations in several provinces join together for the purpose of representing their interests in the Council. Such an arrangement will make representation real and effective. In that case the Punjab will have no grievance with respect to the representation of her commerce in the Imperial Council. The Indian commerce is at present suffering from another disability. At present Indian commerce is represented in the Imperial Council only by a nominee of the Government. When the right of election has been granted to European commerce fairness and justice demand that the same privilege be extended to Indian commerce. There is no reason why the two sections of commerce in the country be treated differently.

As regards the representation of special minorities, the Punjab again has a grievance to urge. There are four seats available to represent special minorities. Last time one was given to the Budhists, one to Indian Christians, one to Parsees and one to Sikhs. We as Punjabees are concerned only with the representation of the Sikhs. Our last representative, if I mistake not, was the Kanwar Sahib of Patiala. Now he was a nominee of the Government. It is just possible the Sikhs may not consider him to be their leader. If that be so, then the representation of the Sikhs is a mere farce, and the original object of the Government to secure to the people proper representation in the Council would be defeated. Could not the Sikh graduates resident in India, the trustees of the Khalsa College, Amritsar, the Sikh members of the Legislative Council, the Sikh Honorary Magistrates and Honorary Munsifs and the Sikh title-holders, be given the right to elect a member for the Imperial Council? This has been done in the case of United Provinces Muhammadans. The principle ought to be applied in the case of the Sikhs also."

Legislative Council in Assam.

28. Writing under the heading 'Is the Punjab inferior to Assam?' the Panjabee (Lahore), of 7th November, makes the following remarks :—

"The newly-constituted Legislative Council in Assam has 25 members, 11 of whom will be elected by the people. They include three representatives from the tea-planters who form the most important community economically. It will be remembered that Assam is in every respect behind the Punjab in progress, and its 6 million population is almost rural. It has a nominal roll of 19 towns, the highest of which is much smaller than Bhera, Jhelum or Chiniot. Nevertheless it has 11 members out of 25 in the newly-constituted Councils, elected by five different groups of people, whereas the Punjab had the unique honour of returning only 5 out of 26 and was recently given the doubtful privilege of electing 3 more from the mostly nominated group of District Board members. We hope the Government will consider the injustice of treating the Punjab with the affections due to a step-daughter. In what sense are we to regard Assam as being senior to the Punjab? Is it intellectually superior or historically more important? Are the population in any higher stage of refinement and culture, or is the administration more up-to-date? Is it industrially or commercially ahead of the Punjab? In area Assam is only two-thirds of the Punjab. Every province may get its due some day, but it seems the Punjab must take the last place among the provinces for rights and privileges, but the first to fight for all!"

VII.—General Administration.

(d)—Education.

The Khalsa College.

29. One Bhagat Lakshman Singh, Honorary Member of the Council, contributes the following to the Tribune (Lahore), of 2nd November 1912 :—

"I was about 25 years old when the Khalsa College movement was launched by a small batch of noble-handed (sic.) Sikhs under the leadership of the late Sir Sirdar Attar Singh of Bhadaur. The Sirdar was the most public spiritual Sikh chief of his time. His influence with the British rulers was very great. His chief follower was the devoted, selfless and level-headed worker, the late Bhai Gurmukh Singh, father of the Singh Sabha movement and sponsor of the Sikh renaissance. He lived for the Guru and the Panth alone. If his heart beat, it was for the Sikhs. If he talked, it was for the Sikhs. If he felt, it was for the Sikhs. Born of humble parents and stationed low in life he possessed a marvellous influence over his co-religionists of all classes. British officials of all departments treated him with such a great consideration, that envy and jealousy won him the appellation of a Government spy. Such was the man whose activities resulted in the formation of the Khalsa Diwan, Lahore, the pioneer of the present Sikh revival, and in the conception and inauguration of the Khalsa College movement. The Sikhs were very backward then. To launch a scheme for the education of the Sikhs on the lines of the D-A. V. College, the only sound manner that can catch popular fancy, was next to impossible. The Government of the day, moreover, was a pro-Sikh Government. Sir James Broadwood Lyall, the then Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, felt for the Sikhs, as no other British rulers, with the exception of course of Sir Charles Rivaz, has to my mind, done before or after him. Lord Roberts, the prince of British chivalry, who had personally witnessed the bravery of the Sikhs in his war on the frontier, felt an admiration for them and wished to do them a good turn. The Viceroy, Lord Lansdowne, was known to be not unwilling to listen to a proposal calculated to advance the Sikhs. All these circumstances combined to encourage the Sikh workers in starting a collegiate institution for their community at Lahore under Government patronage. No sooner the desire was expressed, influential support was promised. The Sikh States advanced a donation of about five or six lacs of rupees and the establishment of a first class college for the Sikhs was assured. But a powerful and hostile agitation was set on foot in Rawalpindi. Men like the venerable Baba Khem Singh Bedi, and Rai Bahadur Sirdar Surjan Singh were made the leaders of conservative Sikhs. The cry of the orthodox Sikhism in danger was raised. A faction was formed in Amritsar and on its behalf the claim was raised that the College should be located in it, for its being the chief seat of Sikh pilgrimage. The promoters of the movement wanted its location in Lahore, the centre of national activity. The Government also thought so; but the hostile attitude of Baba Khem Singh Bedi, afterwards Hon'ble Sir Baba Khem Singh Bedi, compelled Sir James Lyall, much against his wishes, to decide in favour of Amritsar. The Sikh patriots felt sorely disappointed. England friends like the late Sir William Rattigan, and Colonel Halroyd, and Mr. William Bell, the first energetic and enthusiastic Secretary of the movement, were disheartened and though, for years afterwards, they continued to work for the College with a zeal and earnestness that wrested admiration from me and many others of my colleagues in the College Council, it is too much to suppose they could take as much interest in the institution at Amritsar as they could have done had it been located in Lahore. A great blow was thus unwittingly struck by our own kith and kin. The institution then became a prey of the rival Lahore and Amritsar factions. The constitution was so ill-conceived and badly worked out, that in the course of time it contained among its members mostly men who had no right to be there. They were mostly uneducated. No member was required to contribute anything towards the expenses of the College monthly or annually. The State, which found funds for running the College, and the Government, under whose auspices the project was started, were poorly represented on the Council. And, what was still worse, on the Council were men who were not only not Sikhs, they were actually believers of antagonistic creeds, actively engaged in perverting Sikhs and Sikhism whom we found very difficult to wean off. This is what made me write the following note in the Khalsa of May 16, 1900, which I then edited:—'So the Khalsa College is a State College, with this difference that a regularly constituted State College is well organized and well managed, while the Khalsa College is hardly organized and badly managed. In a State College the governing body consists of men of sound learning and mature experience, while in the Khalsa College the governing body consists of gentlemen who though otherwise estimable, are with a few honourable exceptions, not competent to grapple with the educational problem, and this is the reason why the expectations that were formed at the time its foundation was laid have not been realised. We do not know who it was that framed the Articles of Association of the College and who were the members who allowed these Articles to be made into law; but this much we can say that the rule conferring the right of membership for life-time or whomsoever it may please the Council is greatly responsible for making the institution a hindrance rather than a help to our educational advancement. We consider the College to be a hindrance in our way; because the unthinking mob, that has from the nature of things come to have a voice in the conduct of public affairs, is mentally so constituted that it rests contented with the name of a thing and never cares to find out and profit by the reality. When this time last year we called upon Doctor Oman to persuade him to withdraw his resignation of the Principalship of the College he complained that he was hampered in every little thing that he did and that he looked for help in vain from the Council.....' Thirteen years have elapsed since when I made these observations. The state of things complained of can no longer exist. The revised constitutions that comes up before the meeting of the College to be held on the 15th instant is a great step in advance. Persistent rumours of a conflicting nature were being circulated. Thanks to the courtesy of some friends, I have just been furnished with a copy of the proposed revisions in the constitution.

"A hasty perusal has convinced me that there will be a cause for rejoicing if the changes now proposed became law. The most important change is the addition of the following new rule (Rule 32) to the constitution:—'The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab shall have power, after fully and carefully considering any representation made by the Council or the Committee, to suspend the rules and to direct the Committee to take such action as the special circumstances may appear to demand, and it shall thereupon be binding upon the Committee to take such action.' This rule may appear to some as inaugurating a very reactionary policy on the part of the Government with reference to the Sikhs; I do not take this view. Bravery alone feels any deference for bravery. By instinct and tradition the British officials and non-officials will feel for the Sikhs as no other community in the Punjab has done. If disputes arise, as they must sometimes, an arbiter is needed. And which arbiter can be more safely relied upon than the head of the Province who, having the greatest stake in the country, will calmly deliberate on the matters under dispute before pronouncing his judgment. If, perchance, he errs, his successor will conscientiously endeavour to rectify the mistake made if he cares to earn a name for himself as a sound administrator. There is no 'settled fact' in British polity. The Britishers believe in development. Their direct association with the only collegiate institution we possess ought to be a Godsend to us. It is absurd to suppose that a nation that has produced large-hearted statesmen of the type of Lord Macaulay, Lord William Bentinck, Lord Canning, Lord Ripon, our present Viceroy Lord Hardinge, Mr. Montague and our beloved King Emperor, George V, the most exalted of them all, will, in our case, thwart our efforts to avail ourselves of the blessings vouchsafed to us under Pax Brittanica. Why not speak of our present Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Louis Dane? How can we sufficiently repay our debt of gratitude to him for his influential support in the passing of the Anand Marriage Act? He may not have satisfied our expectations in other respects. But who has pressed for anything with requisite persistency. I believe in 'knock and you will find.' If our people show that they are in earnest and deserve what they ask for, there is no reason why they should fail where others succeed.

"We may have on rare occasions unsympathetic and short-sighted men at the helm of affairs in this country; but has not Great Britain had a King John as her ruler? No people have always received unmixed blessings. It is too much for us to expect a different treatment.

"Another change of vital importance is the addition of the following clauses to rule 25:—

"'(iv) The Principal shall be ex-officio President of all associations and committees within the institution, except the religious Committee.

"(v) No scholarship shall be given except with the approval of the Principal.'

"These rules will considerably strengthen the hands of the Principal in securing unflinching loyalty to himself and the institution under his charge of his students and his staff. An educational institution the Principal of which has not a freehand in dealing with matters of internal economy fails in its purpose. If a Principal makes himself unpopular, the Government with the authority which it is now proposed to vest in it will not find it difficult to turn him out. My idea is that a Principal who cares for his pay and prospects will not knowingly court unpopularity.

"The abolition of the office of Honorary Secretary appears to me to be a very salutary rule. Honorary Secretaries, generally, come to have lofty airs. As a reward for their honorary services they lord over the committees of which they are Secretaries. They resent free criticism of their work. The committees out of deference to them connive at many things of which they would have otherwise taken a serious notice.

"In the proposed constitution I do not read anywhere, as has been stated in the columns of the Tribune, that the paid Secretary shall work as Secretary of the Principal. A serious change is, however, contemplated inasmuch as after the expiration of 3 years from now the number of representatives from the British districts shall be reduced from twenty-six to thirteen. This, I deferentially submit, appears a retrograde move. It is true Sikhs of the British districts have hitherto contributed very little for the up-keep of the College, but the serious reduction of their strength on the Council is hardly the proper remedy. The levying of admission fees and monthly fees would have very well served the purpose.

"There is another serious omission in the proposed rules. There is no provision in them for the adequate representation of the educated Sikhs of British districts who are engaged in the furtherance of the educational status of the community. I humbly think nobody will be more loyal than they to the Khalsa College and to the Government. They have all a stake in the country. They receive considerable aid from Government to which their interests are indissolubly bound. Uneducated men on the managing committees of educational institutions are mere figureheads. They strengthen nobody's hands. They only succeed in making themselves a laughing stock of their people. Illiteracy does not necessarily connote loyalty and godliness. Fawning and cringing for selfish ends ought not to be mistaken for love and fidelity. In our matter-of-fact world those men count in the end who have the courage to say 'no' when need be, and who care more for general than for their own personal advancement at the sacrifice of their convictions.

"Provision for life membership has proved a curse for the College. From the proposed constitution it is not clear whether this extremely objectionable feature will be retained or abolished.

"I have no time to examine the constitution more closely. On the whole I think both the Government and the community deserve to be congratulated on the inauguration of the new era."

Duties of Indian citizenship.

30. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 2nd November 1912 :—

"One of the suggestions made at the meeting of the Madras University Senate the other day was the teaching of the duties of Indian citizenship. * * * It is not easy to say what the status of Indian citizens are outside India. Even in India the status varies from place to place and among different communities. The status of Hindus, and consequently their duties in the Punjab are certainly not the same as in Madras or Bengal. Yes these duties must be defined and tend to uniformity year by year. It would certainly be a wise resolve to give a course of lectures on the duties of citizenship, and we wish that the Panjab University took up the idea to begin with, having regard to the Frontier Province on one side and Delhi Enclave on the other."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Viceroy's State Entry into Delhi.

31. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 4th November 1912, publishes a letter from "M. B.," who suggests that the 21st and 23rd December next (the 22nd falls on Sunday) should be declared public holidays in the Punjab, to enable Government servants in this province to witness the Viceroy's State Entry into the new Capital.

The following on the same subject is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 2nd November 1912 :—

"The State entry into Delhi on the 23rd December is an important ceremonial occasion. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab formally gives over Delhi to the Viceroy and Governor-General, and officials and non-officials will take part in the Darbar. An elephant procession will take place, in which the Viceroy will be seated and this affords the most impressionable intimation to the people of the establishment of new Capital in Delhi. Non-officials will be invited to the Darbar. In former times when new Capitals were established, the people living there used to get certain concessions and gifts. But no such announcement is to be expected now. On the contrary, the people of Delhi have lost even the privilege of electing a member to the Legislative Council. They will probably look for benefits in other directions.

"Why Messrs. Brock are to be invited all the way from London to give an exhibition of fireworks in Delhi on the occasion of the Viceregal State entry is not clearly explained. Considerable criticism has appeared as to the extravagance of this step. But the Pioneer assures us that the fireworks will be on a modest scale and the public reports are exaggerated. One can understand the influences there are for great economy. But why were not Indian fireworks considered sufficient on an occasion and for a function chiefly intended to please the Indian public? It is whispered that Delhi will be more British in every detail than any Provincial head-quarters and it is not intended to be purely Indian."

Official corruption.

32. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 3rd November 1912 :—

"Verily the old world picture of the idyllic bliss of an Indian village is—at least in modern times—but a one-sided one, for no account is taken of the little afflictions to which the humblest subjects of the British Crown are so often subject. The picture is one of bright sunshine and merry children desporting themselves beneath the spreading pipal, with the village elders placidly smoking the common pipe of peace, and the women, young and old, gaily working at the well or cooking the family loaf. Let us turn the picture and inspect a few of the less satisfactory scenes of peasant life and let us realise that it is not all sunshine and that the cloud of despair not unfrequently flits across the scene of bucolic happiness.

"Let us accompany the herdsman with his herd of cattle or flock of sheep and goats to his mountain pasture. Ignorant shepherd, he cannot read the harsh prohibition half-erased by time and weather from the forbidding signboard, which signifies that thus far and no further may he go. Onward goes he, heedless, but the eyes of the law are all-seeing; it is not long before a Forest Ranger enquires his business and threatens him with the rigour of the law. Ignorance is pleaded in vain, entreaties are useless, and either the law or the Ranger must be satisfied. It is on the whole cheaper to appease the latter, and the sum necessary for this purpose is collected from the village elders in solemn assembly, and the transgressing herds are released. From this stage to a permanent arrangement with the Ranger by which the village herds are allowed to graze unmolested in Reserved Forests is but a step. Thus while Government, in the interests of forestry, pays a Ranger to exclude all animals from reserved areas, the villages affected pay him to allow free grazing, and the Ranger, with surprising success, manages to serve two masters, to the entire satisfaction of both. Such a state of affairs is indeed to be wondered at, but who that has had any experience of forest areas can deny that it obtains almost everywhere in all the nakedness which we have tried to expose above?

"Let us change the scene to a village in the plains near a large city at harvest time, and follow the progress of the village corn from the threshing floor to the city markets. Our peasant, on arrival at the city gate, finds his way blocked by a small office building, outside which stands a giant pair of scales, around which lounges the octroi clerk and his assistants. An unintelligible schedule graces the wall for the purpose of informing him as to the correct toll-charge leviable on his goods; the clerk informs him in more intelligible language what he has to pay and gives him a receipt for half the amount received, the amount which should have been levied. Ignorant peasant, he knows no better and pays, with a curse at the tyranny of towns, which appear to exist for the purpose of depriving him of as large a fraction as possible of the value of the produce of his land and labour.

"Let us turn to country life in a higher sphere and witness the arrival of a local potentate at one of the tahsil headquarter towns of the province. It is practically the duty—in some cases even a pleasurable duty—of the local gentry to visit our grandee for the purpose of paying their respects and discussing, if necessary, the local situation; but interposed between the visitor and the object of their visit is a crowd of underlings in the red garb of officialdom, commonly known as chaprassis, whose duty it is to attend to the convenience of visitors, announce their arrival and introduce them in order of arrival or precedence, as the case may be, to the officer sitting in state in tent or bungalow. Now visitors are expected on such occasions to make a donation to these underlings, and in proportion to the size of their gifts is the comfort which is accorded them while waiting. Moreover, the chaprassis of every district or many of them have reduced the whole system to simplicity by assessing all the gentry of their districts to fixed contributions. Any attempt on the part of a local notable to rebel against such impositions results in his not receiving a chair or such other convenience as might be accorded to a man in his position, and few are brave enough to attempt to break down the practice or even to complain of it to the only person capable of causing it to stop, namely, the local officer whose servants are the cause of their dissatisfaction. No doubt Lieutenant-Governors and Commissioners and others in high position are not cognisant of the trouble occasioned by their visits, but that scarcely affects the fact that their progress through a district is often the direct cause of much misery and trouble, not only to the local gentry referred to above, but also to the common herd, whose villages are ransacked for eggs, butter, milk, etc., intended not for their own tables but for those of their numerous following, which seldom or never pays for provisions consumed.

"The doings of the zaildars and patwaris employed by the Canal Department are perhaps too well known to require detailed notice here, but the pathetic reply of thousands of owners of canal irrigated land to the queries of the Canal Colonies Commission as to whether they would prefer to retain the canal or the revenue patwari, is worthy of special remark. We are left to surmise why the Commission failed to give due prominence to the attitude of the people in this matter or to recommend the change for which the people loudly cried. 'Both patwaris rob us' said they with one voice, 'each robs us in his own way; we don't mind which you abolish, but for heaven's sake abolish one. One is sufficient for us.'

"Let us follow the peasant from his rich squares in some canal-irrigated tract as he takes his string of laden camels to the railway whence he would send them to Karachi for export to the mighty markets of the world. Having bribed a zaildar for water, a patwari to record his matured area as less than it actually was, an octroi clerk to allow him a cheap entry into the town market, he proceeds to the railway station, confident that no more bribing has to be done, to despatch his waggon load to the seaport. Rudely is his meditation on his profits disturbed by the gruff demand of a stationmaster or a booking clerk for the customary gratuity without which no goods may leave that station until they have rotted in the rain and sun. Argument is useless and pay he must for the system is all but recognised by the department, which in spite of its glaring publicity and notoriety allows it to continue. Nay more, the very scale of salaries drawn by stationmasters and others engaged in this lucrative business, if compared with that drawn by petty clerks on the railway whose duties allow them no such opportunities, would seem to make it quite clear that these unrecognised sources of gain are not only tacitly countenanced but are actually to a very large extent taken into consideration in calculating the salaries of such persons. It is too well known to require emphasising that the most effective punishment for a stationmaster who has incurred departmental displeasure without sufficient cause to justify dismissal or reduction to a lower grade is to transfer him from a busy station which is a despatching centre for goods to a quiet wayside station which seldom sees a bag of grain. The corruption rampant in goods booking stations is so large a question and so wide-reaching in its effects that we have been content to indicate its nature rather than analyse it in detail. Such a task awaits some large Commission of the future and to that Commission we leave it to right the wrong which we have exposed."

Presents to officials.

33. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 2nd November 1912 :—

"The Amritsar Temperance Society gave 21 baskets of fruits to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, who was pleased to accept this profuse token of respect. People beyond the Punjab will feel more interested to know it is common to present 17, 21, 31, 51, 101, or 1,001 tokens of love and esteem to big people only and in one instance a Hindu rais,

I hear, formed a procession of presents laiden on mules and camels. He took no less than 121 or more big baskets of fruits, forming a long and gorgeous procession from his house to that of the Huzoor and made himself famous. Punjab is a land of fruits and presentations."

Industrial development and the Punjab.

34. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 5th November 1912 :—

"The chief obstacle in the way of the rapid and expeditious development of the industrial resources of the Punjab is the absence of power. In these days the industrial development of any country on a large scale is out of the question, unless a fairly sufficient supply of power at moderate cost is available. There are no coalfields worth the name in the Punjab and the supply of coal from Bengal is expensive on account of the long distance from which it is to be carried. Unless electric power on a large scale can take the place of steam power, for the generation of which large and abundant supplies of coal are necessary, there can be but little hope for the development of the industrial resources of the Punjab on an extensive scale. But the creation of cheap electric power is not without the range of possibilities in the Punjab. It lies latent in the rivers of the Province, whose potential capacity for helping agriculture by providing ample facilities for irrigation, has been amply demonstrated. Science, if pressed into service, can solve the problem of industrial development in the Province. Sir Louis Dane, who has in these matters a comprehensive grasp of large ideas, has already sent up to the Government of India, for sanction, a large and an elaborate scheme by which the snows of the hills and the rain water which often takes the form of devastating floods, will be controlled and utilised, not only for augmenting the supplies of water in the various irrigation canals of the Province, but also for generating a supply of fairly cheap power which will be available for industrial development. Such schemes have been a success in America and they have had a beneficial effect in developing the agricultural and industrial resources of the United States. In having the Punjab scheme expert advice of a high order has been taken and there is no reason why it should not prove a success. The money spent will be a kind of profitable investment. We hope the Government of India will not make any unnecessary delay in dealing with the scheme, and it will be a source of personal gratification to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, if it could be possible for him to start work on the scheme before he lays down his high office."

Mr. Montagu and the Punjab Hindus.

35. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 5th November 1912 :—

"The Hindu leaders of Lahore desired to entertain the Right Hon'ble E. S. Montagu at a garden party. Accordingly they put themselves in communication with the authorities. Mr. Montagu himself did not object to such a social function ; but his plans being unsettled he found it difficult to make a definite suggestion at the time he was approached. At a later stage it was found that Mr. Montagu's stay at Lahore was limited for two days, that his programme included a garden party at the Government House and that therefore time would not admit of a second garden party, and possibly of a third garden party. Had that been the fear, it should not have been difficult to merge the second and the possible third into one and give to that brilliant statesman a united welcome. It is a thousand pities that the opportunity has been missed. Other provinces should benefit from our experience and put themselves in direct communication with Mr. Montagu. It is entirely a social function and Mr. Montagu should see Hindu and Muhammadan society outside Government Houses.

Town-planning of the new capital.

36. In its leader, the Panjabee, of 5th November 1912, publishes the following under the heading "Town-planning and Indian Ideals :—

* * * * * * * *

"Within two or three generations many changes have taken place, not only in the forms of life of cultured Indians. but also in their activities and aims. The modern dwellings in cities and towns of educated men, of merchants, of artisans and working men do not resemble those of a century ago or of the classic ages. Modern commerce and industrial influence have greatly affected the activities and aims of the people and in like manner have introduced changes in building city requirements. Having in view these rapid changes, it is not possible to suggest any great national or traditional adaptation in the arrangements of Delhi town-planning. * * *

"New Delhi may or may not represent the past ideals of the nation. It will probably represent the present struggle for definite ideals which is going on in the country. There will be a new ideal that will dominate the country as there has been a new order of life and events that dominates the people. But as regards the expression of the old communic ideal of life in the cities and towns, very little can be said definitely. Those that populate cities feel the need of it probably, but what helps to populate and expand cities and towns is modern industry and commerce and these do not follow communic ideals. Mr. Frederic Harrison has described Western city life as showing a 'low stage of organic life,'

It is bereft of patriotism, religion and art. It is ever changing, loose in organization and casual in form. It has no founder, no traditions, no patrons or saints. It is the product of the speculative builder or a company that want quick returns. There is no doubt that these features are, to some extent to be found in Indian commercial and industrial cities, but, unless the traditional ideals and influences of life are wholly without effect in India, city building and expansion will not be altogether alien in design. If we want to see an Ayudhya, Hasthina or Dwaraka to be built to-day, or anything like the description of them that have created so deep-seated an affection for them, we must also restore the forms and activities of life that supported those cities; and this, it will be found, is practically impossible. Moreover, we have seen in our pilgrim centres and other holy places, which retain perhaps some corrupt and debased modifications of the original ideals, very little attempt is made for purity and improvement. Some of the more modern temples have been built on unorthodox lines, and in Bombay and Calcutta one might see the inner apartments of rich shrines lighted with electric lamps. The idols are painted in other places and the presentations and offerings made to the deity are changed. There is, however, one strong reservation to be made in regard to any national ideals in India. The changes, either plain or complex, are believed to be mere surface changes, as only a fraction of the people are directly brought under the new influences. The bulk of the population lives in rural areas and has not made its influence felt. When the day comes for most of them to be educated ever so little and brought under modern influences, what force they exert, to revive the old communal ideals and traditional forms, must be seen. It is very improbable that the Indian nation would be completely transformed one way or the other. There must be a blending of the various ideals, an adaptation and assimilation of modern requirements with the inherited culture of ages past. Till then we may witness faults, attempts at adaptation, surrender of true expression or entire domination of foreign ideals. These tend to resolve into something definite—neither old Ayudhya nor brand-new Delhi, but some pattern resembling both."

The Conference of Registrars of Co-operative Societies.

37. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of 6th November 191. :—

* * * * "The conference at Simla was held for the purpose of considering many important matters connected with the movement and to compare the lines of advance made in the different provinces, and it gave an opportunity to the Registrars to discuss certain questions of principles affecting the progress of the movement in India. Sir Robert Carlyle rightly said in the course of his speech that the co-operative movement was one of the most important movements of the present day in India. It will be admitted by all who have been watching the progress of the co-operative movement in India from its inception, that the results which have so far been achieved have surpassed the most sanguine expectations of those to whom is due the credit of introducing the beneficent movement in this country. Though the movement is still in its infancy in India, there can be no doubt that it has already taken firm root in some parts of the country at least. A perusal of the reports of the Registrars of Co-operative Credit Societies will show that the provinces are gradually making real progress in the matter of the spread of the principle of co-operation. Those who know about the striking success which the movement has achieved in Western countries are convinced that the spread of co-operative principles may be more confidently relied upon than any other economic agency, to improve the industrial condition of the country * * *

* * * "The co-operative movement in India has just passed the preliminary stage, but the progress which it has so far made indicates a gradual and healthy development. Now that the scope of the Act has been extended, we hope nothing will be done to check the growth of the movement. Sir Robert Carlyle saw that his words of caution might be misconstrued, that is why he clearly indicated in an explanatory speech that, if a sufficiently large number of non-official gentlemen, interested in the movement and understanding the principles of co-operation, came forward to help the movement, there could be no doubt that societies could be started in large numbers and yet be run on sound lines. The general complaint so long had been that the educated community took very little interest in the movement. The recent reports of Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies, however, tell a different and more hopeful tale. It is a very satisfactory feature of the movement that the educated community are gradually realising that a substantial improvement in the social and economic advancement of the people can be effected by the spread of the co-operative movement. The success of the movement now depends on the active co-operation of the educated community. It is therefore with very great satisfaction that we notice that some of the Registrars in their last annual reports bear testimony to the fact that the educated community are rendering valuable service to the movement.

* * * * "It is mainly owing to the exertions of Government that the benefits of co-operation have been known throughout the country, and what appeared to all to be an unpromising experiment has been converted into a strong and healthy movement. It has already done much for the cultivators and it is expected to do much more as the societies spread far and wide. Now that the people are realising that great benefits, moral as well as economic, are bound to accrue to them from the co-operative movement, we hope Government would not place any artificial barriers which may retard the growth of this beneficent movement."

A complaint about Europeans not mixing with Indians.

38. Under the heading 'Splendid Isolation' the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of 2nd November 1912, publishes the following :—

"'Srinagar is empty'—was the opening line of a newsletter which appeared in an Anglo-Indian paper the other day. We were naturally alarmed by this news, and we had almost begun to wonder as to the nature of the catastrophe which had overtaken the beautiful capital of Kashmir. Was it a flood, or was it an earthquake, which had made it 'empty'? Oh dear, no! It was neither a flood nor a tornado, nor even an earthquake, but—as the next few lines of the newsletter showed—only the departure from the city of the handful of European visitors at the close of the season which had made Srinagar 'empty!' The fifty thousand 'native' inhabitants of the city did not apparently enter into the calculation of the correspondent. What a ratling commentary on the 'splendid isolation' of the 'Imperial' Briton!

One may have noticed how complacently do the Anglo-Indian correspondents of London papers press the views of Anglo-India upon the British public, in the name of India! Even the Partition of the Bengal was reported to have considerably delighted India! It was not until the Bengalis shook heaven and earth with their agitation that the British public became aware of the existence of an India which was different from Anglo-India. Not long ago an English tourist described Lahore in the columns of a London paper as a city of beautiful lawns, fine buildings, broad, well-kept streets brightly illuminated with electric lights! If he had cared to detach himself from the 'splendid isolation' of the Upper Mall, he would have become aware of the existence of a Lahore whose narrow streets and choking lanes, dust-laden and filth-bespattered, were not even properly lighted with oil lamps, and where the public thoroughfares were closed to pedestrian traffic every blessed morning by filth-laden carts open at the top and moving at a lordly pace! One actually broke on Sunday morning last right in the midst of the road leading from Moti Bazar to Masti Gate, and the fragrance it left behind stuck to the atmosphere for full twenty-four hours!

"'Splendid isolation' has no doubt stood the British people in good stead in their political relations with the Continental Powers. In India, where they are responsible for the welfare and happiness of a people entrusted to their care by an all-wise Providence, such an attitude hardly fits in with the natural order of things. For not a few of the troubles of India the 'splendid isolation' of the Olympian heights of Simla is solely responsible; and we challenge the contradiction of the fact that, if a particular class of Anglo-Indians had cared to know India beyond the 'splendid isolation' of a Pingpong Club, they would not have grown so suspicious of 'natives' as to count their fingers after shaking hands with them. And if a "bounder" fresh from England could tear himself away from the 'splendid isolation' of his conceit when setting foot on one end of the country, he would not expect the other end to flop up in the air! And if the Srinagar correspondent of the Anglo-Indian daily we have mentioned could have managed on at least necessary occasions to emerge from the 'splendid isolation' of the white man's society, he would not have given us the fright he did. And if the English tourist referred to elsewhere had known the existence of a Lahore beyond the 'splendid isolation' of the Upper Mall, his description of the capital of the Punjab would have put the local Municipal authorities to the blush. And if our rulers, in moments of release from the 'splendid isolation' of the official world, could have mixed as freely with us as they would have done if we had not happened to be 'natives,' and if in that happy condition of things our friends of the Upper Mall were more frequently seen in the streets and lanes of the City of Lahore, the Lahoris would not have been grovelling in dust and wallowing in filth."

The Public Services Commission.

39. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore) of 7th November 1912 :—

"The Public Services Commission, it is expected, will begin the work of touring in the different parts of the country, with a view to examine witnesses, early in the new year and it is, we think, the duty of our public bodies and public men to take steps to make out a good case on behalf of the people of the country. The great grievance of the latter is that the services are at present divided into Imperial and Provincial; that the people of the country are almost debarred from entering the Imperial branches; that the disparity between the pay and prospects of the two branches is very great; that in the majority of cases the admission to the Imperial branches is by selection and nomination and not on the result of a competitive examination and that, in cases in which admission is regulated by the results of a competitive examination, the people of India are at a great disadvantage because the examination is held in London. It is thus clear that our grievance can be redressed only if the distinction between the Imperial and the Provincial Services is abolished; if admission into them is regulated by the results of an open competitive examination held simultaneously in India and in London. This constitutes the crux of our demand and we should make every effort to press it on the Commission. Unless we make out a very strong case there is little or no chance of the Commission recommending the concession of our demand. We may take it that official influence will be exerted to the utmost against this demand being conceded in any shape or form. The official agency will be able to make out a good case from their point of view and to press it on the Commission with all the persistence and ability it is capable of putting forth. The task before us, therefore, is a most difficult one, and we should do our utmost to perform it well. It is clear that, unless our witnesses are thoroughly well prepared and gain a thorough mastery over facts and figures, it will be difficult to convince the Commissioners that we have a very strong case. A great deal of most careful study is necessary for those who are going to appear before the Commission and every possible effort should be made to make satisfactory arrangements in connection therewith."

I.—Politics.

War in the Balkans.

1. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated the 9th November 1912 :—

"Indian Muhammadans have largely identified themselves with the Turks in the present war. Nevertheless it seems to us that the Turkish quarrel with the Balkans is not our quarrel, and we Indians cannot afford to take sides. * * *

* * * * * *

"Mr. Durham's letter to the (London) Nation of the 12th ultimo, which we reproduce in another column, partly furnishes an answer. Whatever Indian Muhammadans may say to the contrary, the war with Italy has damaged the reputation of the Turks; and those Muhammadans who know them better and who have closer acquaintance with them than Indians have no hesitation in agreeing with Mr. Durham in the opinion that it is the people in the Balkans who count more than the Ottoman power. The cruelties and barbarities described by Mr. Durham might be exceptional, but that they should be tolerated in the twentieth century, to sustain the Turks in power, is most incomprehensible.

"At the same time, judging from the point of view of the Turks themselves, it is difficult to withhold one's sympathy from them in their dire distress. For five hundred years they have been regarded a ruling race in Europe in the midst of more progressive and more enlightened nations than themselves. Step by step they are being deprived of their provinces, and their sway over the remnants of a once extensive and glorious empire rendered almost nominal. This being so, it was not unnatural that the Turks should have taken the Balkan demands for insolence. But the Balkans could have hardly framed their demands in the belief that the autonomy of the kind under foreign control was practicable. Even the Times admits that autonomy under foreign control is not practicable and 'can never have been believed to be practicable, until the dispute had been fought out upon the battle-field.' * *

"The Times also admits 'dire oppression' in the past. It admits that the Turks never really administered their territories on progressive lines, that they have remained a race of soliders defending the remnants of their ancient conquests with the sword alone and that mere autonomy, in whatever form it were possible, being useless as a permanent settlement, war and bloodshed have been inevitable. One passage in particular should be quoted in full. It says: 'In its essence the war is a further attempt on the part of the peoples of the South Eastern Europe to fling back to Asia those influences of nomadism which for five centuries have hampered, and often completely arrested their development. They are thus renewing in a limited form a world-movement which can only have one ultimate result, though that result will hardly be reached yet.' It is impossible to mistake the significance of such writings and to misread the signs of future struggle they indicate. In the attainment of this result irrespective of the issues of war, Europe has been unanimous. Now that the results have so far demonstrated the determination of the oppressed people to dictate terms at Constantinople, there can be little doubt of that result. In the interest of humanity and in its own interest, the Turk should now quit Europe and forget he ever held other races than Moslems is subjection."

The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 7th November 1912, publishes a communication in which the writer says that it is now an admitted fact that Turkey is a cake on the political table of the Powers of Europe, who carve off pieces for themselves whenever inclined. For the last 50 years, she has continuously been on the battle-field; whenever she has a little leisure to attend to internal reform, one or other of the Powers, supported by all the children of the Cross, attacks her, and considerations of both justice and peace are scattered to the winds. There exists, it is clear, a conspiracy to continue inflicting wounds on Turkey, until the days of Muhammadans are ended. What happened (i.e., the victory of Turkey) in Tripoli is known to everyone, but it is Turkey that has at the last gone to the wall. These calamities which are overtaking Islam from all sides are, says the writer, "our" own work and the natural result of "our (present) condition." The path that "we" are treading in India can never lead to "our" betterment. "Our" progress and welfare depend solely on "our" becoming (true) Muhammadans, but nothing is ever done to bring this about. Those (Musalmans) who are called educated and enlightened have proved, in this matter, more worthless than even the old-fashioned Ullemas.

The path " we " are now following leads only to the Cross, and Muhammadans think they are moving with the times. The honour and power of Turkey have been seriously damaged by the result of the Tripolitan War, and " the ghosts of Christian crusaders, with crosses round their necks, are challenging the spirit of Saladin in Montenegro." Unitedly now they (? the Balkan States) commit acts of highhandedness, and the chains of these wild dogs are in the hands of France and Russia and the other Powers. It is hard for Turkey to bear her limbs being torn off one by one. She had better make one supreme effort to break the net in which she is caught. Muhammadan women have discontinued producing " Muhammadan sons." Their produce are only " Musalman-looking Christians." " We no longer obey God, and therefore it is better that we should depart from this world. We are a disgrace to Islam ; for otherwise what does (our) present condition signify " ? The Balkan States have, in the opinion of the writer, been prepared and equipped (by the Powers). It is, however, somewhat premature in some people to imagine hostilities in the Balkans leading to a universal war. The fact of the matter is that, if Turkey proves too weak, she will be made weaker ; if she turns out to be strong, every piece of deception will be employed to prevent war from becoming " dangerous for the world." The wounded lion has been attacked by ants, and the other beasts of prey are biding their time. If the Turks continue to act in the future as they are acting now, they will fare in Turkey as they did in Tripoli, and will be driven out of Europe and finally out of Asia also. Have they forgotten the history of Spain ? There is no other alternative for them but to prepare themselves for a decisive sacrifice, exterminating themselves or " the others " for ever. It is far better to die than to live a life of disgrace. When Turkey unfurls the green banner (of the Prophet) and steps into the battle-field, Muhammadans throughout India, nay, the world, " will welcome " her " with money and tears."

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912, has a note headed " What should be the terms of peace ? ". With regard to the Porte's request to the Powers to mediate, the Turks are, says the paper, entitled to substantial concessions, since the war was commenced by the Balkan States. The European Powers should also bear in mind that the Balkan States defied the Powers in commencing hostilities, and it behoves them to abide by their declaration of the maintenance of the status quo. Indian Muhammadans have the right to tell their Government how deeply pained they have been at the Powers' treatment of the Turks, and that it would still further wound their feelings to see Turkey subjected to greater ill-treatment. In conclusion, the paper expresses the hope that British statesmen will earn the gratitude of the Muslim world by lending a helping hand to the Sultan in his present troubles.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912, publishes a communication headed " Flash," in which the writer—one Muhammad Sharif Khalid, of Lyallpur—calls on " the lightning of destruction to flash and show that an enemy of Islam can never be safe ; " " to fan the fire of revenge in (the) dejected hearts (of the Turks) ; " " to pour down fire on the houses of the enemies of the faith ; " to strike the palaces of Victor (Emmanuel) and Nicholas ; and to fall, like God's wrath, on the forces of the enemies.

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War.

2. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 10th November 1912, publishes a letter from S. Begum of Delhi, who appeals to her Muslim sisters to give money for the Turkish sufferers in the Balkan War, saying in the course of her remarks that Muhammadans are being everywhere oppressed ; that Islam is in a very critical condition at present ; and that it is now faring just as it did in the Prophet's time, when it was insulted in every quarter and was almost exterminated by the infidels.

The paper has also a communication from the wife of Khan Bahadur Habib-ur-Rahman, School Road, Quetta, to the effect that Muhammadans should regard the (threatened) extinction of the Ottoman Empire as the final blow to the prestige of Islam, and should consider themselves on the brink of being reduced to the friendless condition of the Jews. The time is at hand when the unclean boots of European victors will desecrate those sacred places at Mecca and Medina, before which the Prophet's followers prostrate themselves. The present is undoubtedly a time when it becomes the duty of every Muslim to engage in Jehad, and when he should reck nothing of his life in defending his religion. Those who are able to fight should go and lay down their lives. The writer is selling her ornaments and will send the proceeds to Turkey, and has also firmly resolved to curtail her expenses and send the money thus saved.

The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 6th November 1912, publishes an article headed "The Turks hemmed in by Europe." The last mail from Constantinople has finally made it quite clear, says the Vakil, that "Russia, Austria, &c., have all unitedly egged on" the Balkan States, and that "in spite of Europe's general proclamation of neutrality, most of the (European) States are openly helping" the allies with munitions of war. So far the Turks have given a good account of themselves on the battle-field, and the war fever in Constantinople and the Muslim world's sympathy with the Turks are well-known. The Porte's financial condition is, however, very weak, and, were it to borrow from any European Power, the transaction would give that Power "The right of supervision" over Turkey for all time to come. It should, therefore, be "our" duty to open a fund towards which the Muhammadans of all classes and families should enthusiastically subscribe, in order to be able to make a loan of at least one crore of rupees to the Turkish Government; the money collected for the proposed Muslim University being also utilized, if necessary, for the purpose. Again, every brave and able-bodied Muhammadan should hold himself in readiness to take part in the war. Such volunteers should have a thorough knowledge of English and Arabic, and should, if possible, pay their own expenses, and a fund should be started to defray the expenses of those who cannot pay their own way, but are likely to prove of special use in the war.

3. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 8th November 1912, says that the Balkan war was declared so unexpectedly that the Turks had no time to prepare for it. This, indeed, was what six Christian States desired; their object being to ensure the speedy overthrow of the Porte. That the holy war is a pre-arranged affair should be evident from the fact that, at the time of the Italian invasion of Tripoli, the press of Europe wrote that it was "but a link in a long chain"; and that the end would be the extinction of "the political life of Turkey." Islam is given a bad name for no reason, and it is the Christian brotherhood which has assumed such a dangerous aspect as to place (the existence of) all non-Christian races and religions in danger. The Powers, says the Rafiq, deliberately prevented Turkey from preparing for war by holding out hopes of peace. Who has ever heard of a single kingdom being opposed by a combination of four petty States, supported by as many greater Powers, backed in their turn, by a quartette of mighty confrères? "We all know," it adds, "how the war will end. We can also . . . . . prophesy that good results will not follow the destruction of a splendid existence by means of such fraud, cunning, and hypocrisy." When the form of Government was changed in Turkey, the representatives of all the Christian nations went to Constantinople and forced the young Turks to so extend the circle of Turkish brotherhood that Christians also began to be recruited into the Ottoman army. The recent incident at Kirk Kilisseh, where some Christian regiments, by refusing to fight at the most critical moment, caused confusion in the Turkish forces, is a direct result of the events of the years 1907-08. The Turks are now undoubtedly to be wiped off from the earth, let alone Europe; and "we" must, says the Rafiq, prepare ourselves to witness this harrowing scene. The event will, however, open the eyes of Muhammadans in every part of the world, teaching them to rely on themselves alone and to regard it as their duty to sacrifice themselves in order to make their descendants more powerful.

War in the Balkans: the Powers and Islam.

War in the Balkans and the European diplomatic situation.

4. Writing under the head "Verily God is with us," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th November 1912, reports that, according to the Pioneer's London correspondent, Germany has lent three crores of rupees to Turkey; and German newspapers are now displaying greater activity than ever in spitting poison against England, while Austria, the ally of Germany, has despatched her fleet to Syria. England is sending warships to Turkey in reply. All this goes to show, says the Editor, that Europe's hopes of the restriction of the war to the Balkans are likely to be falsified, and that international complications are assuming alarming proportions. The members, he adds, of both the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente are about to step into the arena, and a most sanguinary war is going to be waged. It is a pity that England did not openly side with Turkey; she would then have won the hearts of Musalmans, not only in India, but throughout the world, for all time to come. It, however, grieves them to see that she, whose destinies are bound up with theirs, should allow her mortal enemy, Germany, to lay the Turks under an obligation. The Osmanlis are certain to prove victorious, for the reason that they are in the right. It will, however, grieve "our" hearts if England does not befriend them in their hour of trouble.

England and the Balkan War.

5. The following is from the 'Rafiq' (Delhi), of 12th November 1912:—

(Audacious move on the part of Britain). The battleships "Hibernia", Britannia", "Commonwealth", and "Dominion" as well as the cruisers "Black Prince" and "Cumberland," have been ordered to proceed immediately to the East. The destroyers only will remain at Malta. (May God destroy them).

The brackets are the paper's own.

Writing under the heading "The Ottoman Empire ought to be rescued from danger," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 6th November 1912, says that, if the Porte has really requested the Powers to mediate (between Turkey and the Balkans), it must be admitted that the Turkish army has failed to beat back the Bulgarians and that Turkey has been overtaken by a danger such as she did not experience even in the Crimean War. With regard to the international situation in Europe, the paper remarks that England should revert to the wise policy followed by her towards Turkey fifty years ago, and should order the Bulgarians to retrace their steps, making the Powers abide by their declaration of the maintenance of the status quo in Turkey.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912, publishes a letter, dated the 14th ultimo, and headed "The base declaration by the Confederate States.' The writer—Mr. Kazim Husain, Honorary Secretary, Muslim League, London—says that the astounding declaration by the Balkan Committee, published in the Times (London) on the preceding Saturday (the 12th idem), will be certain to have a most injurious effect on the King Emperor's Muslim subjects. The committee of the All-India Muslim League, therefore, wishes to draw the attention of the paper's readers to the declaration, for the reason that it openly invites England to partition Turkey and dye her hands with the blood of (both) Muhammadans and Christians. The absurdity of the declaration and the appeal made in it to religious passions must be viewed with feelings of contempt by the wise; but there can be no doubt that it will cause great indignation among the Prophet's followers. It should be remembered in this connection that 80 or 90 per cent. of the Muslim subjects of England regard the Sultan as their Caliph and are most deeply influenced by his words. "We" read, says the writer, in (British) newspapers that Jerusalem has been in the hand of the Turks long enough. "We" hear language from a British Minister that, although vague, creates the suspicion of (British) partiality (for the Balkans). It is "our" duty then to raise "our" voice in protest. If the English cannot sympathise with an Islamic State, which has ever been the victim of conspiracies, it is to be hoped that they will at least have regard to the dictates of humanity and desist from such inflammatory deeds, so that the Crusades, with their attendant calamities, may not break out again.

The proposal to abstain from sacrifice at the coming 'Id and to devote the money thus saved to the relief of the Turks.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912, publishes a letter from one Muhammad Safdar, B.A., LL.B., a Pleader at Sialkot, who enquires from Shams-ul-Ulama Shibli, Maulana Hakim Nur-ud-din, and Mufti Muhammad Abdulla of Tonk, whether it would be lawful in Musalmans to abstain from sacrificing sheep and goats on the occasion of the coming 'Id and to devote the price of these animals to the aid of the Turks.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 8th November 1912, (published in a subsequent issue) replies to the question in the affirmative, and states that it has received a fatwa in support of the contention.

The Hakam (Kadian), of the 7th November 1912, opposes the idea.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 13th November 1912, publishes a letter from Hakim Nur-ud-din, of Kadian who says that, as far as he knows, such action would be contrary to Muhammadan law.

The Balkan War and the Radical Cabinet.

7. The following is from the Observer, (Lahore), of 9th November 1912 :—

"We hesitate to believe that the British Cabinet, now in power in England, has a mind to observe the Gladstonian traditions for open hostility to the Turks and for flagrant disregard of the feelings of the loyal Muslim subjects of His Imperial Majesty the King Emperor. 'That, should the war nevertheless break out, the Powers will not permit at the end of the conflict any modification of the territorial status quo in European Turkey'—these were the very words which before the outbreak of hostilities the Powers addressed to Turkey as well as to the Balkan Confederacy, in a Note signed, among others, by a representative of the British Government. Now, however, that the fortunes of war are declaring themselves against the Turks, Europe appears to be changing its mind and seems to be bent on eating its words. But while none of the spokesmen of any European Cabinet has been hitherto reported as having openly expressed any intention of going back upon the Note, to Sir Edward Grey belongs the responsibility of being the first to make such an utterance. The British Foreign Secretary has announced in the House of Commons that circumstances have now changed, and he thereby implies that the Powers are not prepared to carry out their pledge in regard to the integrity of Turkey. Such is Occidental diplomacy! And to crown all, the announcement is made first of all by the Foreign Secretary of the Government of a country which is the greatest Muslim Power in the world! One wonders why Sir Edward Grey should have been in such indecent haste to commit himself so openly and so enthusiastically.

"Sir Edward Grey is talking of the right of the Allies to lay down terms of peace; and even fantastic proposals have been made in certain quarters to curtail the sovereignty of the Sultan and reduce the area of territory under his jurisdiction. But, as explained above, a few days before the Powers had unitedly declared their resolve to allow no territorial change, whatever the result of the war be. What an instructive contrast between the previous declaration and the present tendency to acquiesce in the fait accompli! Was the former announcement made simply to hoodwink a credulous world or to counteract the possible effect of Turkish victory and provide by way of anticipation against what then appeared to be certain, we mean the ultimate triumph of Ottoman arms? That the latter explanation is not the less probable of the two is borne out by the intercession of the European Concert and its success in forcing Turkey to hand back the conquered territory to Greece in the Greko-Turkish war of 1897. That war had ended disastrously for the Greeks and in the occupation of Thessaly by Edhem Pasha's victorious army. And yet the European Powers baulked the Osmanlist of the fruits of their conquest and successfully insisted on a reversion to the status ante. In the present war, however, when reverses are being sustained by the Turks, the Powers are manifesting no anxiety to maintain the status ante, though that would constitute a distinct breach of solemn pledges."

Is it a religious War?

8. In a note headed "Fanaticism of the Greeks in Egypt," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 6th November 1912, says that, according to the Pioneer's Cairo correspondent, the Greeks in the Nile Valley are going to the front as volunteers. Indeed, adds the paper, the natives of the Balkans settled in all parts of the world are going to the help of the allies in large numbers, and those of them who cannot personally engage in the war are aiding in other ways. The reason for this is that the Balkan States look upon the war as being religious and not political in character. The Turks, on the contrary, abstain from imparting a religious colour to it, knowing that, were they to do so, the Powers would have yet another pretext to crush them. Really, however, the Osmanlis are fighting for Islam, and it is therefore incumbent on Muslims to help them in every possible way.

Hindus and the Balkan War.

9. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 6th November 1912, reprints from the Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), a report of the proceedings of a meeting held in Aligarh on the 27th ultimo, at the instance of Babu Anand Parshad, Honorary Secretary, United Provinces Nationalist Association. The meeting was of the opinion that the allies have converted the Balkan War into a religious struggle. This is untrue. It is Muhammadans who are forcibly imparting a religious colour to the war and have been openly saying in their papers that the contest is between Islam and heathenism. As to the sympathy which some Hindus are extending to the Turks, it is wholly inopportune and inadvisable, and the day is not far distant when these Hindus will realise their mistake and discover that their conduct is highly injurious to their community.

The Muslim University fund and the Balkan War.

10. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 6th November 1912, publishes a letter headed "Look after the Islamic Empire before the Muslim University," in which the writer—Ghazanfar Ali, Chishti—remarks that even the grant of such a charter for their University as Muhammadans desire can not prove of any benefit to them, if the Turkish Empire (in Europe) becomes the prey of "the European wolf." Let Muhammadans therefore send the money collected for the proposed Aligarh University to Constantinople without any hesitation.

The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 7th November 1912, opposes the suggestion and says that the University funds should be kept intact and the (Muslim) community sbould be asked to give other money—which it wolud be certain to do—for the Turks.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 11th November 1912, publishes a translation of the appeal issued by the Editor of the Hablul Matin (Calcutta), and the Hon'ble Mr. Suharwardy, exhorting Indian Muhammadans to render every possible help to the Turks.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 8th November 1912, also translates the appeal, and, reporting that the same suggestion has been put forward from all parts of the country, asks its readers to communicate their views on the subject.

Sir Edward Grey's policy.

11. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912, has a paragraph headed "Sir Edward Grey's unpleasant policy." It is clear, says the paper, from Sir Edward Grey's recent speeches in Parliament, that England has permitted the Allies to have things their own way, and has no regard for the Powers' declaration of the maintenance of the status quo.

The Sheikh-ul-Islam and a holy war.

12. Commenting on the news that the Sheikh-ul-Islam has appealed to the Turkish Ullemas to join the army and preach a holy war, the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 12th November 1912, expresses satisfaction that the eyes of the Turks have been opened at last. The paper feels convinced that the present war is the continuation of the Crusades, which indeed ended in shame for Christians alone. The Ullemas should not only join the Turkish Army, but should also take their stand in the very front and kill or be killed on the battle-field.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 12th November 1912, says that the doings of some short-sighted statesmen and bigoted priests in (Christian) Europe have at last compelled the Sheikh-ul-Islam to impart a religious colour to the war.

In its issue, dated the 14th November 1912, the same paper remarks that the Balkan States appealed, in the name of Christianity, to their forces to fight against the Turks. It is no longer a secret, indeed, that the war in the Balkans is a contest between the Christian and Islamic religions. This religious element has, however, been imparted by the bigoted Christians themselves, who accuse the Turks of bigotry. Thousands of priests in the Balkans are not only appealing to the religious passions of their co-religionists but are also participating in the fighting. After reproducing, from a London contemporary, a portrait of a Greek bishop, commanding a corps consisting of Greek priests, the paper says that no exception can be taken to the appeal by the Sheikh-ul-Islam.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th November 1912, thanks God that the Turks have at last recovered their senses, and asserts that victory will now attend their arms.

The Powers and Turkey.

13. Writing under the heading 'The desperate plight of Turkey,' the Tribune (Lahore), of the 13th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"* * * The Times says that Turkey must remain at Constantinople and take charge of the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora, and the Dardanelles, because it is expedient for all nations that she should do so. That is the general feeling. Shorn of her other possessions, weaker than even the hitherto insignificant Balkan States, the Ottoman Empire in Europe will shrink into a little buffer State and will be the nominal guardian of the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles. This is the humiliating position to which Turkey has been reduced, and her very existence in Europe will depend upon the sufferance of the Powers."

The Powers and the Balkan War.

14. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 3rd November 1912, quoting from certain Arabic newspapers, says that, even if Turkey wins, the European powers will not let her profit by her victories. In the event, however, of her being beaten they will make Macedonia independent, and will instead restore to Turkey the places conquered by the allies.

In a note headed "O God, have pity on the wretched condition of Islam," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 6th November 1912, says that the moment for the realization of Christendom's desire to expel the Turks and Islam from Europe has at last arrived. Recent telegrams make it quite clear that Europe had fully resolved, even previous to the successes of the allies, to tolerate the Prophet's faith no longer. It was loudly proclaimed by it in the beginning of the war that neither party would be allowed to annex even an inch of the other's territory. Now, however, that luck seems to be against the Turks, it has had the shamelessness to decide that Albania and Macedonia shall be wrested from Turkey.

Mr. Asquith on the Balkan War.

15. Writing under the heading "English Premier's offensive speech," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th November 1912, says that the following sentence in Mr. Asquith's speech at the Guildhall banquet has lacerated the hearts of Muhammadans :—"Salonika, the gateway through which Christianity first entered Europe, is occupied by the Greeks, and we may at any moment hear of the fall of Constantinople itself." It is to be wished that the Prime Minister had kept this thought locked in his bosom and had not sprinkled salt into the wounds of the King Emperor's Muslim subjects. Should the Premier of an Empire, which owns ten crores of Muhammadan subjects, display "only this sort of prudence ?'.'

In its issue, dated 13th November 1912, the paper remarks that the Muhammadans of the world,. especially of India, regard Mr. Asquith's speech as wholly unbecoming a British statesman. His words go against the British policy of neutrality and are, therefore, regarded by Indian Musalmans with feelings of deep regret and anxiety. It is, however, a matter for thankfulness that they embody Mr. Asquith's personal, and not official views.

Mr. Asquith and the Indian Mahammadans.

16. In its leader, the Observer (Lahore), of the 13th November 1912, writing under the heading "Turkey and the Balkans," makes the following remark :—

"Mr. Asquith's speech, as reported by Reuter, comes as a bomb-shell for the Indian Musalmans, and it is bound to create deep concern throughout the Muslim world, not unmixed with the bitterest disappointment among the Muhammadan subjects of His Imperial Majesty King George."

Asia and the Balkan War.

17. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 6th November 1912, has a note headed "Effect of the Turco-Balkan War upon Asia," in which it says that the Englishman (Calcutta) writes that, if Turkey is defeated in the war, "we" should feel glad at the event, for the reason that it will stem "the wave started in Asia by the victory of Japan over Russia." That paper seems to be under the impression that the defeat of the Balkans at the hands of the Turks would please Asiatics. There, however, is no reason for the supposition. The people of Asia felt joy at the success of Japanese arms in Manchuria, owing simply to Japan having been in the right. In the present war, however, the same cannot be said of Turkey, and "we" do not therefore desire victory for her. "We" are aware that the Turks have grossly oppressed the Christian inhabitants of Macedonia and Servia. "We" also know that the Balkan States have thrown off the oppressive Turkish yoke after great difficulty and that they are fighting for truth and liberty. "Our" sympathies are therefore with the Allies.

The ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid, and Turkey's troubles.

18. Writing under the heading "A Miracle by (Abdul) Hamid," the Watan (Lahore), of the 8th November 1912, says that the present troubles of Turkey are due to the disappearance from the political stage of Abdul Hamid, for he was always able to prevent any hostile combination of the Powers. He is, however, alive still and has arrived at Constantinople, which renders it likely that he may succeed in steering the vessel of his nation into the haven of safety.

Indians in Canada.

19. Writing under the heading, "Sikh Emigrants in Canada," the Tribune (Lahore), of the 14th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"* * * It appears that things are much worse in Canada than in South Africa. The authorities of the latter country are no doubt stoutly opposed to immigration, but the stringent rules that they have framed in this connection are applied impartially to the Indians, the Chinese and the Japanese. In Canada, which is wholly inconsistent in her policy of exclusion, the position of the emigrant from India is made very anomalous as compared with the Indian who goes to the United States. In the latter country the Indian has advantages over the Chinese and Japanese because he is a British subject. In Canada he is given less privileges than other Asiatic aliens. By paying a head-tax a Chinese can enter Canada, but an Indian can enter under no conditions unless he has made a continuous passage. Continuous passage is impossible as there is no line of steamers between Canada and this country. We are told 'worse than this, no one of the domiciled Hindus can bring in his wife and children. At present there are eight Sikhs with plenty of money and good homes who are trying to get in their families. But no steamer company will give them a passage to Canada. Surely the motherland could prevail upon the daughter to treat with more consideration the brave Sikhs who want to make their home in Canada.' The people of Canada are free to come to India, and carry on their trade and make money unrestricted. They are further quite free to compete for any position in the public services. Is it not, to say the least, anomalous that Indians are prohibited from even entering Canada? We hope the British Government will take steps to remove this just grievance of the Indians."

Despatch of British troops to Persia.

20. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 6th November 1912, considers it a matter for surprise that, at a time when Russia has at last decided to withdraw her forces from Northern Persia, the British Government should have felt the necessity of despatching troops to the southern part of the Shah's dominions. It is possible that the officers and men of the 11th Rajputs, who have already left India or are to embark on the 13th instant, are intended to relieve the troops now at Bushire and other places; nevertheless their despatch at the present time, when the new Governor of Persia is working zealously to restore peace, must undoubtedly give rise to unpleasant feelings.

(b)—Home.

Public life in the Punjab.

21. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 7th November 1912, publishes a communication headed "Public life in the Punjab." The writer—Lala Gulshan Rai, Pleader, Chief Court, Lahore—says that it has been frequently asserted that, by contributing a series of articles to the Panjabee (under the heading "Self-abnegation in politics") three or four years back, the late Lala Lal Chand broke up the Congress party in the Punjab, and thereby killed even what little public life was then to be found in this province. It is, however, wrong to charge the deceased gentleman with having broken up this party: the real cause is to be found in the events of 1907 and in the (abortive) Surat Congress. The Lala was never opposed to politics, although he undoubtedly condemned the meaning placed on the term in the Punjab, viz., making strongly-worded speeches against Government. The end of the Congress party, without doubt, resulted in such speeches being delivered and in unjustifiable attacks being made on Government. And if this is what is meant by public life, then there has been no public life in this province since 1907. Even in the time of the Congress (party) there was but little public life in the province. Turning to the Punjab Hindu Sabha the writer declares that it is incorrect to state that it was founded by the late Lala Lal Chand. (To be continued).

III.—Native States.

Income-tax in Bahawalpur.

22. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), dated 12th November 1912:—

"So keenly have the Hindus of Bahawalpur taken to heart the decision of the Darbar to impose income-tax, that they have unanimously resolved to abandon, as a protest, the celebration of national festivals. We lately reported how the Hindus throughout the State had, apart from religious ceremonies, refrained from all rejoicings during the Dusserah. We are now informed that there was no Diwali in the State, and that towns and villages alike were in cimmerian darkness on the night on which myriads of little lamps illumined the entire Hindu India. This shows that, whatever be the financial requirements of the Darbar, there is the intensity of public feeling which should be consulted, and that it is highly inexpedient to stick to a decision which has roused such feeling. It is not desirable to do anything calculated to mar such social and semi-religious rejoicings of the people."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Swami Dayanand and Hindus.

23. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the November 1912, publishes some verses by Lala Lal Chand, Falak, entitled "The roar of Swami Dayanand, the lion of India, to rouse the Arya community from the sleep of indifference." The writer makes the Swami tell Hindus that they have lost their country by allowing themselves to be swayed by feelings of "disunion and revenge." The Swami also refers (in the poem) to the past greatness of Hindus and urges them to spread the light of the Vedas to all parts of the world, to avoid early marriage, to relieve the sufferings of orphans and widows, and to unite themselves into a nation.

Lala Shadi Lal's presidential address at the recent Hindu Conference.

24. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 9th November 1912, publishes a communication from "Danishmand," from Shahpur, who finds fault with Lala Shadi Lal for having opposed the Urdu language in his presidential address at the recent Hindu Conference. The Lala also complained in the course of his remarks, adds the writer, that, during the last decade, the death-rate had been higher among Hindu women than among their Muhammadan sisters. It is not, however, surprising that there should occur a large number of deaths in a community in which the urine of cow is put into the mouth of a child at the time of its birth, and kitchens are plastered with cow dung, containing thousands of germs injurious to health, four or five times a month. It is a pity that the blind worship of the cow has so closed the eyes of Hindus that they even regard the urine and dung of the animal as "purifying" things.

Suggestion to establish an Islamic Mission.

25. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 3rd November 1912, has an article deploring the present condition of Muslim countries and complaining that the enemies of Islam have done their utmost to undermine its foundations. It is, therefore, necessary that there should be established an Islamic Mission, members of which would visit every part of the world and devote all their time to re-uniting the Prophet's followers, so as to weld them into a strong force and ensure their living for some time longer. Men are wanted to dedicate their lives to the propagation of "the Truth" and capable of strenuous efforts to plant the flag of Islam in every possible place. If there were to come forth even fifty or a hundred such men, the establishment of the mission would render it very easy to spread Islam (lit. the nation) over all parts of India. The paper further suggests the opening of a fund in every city in connection with this mission.

VI.—Legislation.

Lala Lajpat Rai and the forthcoming Council Elections in the Punjab.

26. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated 13th November 1912:—

"* * * * We hope to see the name of Lala Lajpat Rai among the successful candidates. He has done valuable and useful work on the Lahore Municipal Committee and we believe his work has been appreciated by officials as well as by the people, and there can be no doubt that he will be an acquisition to the Punjab Legislative Council."

Bill for the protection of minor girls.

27. In its leader the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 12th November 1912, publishes the following:—

"Mr. Dadabhoy's Bill for the protection of minor girls in India has been sent to the Local Governments for opinion. The Government of India have invited the attention of the Local Governments to the main features of the Bill and the laws that exist on the subject. The replies of the Local Governments are to be sent by the 15th of January—rather a very short time within which they have to consult public opinion and formulate their recommendations. We do not quite see the urgency of the measure and the rapidity with which it is proposed to be decided. It affects very large population of India and, unlike Mr. Madge's Bill, aims at certain semi-religious customs of the people as the dedication of girls, to a temple or the adoption of minor girls by women of questionable morals. The public should be consulted before the Government of India make up their mind as to the course they wish to adopt in this. There is practically a unanimous resolve in India, that the State should legislate for the protection of minor girls from an immoral life. But in so doing the natural rights of people should not be interfered with; dedication of oneself or one's children for any righteous end ought to be encouraged rather than discouraged. The temple is not a place of moral defilement, nor is dedication itself a wicked thing. But certain good customs have degenerated into vile practices, and the object of the legislators ought to be to attack the degenerated customs and not the unobjectionable custom. The Hon'ble Mr. Dadabhoy has not distinguished between rightful and wrongful dedications, and this is the chief defect in that part of the Bill.

"* * * We are glad, however, that the Government of India have, in their letter to the local authorities, stated that the Bill goes too far in penalising 'the mere dedication of a minor to a temple irrespective of the intention.' They, therefore, ask the Local Governments to say whether charges of this description 'have been of sufficient frequency to justify a special provision for them.' The Hon'ble Mr. Mudholkar suggests that the age limit in sections 372, I. P. C., and 373 (selling or letting a minor to prostitution; and buying or obtaining possession for the same) should be raised from 16 to 18, and that no girl should be allowed to enroll herself in a temple until she has made before a Magistrate a declaration of her age and of her willingness to become a Devadasi. In all cases of temple dedication, the intention should be made clear by competent persons, before penal provisions are made.

"The question of the adoption of guardianship of minor girls by women of questionable morals is dealt with fully, and here again there is the same absence of the consideration of intention. It is true that as a rule women of immoral character would make their wards also immoral, but there may be exceptions also, the more so when we consider the natural inclinations of childless women to adopt and bring up minors as their children. What is there in the Bill to protect such women and to encourage such a feeling, even among the fallen? Neither Mr. Dadabhoy nor Mr. Mudholkar has considered the possibility of penitent sinners with a faint hope of reforming and finding chances of reclamation. * * *

"We are glad that the Government appreciate this and suggest a procedure in which the agency of the police is wholly removed, and further, if the mother or guardian of a minor girl could show that she has taken adequate steps to preserve her daughter from contamination, the court might abstain from enforcing her ward's removal. This Provision we think, minimises the risks of abuse. * * * * *

"In the Punjab, we are particularly concerned with two other forms of irregular morals and cruelty to women, involved in mock-marriages and transfer of wives. Loose or uncertain marriages, which are to be classified under mock-marriages, are probably intended by the contracting parties to evade the provisions of law. In Lahore and other Punjab towns, the campaign started against prostitutes, driving them from respectable quarters, is said to have given a stimulus to mock-marriages under whose shelter certain whilom prostitutes evade the provisions of law. In some cases there are temporary contracts which are broken at will, and it is difficult to say if they are to be regarded as legal marriages. If marriages of this description are legally registrable by competent authorities and the alliances are locally recognised and regarded as such, there would probably be little or no objection. But whether registration of marriages could be voluntarily effected everywhere is doubtful. The Government of India doubt if any specific provisions dealing with mock-marriages are required. We think they would be unnecessary, if, in all cases complained of, the motive of the party on whom guilt is laid is first examined by a competent caste society or Panchayat. And as for transfers of wives—a custom very prevalent in the Punjab—it would be difficult to advise legislation; and yet to allow the scandalous slave trade, as at present, would be ruinous to social well-being. The abnormal social relationship of the Punjab must be dealt with separately. The Government of India desire to be informed whether there is any evidence of the prevalence of the sale of wives or transfer, necessitating the enactment of special provisions. We do not know what the Punjab Government will say in reply to this, but the present custom of transferring wives should be done away with. The parties are at liberty to divorce wives and set them free to contract fresh marriages if they like, but on no account should women be sold or transferred with or without their consent. It is not only degrading but positively cruel to the women themselves. We do not believe that women in the Punjab enjoy anything like individual liberty ascribed to them popularly or that their status is improving. The disparity in the number of male and female population has given men an extraordinary hold on women—and though women under the circumstances ought to get better terms, they are in a majority of cases subjected to gross cruelty and degradation. Punjab is considered as the hotbed of social evils and will never get a better name, until the offences against women and the vile habit of transferring wives are seriously dealt with. Here we have a social arrangement whose irregularity baffles sociologists. And we have now an opportunity for carrying out some radical reforms which we hope will be supported by Government and the cultured public. The progress of the Bill is likely to be watched with great attention and we hope that, while retaining all effective provisions, the social agency will be employed to facilitate enquiry and prevention as far as possible."

VII.—General Administration.

(b)—Police.

The Police.

28. Writing under the heading "Who are responsible for the bad name of the Police?" the Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 2nd November 1912, says that the force being composed mostly of Indians, the bad name acquired by it constitutes a reflection on the latter. It must be admitted, says the Shanti, that dacoits, thieves, makers of counterfeit coin and adulterers are to be found among the Police, and though the European Police Officers do indeed try to check the oppression practised by subordinates, yet there are very few Inspectors or Sub-Inspectors who expose mistakes committed by men employed under them. Rather, they throw a veil over such misdeeds, because otherwise it would be a case of the kettle calling the pot black. Every educated person ought to report at once to the Superintendent of Police any misdeed or act of oppression committed by any policemen. Continuing, the paper contrasts the number of Hindus and Muhammadans in the police, and says that it is glad to see that the force consists chiefly of Muhammadans, seeing that the Police Department (as constituted at present) has scarcely earned a good name. In spite of the fact that Government is aware of the present (unsatisfactory) condition of the Police, and that the force is composed mainly of Muhammadans, it does nothing in the matter. If Hindus were (more largely) employed in the Police Department, they would be certain to earn a good name for it; and they should even be compelled to enlist as an experimental measure. The press too should thoroughly expose oppressors, bribe-takers and the like in whatever community they may be found. Persistent agitation by the papers will assuredly influence the authorities one day and result in the Indian Police earning a good name. It is "our" duty to co-operate with Government in making the force popular.

(d)—Education.

The Aligarh Institute Gazette and foreign politics.

29. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 6th November 1912, publishes a leader headed "The Balkan War and the Aligarh College," in which it says that it sees nothing to be surprised at in Indian Muhammadans sympathising with Turkey and praying for success to her arms. It is, however, at a loss to understand what concern the vernacular organ of an educational institution can have with "politics of which the aim is the creation of feelings of animosity between Christians and Musalmans." The Aligarh College (? Institute) Gazette has recently called Italy, France and Russia to account over their doings in Tripoli, Morocco and Persia, respectively, attacking even the British Government in the course of its observations. This is, says the Akhbar-i-'Am, beyond the province of a College paper. The paper wonders whether in the event of Turkey ever invading India, the Aligarh College authorities would welcome her or fight on the side of their Government. It wishes to assure the present rulers of India in this connection that Hindus and Sikhs would prefer extermination to placing the Turks above the British. England's foreign policy is not shaped by India, and the decline of her power will commence on the day on which she fears to exercise her freedom of thought in political matters.

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

Export of gram and barley from India.

30. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 3rd November 1912, in a note headed "Grain Stocks," says that, according to the Trade Journal, very large quantities of barley and gram are being exported from India this year. According to the Pioneer, the continuance of this trade will bring agriculturists still larger profits, but, says the Rafiq, only stupid and idiotic people will part with stocks of grain in return for silver and copper. It is the irony of fate that unfortunate tillers of the soil in India should raise barley and gram crops after six months' hard labour, but that Germany, Belgium and other rich countries should turn up at the (harvest) time and should, in their pride of self and political power, carry away the grain and put silver into the pockets of agriculturists. This is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs, seeing that it has been adding to the number of the starving and of those who can afford only one meal a day.

(h)—Miscellaneous.

31. Writing under the heading 'Lord Hardinge's warnings to the Punjab,' the Panjabee (Lahore), of 9th November, makes the following remarks :—

"In the excellent little speech delivered by him in reply to the address presented by the District Board of Lyallpur, His Excellency the Viceroy administered two warnings to which we desire to invite the attention of both the people and the Local Government. The first of these was in connection with over-irrigation, wastefulness, increased sickness, sourness of land and deterioration of crop, the cumulative effect of which the average uninstructed peasant is hardly competent to judge, much less to foresee and obviate. * * *

"Two years ago Sir James Wilson was profuse in his praise of the excellent milling property of Lyallpur wheat. If experts in Pusa are now talking of deterioration of its quality the outlook is really serious. The only way to safeguard against the evil effects of over-irrigation is to educate the Zamindar, if not the actual tiller of the soil, in the application of water proportionately to the requirements of soil and crop. This, we presume, is now attempted in the short course of lectures proposed to be delivered in the Lyallpur College. The second warning administered by His Excellency was in connection with the growth of crime. In the District Board address the Deputy Commissioner stated: 'In common with other districts of the province we have to regret an increased prevalence of crime during the year, but the increase in this district is mainly accounted for by the rise in the population and the numbers of crimes of violence is not unduly high.' His Excellency was far from satisfied with this official explanation. 'You admit,' he said, 'the increase of crime within your borders, but are contented to remark that the number of crimes of violence is not unduly high. I will not argue with you as to the exact significance of that little word 'unduly.' I will only say that a land of plenty like this should be a land of peace, and that you will not be worthy of your good fortune unless you set your faces like a flint against crime and evil doing and develop a public opinion which shall make vice, immorality and drunkenness and violence slink ashamed from your midst.' There is no doubt that this admonition has been addressed for a much larger audience than had gathered together at Lyallpur. It is meant for officials prone to cry prosperity and, nevertheless, adduce extenuating circumstances for the prevalence of crime. It is also meant for those people who plead helplessness, without organising public opinion strong enough to influence and remodel social factors and official conduct alike. If we had vigilance societies in every division if not in every district, much could have been done in both the directions. We trust that as far as the Hindus are concerned His Excellency's suggestion will not go in vain and that the Hindu Sabha will energetically apply itself to this task."

The scheme for the new Sanitary Services.

32. In its leader the Tribune (Lahore), of 13th November 1912, publishes the following:—

"In his opening speech at the second All-India Sanitary Conference at Madras, Sir Harcourt Butler referred at length to the scheme for the new Sanitary Services. The inauguration of the scheme shows that the Government of India have now begun to give greater attention to the sanitary improvement of the country. * * * We are glad to find that the Hon'ble Sir Harcourt Butler assured in the course of his speech referred to above that, though Health Officers of the first class will, for the present, be required to possess a British diploma in public health, this condition will be removed as soon as arrangements can be made in India for the necessary training of such officers. * * As regards the qualifications of Health Officers of the second class, the Government of India have laid down that a good general education supplemented by a course of training in public health should be considered sufficient. The United Provinces Government, in their Resolution referred to above, accordingly decided that for Health Officers of the second class the main qualifications will be a good general education, together with the personal qualities of tact and energy. * * The terms 'personal qualities of tact and energy' are of an extremely vague nature and leave room for abuse and jobbery in the matter of making the appointments. We are glad, therefore, to find that His Excellency in Council regards a medical qualification as eminently desirable. * * Now that there has been a sanitary awakening in India, to which Sir Harcourt Butler bore eloquent testimony in his opening speech at the All-India Sanitary Conference which is now holding its session in Madras, we hope the inauguration of the new scheme of Sanitary Services will materially help in improving the sanitary condition of our towns and cities. We do not understand why our Province has been excluded from the scheme."

Public health in the Punjab.

33. In its leader the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th November 1912, publishes the following under the heading 'Sanitary Conference at Madras':—

* * * * *

"In the Punjab as we all know plague and malaria have decimated the population during the past decade, bringing about a loss of no fewer than 4½ millions through fever alone and nearly 2 millions through plague. What an appalling waste of human life and consequently of suffering there has been will be realised when we see the great depression in the mind of the people. Yet most of these deaths were preventible if the people knew and had the means of prevention and of protection. We have a pretty high birth-rate varying from 32 to 40, but the death rate is equally high and more than a fourth of the deaths are of the infants brought into life under insanitary environments. How people could be helped and taught is the problem of the sanitarian and Sir Harcourt Butler explained that two of the subjects to be considered were the utility of travelling dispensaries and town-planning. We think that preference should be given to these two questions and they have to be employed in all Municipal towns and even in villages. Town planning will introduce those elementary laws of adequate ventilation and space which are very necessary for healthy life, whereas the travelling dispensaries will carry treatment to the door of many rural population who otherwise suffer and perish. One is preventive or protective and the other is curative, and both of these have to be popularised. As regards town-planning, the President said that the evils of overcrowding and defective ventilation exist in all the great cities and are intimately connected with high death-rates and tuberculosis. But even as regards smaller towns and villages, a definite plan of improvement and expansion in the location of streets and lanes, the plan of houses, ventilation, drainage, etc., will have a very beneficial effect. How many thousands of people do not die of fevers contracted in places which are unfit to be habitable, but which for want of town-planning knowledge, are inhabited? When the question is fully dealt with by experts we hope that Local Governments will adopt a definite scheme of improvement and set an example to the people. When left to themselves or when their acquiescence is looked for, the people seldom welcome any change in their traditional mode of living. The popular belief in the unalterable decrees of fate and similar ideas have to be overcome by demonstrating that the observance of sanitary laws has a great effect on life. The people are not devoid of rational thinking and their co-operation can be secured by a wise application of moderate schemes.

" * * * * The actual loss of lives amounts to but fraction of the suffering caused by the diseases, which subject the weak and the unhealthy to slow torture. It is not the regard to the number of mere population, but to the reduction of human suffering and waste of vital energy that should urge the sanitarian to greater and greater efforts. Nor is the discussion of the theory and practice of sanitation enough to guarantee success. We have to remember the poverty of India and the feeble-bodied Indian earning, according to Lord Curzon's calculation, a fraction of an anna a day. How a man could hope to keep his body and soul together, not to say a healthy body, is a problem intimately connected with that of personal and public health. The economic condition of the people is an important contributary cause to the growth or decay of healthy body. Whereever people die of diseases like rats, we may be sure that economic decay is hastening the ruin of those localities whose sanitary conditions are destructive to life. Both these evils are at work and their joint influence is what we perceive in the mortuary and hospital statistics. It is the function of the conference also to discuss how far the economic facilities or disadvantages tend to promote or destroy healthy life in the masses of India."

Muhammadan officials in the Delhi Province.

34. The Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th November 1912, publishes the following :—

"The Delhi paper announces that the services of Khan Sahib Sheikh Abdulla, Deputy Superintendent of Police, are placed at the disposal of the Government of India for employment at Delhi as the head of the C. I. D. The Khan Sahib is doubtless fitted by experience and knowledge for the responsible position he has been called to fill. May we take this opportunity to invite the attention of the sympathetic and well-meaning Chief Commissioner, the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey, that the Police Department in the newest province is manned almost entirely by Muhammadans, that all the three Tahsildars are Muhammadans, that two out of three Naib Tahsildars are also Muhammadans? We are aware that the Hon'ble Mr. Hailey has had little to do with the choice in the office of origin; nevertheless we think it is our duty to invite his attention to the significance of the choice."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

The Balkan War.

1. The Watan (Lahore), of the 12th November 1912, publishes a translation of a Reuter's telegram to the effect that the Turkish Ministry of the Interior have issued a proclamation to point out that the war has not yet yielded any satisfactory result. If the alleged proclamation has really been promulgated, says the Watan, one can see nothing to be surprised at in Mr. Asquith's recent speech. The cowards (i.e., the Turks), who cannot, according to the said document, defend Tchataldja, the gate of Constantinople, are not likely to prove able to maintain peace in the capital on the entry into it of the enemy's countless forces.

In its issue, dated the 12th November 1912, the paper reproduces the Daily Telegraph's account of the retreat of the Turkish forces from Lule Burgas. Commenting on the same it remarks that the wretches of the Committee of Progress and Union have at last succeeded in working the ruin of the (Ottoman) Empire. What, it asks, can the Turkish soldiers achieve, when they can get neither bread nor cartridges, and their officers take to flight? It was foolish indeed to expect anything better from officers appointed after the deposition of the ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid. After remarking that debauchees could not have endured the hardships of war, the paper calls upon Abdul Hamid to break through his prison, step into the battlefield, and turn the tide of war.

The Civil & Military News (Ludhiana), of the 11th November 1912, publishes an article headed "European statesmen's constant fear." After remarking that there is a great fear of the European Powers being involved in the Balkan War, it observes that many Turks are of opinion that the Osmanlis should settle scores with all their Christian enemies once and for all, and that, if they are now to be driven out of Europe, they should sacrifice themselves after having let loose death among their (? Christian) forces. The Porte does not, however, approve of this measure just now, thinking as it does that Turkey is still strong enough to successfully cope with the Balkan States. There is consequently no reason for giving way to despair, and the Prophet's followers should pray for success to Turkey.

Writing under the heading "The Crescent and Cross," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 11th November 1912, says that the greed of the enemies of Islam, viz., the European Powers, has been whetted and they wish now to swallow up the fertile possessions of the Porte. This desire on their part becomes still keener at the thought that, if the sleeping lion, viz., the Muslim world, were to awake, acquire education and equip itself with modern arms, it would become most difficult, if not impossible, for them to prevail. A certain member of the European press is of the opinion that the Powers will have no hesitation in coming to the agreement that the allies should retain the parts of Turkey conquered by them, but that the Sultan should be acknowledged as having spiritual sovereignty over those territories. This means that the Powers wish His Majesty to give up all his possessions and to hand over the key of his treasury to (Christian) Europe; retaining his spiritual sway over the Muslim world, just as the Pope has his over Christendom. The Prophet's followers, however, including the Sultan himself, will never tolerate this humiliation and will rather die fighting. This is why the ruler of Turkey has not as yet expressed his willingness to conclude peace.

In its issue, dated the 12th November 1912, the paper has a note headed "A deep secret," in which it says that, in all probability, the reason for newspaper correspondents and military attachés not being allowed to go to the front is that soldiers of most of the European Powers, especially of France, Russia, Germany and Austria, are fighting on the side of the allies, regarding the war as being of a religious character.

In its issue, dated the 13th November 1912, the paper says that "the strong hands of Europe are laying out a (political) chess board" in the Balkans; that the war in progress there is an offshoot of the one between Italy and Turkey; and that Russia, France and Austria desire the removal of the Sick Man of Europe. Next it endeavours to find out the causes of the present troubles of the Turks, and goes on to remark that it is foolish for the Crowned Heads of Europe to think that the extinction of the Caliphate will either leave the Muslim world no centre to rally round, cause disunion in the ranks of Muhammadans or scatter the pages of the Quran to the winds, thus enabling them to snatch the sceptres of Morocco, Tripoli, Persia, &c.

The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 13th November 1912, has an article headed "War between the Cross and the Crescent. Origin of the Balkan War." It quotes extracts from the writings of the French Socialist, M. Jaures, contending that the present war is really between Christian Europe and Turkey. England undoubtedly holds herself aloof from the European confederacy, but this in no way weakens the confederacy. The deficiency has, besides, been made up by Mr. Asquith in his speech on the 9th instant.

The Balkan War and the Powers.

2. According to the Millat (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, it was written in a book called the Kawahib-ul-Darya that the Pope would invade Tripoli in 1330 A. H., that four European Powers would next unite and attack Turkey, and Constantinople would pass out of the hands of Musalmans. After all this the Imam Mehdi would appear. If the prediction about Constantinople comes true, a living nation will have been crushed. The allies have been pushed to the front by the other Powers to prevent the Muslim world regarding the rest of Europe with distrust. Italian reverses in Tripoli made the Powers fear lest Muhammadans might become too bold, and it was thought that, if it was not proved to the Turks that they were as nothing in comparison with Europe, they would continue holding their heads high and might even make some mischief. The war in the Balkans has been the result, and the great Powers have, instead of themselves taking the field, strengthened the allies' hands with soldiers, arms and money. The object in bringing Turkey to her knees by means of the (petty) Balkan States is to fill the cup of her humiliation to the brim.

Elsewhere the paper says that the despatch of ships to Constantinople at the present critical juncture must cause anxiety (to the Muslim world). It is to be feared, it adds, that the Powers have decided to use these ships to make Turkey accept whatever terms of peace they may propose. After expressing the suspicion that the said ships are intended to render help to the Bulgarians, the paper observes that, if the Powers do not intervene before the attack on Tchatdalja, it must be concluded that Europe has decided to wrest Constantinople from the Turks, whether the Bulgarians are defeated in the end or not. It would not be surprising, in view of the present agreement of the Powers, if the ships attacked Constantinople by sea, while the Bulgarians march on the city by land. The Porte has committed a gross mistake in permitting international warships to enter Turkish waters. Moreover, the ships are likely to cut off the retreat of the Turks to Asia Minor and to put them at the mercy of their enemies in Europe. Continuing, the paper says that Turkey will be injured by the Powers, even if she defeats Bulgaria, but if the Turks leave Europe at present they will again conquer Constantinople in "seven months".

The paper also reminds the Powers of Abdul Hamid's statement uttered on the occasion of the Armenian troubles, that, so long as even five Turks were left alive in Constantinople, Christians would never be able to pull down the Crescent flag. Next it refers to Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech, and says that it shows that the Powers are determined to seal the fate of Constantinople. They should, however, bear in mind that lakhs of persons will be killed there, and that even then the city will again pass into the hands of Muhammadans after "seven months". Continuing, it expresses satisfaction at the Sheikh-ul-Islam having appealed to the Turkish Ulemas to join the army and preach a holy War.

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War.

3. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th November 1912, publishes a letter headed "The Blood of Muhammadans." The blood of innocent Arabs and Turks, men and women and children, has been shed, says the writer, but it has not been shed in vain; rather will it bring about results that will surprise mankind. When the Sultan invoked the aid of the Hague Conference in connection with the Italian invasion of Tripoli and the threats of the Balkan States, all the European Powers turned a deaf ear to him and cunningly declared their neutrality, in defiance of every international law. Therefore, since the allies have attempted to impart religion into the Balkan War, Muhammadans (in India) should subscribe to the Red Crescent Society either some part of their savings, one month's income or the price of the skins of the animals sacrificed by them on the occasion of the ensuing Bakr-Id.

The Balkan War and the necessity for Muslim unity.

4. Writing under the heading "Is it Europe or Islam that is characterised by bigotry ?," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 14th November 1912, says that Europe desires the extinction of all Muhammadan kingdoms and therefore a religious colour has been imparted to the Balkan War, over which even the English have been glad. The wars in Tripoli and the Balkans have proved to the followers of Islam that it is foolishness "to incline towards or have friendly relations with any European Power." It is the duty of Muslim nobles and rulers to love their own, to hate others and to establish a strong Muslim brotherhood and promote union in all (Muhammadan) countries. Similarly, it is incumbent on all Muhammadans to render help to the Turks, whom the bigotry of Europe has compelled to wage a defensive jehad.

The British Government and the Balkan War.

5. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 13th November 1912, publishes a letter from its special correspondent at Simla, saying that Turkey has to fight, not the Balkan States, but the whole of Europe, and that the war is to decide the fate both of herself and the rest of the Islamic world. "We" were in great hopes that the King Emperor and his Government would stand by "the Turks and (other) Muhammadans," but these expectations have not been realized. Musalmans are aware of "what Sir Edward Grey has said about Persia and Tripoli and is now saying concerning Turkey and the Balkans." It is a pity that, while the allies are receiving help from every quarter in Europe, well-to-do Musalmans in India have not responded to the call from the Caliph and his Government for money in aid of the Turkish sufferers. All should subscribe towards the Turkish Relief Fund, asking Government to give a large sum of money in aid of the Fund and to make (Muhammadan) native chiefs follow its example. The writer makes the further suggestion that the money collected for the proposed Muslim University should be lent to Turkey; that the rich men and sahukars (among Muhammadans) should also help her with a loan; and that the Indian and Home Governments, too, should be requested to advance money to her and to make Islamic States (in India) do the same.

A prediction in regard to the Balkan War.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 11th November 1912, has a letter from Hassan Nizami, of Delhi, in which he reports that it was (recently) foretold by one Shah Mushtaq Ahmad Khan, a local astrologer, that the Balkan War would end favourably for the Turks on the 10th instant after a terrible battle between them and the allies on the 8th. Continuing, the writer states that he has received hundreds of letters enquiring from him why he has been keeping silent on the present occasion, whereas he wrote several articles on the Tripolitan War. His reply is that he sees a great happiness behind all the oppression (that is now being practised on Islam).

He believes that the advent of the Mehdi is near at hand, and that, if Christians are glad to-day, Muslims will be glad to-morrow, when the anxieties of the Crowned Heads in Europe will be chronicled in the papers. If the Turks are exterminated and driven out of Europe, Islam will survive even then, and conquer the heart of Europe with the aid of "another force". Muhammadans should not therefore give way to despair but should, on the strength of future hopes, help the Turks with both men and money. If they do not do so, they will have to hang down their heads in the Prophet's presence on the day of judgment. They should make liberal donations and await the unfurling of the green flag on the mountain at Mecca.

In its issue, dated the 15th November 1912, the paper prints a letter referring to the prediction and reporting that, after weary waiting, the telegrams (about Turkish successes) despatched by the Editor reached Delhi "last night". The news contained in them rapidly spread to all parts of the City, and the Red Crescent Society got handbills printed and distributed at 1 A.M., and some enthusiastic Muhammadans distributed sweets. The writer then states that all in Delhi feel indignant at the (recent) inopportune utterances of British Ministers. What, he asks, has come over British statesmen that they do things calculated to offend Muhammadan subjects? Mr. Asquith and Sir Edward Grey should realise what their responsibilities are. The news that the Sheikh-ul-Islam has advised the waging of a jehad has greatly heartened pious Musalmans. If the fatwa is acted upon, the situation will at once undergo a change. There is however the fear that Christian powers will be given yet another pretext to interfere (in the war), although they are already exercising every kind of interference. Next the correspondent states that the arrival in Delhi of Maulvi Muhammad Ali, Editor of the Comrade, has created great enthusiasm in the City. The Imam of the local Juma mosque, he adds, who used to be accused of being an Anglophil, is as popular to-day as he was formerly hated and is doing his best to collect funds for the Red Crescent Society. His efforts are being seconded by the raises in the City, who have made up their mutual differences. Meetings are also being held in all parts of Delhi, and even those Muhammadans, who were formerly ignorant of the difficulties of Turkey, have become active. Sheikh Nasir Ali, a book-seller of the Chilan Kucha, old-fashioned and of a retiring disposition, has, for instance, given Rs. 1,000 in aid of the Red Crescent Society. In conclusion, the writer reports that Shah Mushtaq Ahmad Khan has also cast the future of the Kings of Eastern Europe, and the forecast is reassuring for Muhammadans.

Egypt and the Balkan War.

7. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 11th November 1912, says that the Pioneer's Cairo correspondent reports that Said Pasha, Prime Minister of Egypt, has raised the question that, since Greece also has joined the Balkan confederacy, her representative at Cairo should be given his passport. After remarking that the correspondent named does not agree with the Egyptian Premier, the paper regrets that, while Christians are free to help the allies, (even) with the sword, Muhammadans are not permitted to do even a formal thing. It also disagrees with Lord Kitchener and the Pioneer's correspondent, who declare that, if such action were taken, the Greek fleet would bombard Cairo and Alexandria.

England and the War.

8. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912 :—

"Does the British press realize at all the incalculable mischief which is being wrought by its covert and open attacks on Turkey, and do English politicians pay a moment's thought to the seriousness of the situation which is being created by their almost one-sided speeches? The position is grave enough, and the Musalmans are deeply pained to find eminent public men and responsible journals in Great Britian indulging in undeserved diatribes against the Turks and trying to stir up racial feeling,—the feeling which threatens to degenerate into religious animosity and to revive in the twentieth century the gloomy memories of those dark days when sectarian passions were at their height and when religious antagonism had repeatedly brought two whole continents into sanguinary conflict. His Majesty's Government have no doubt issued a Proclamation of Neutrality; but two—nay, we are inclined to say, three—of His Majesty's Ministers, Mr. Masterman, Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Asquith himself, have made speeches indicative of sympathy with the Balkan Allies; while the Radical press has been profuse in its denunciations of the Turks and the Muslims. 'That the Christians should again be ruled by Muslims is a thing unthinkable,' declares the Star. The Bishop of Oxford, Dr. Clifford, and others have issued a manifesto inciting the people to a holy war, insisting that the Turks shall not, 'when at last challenged in war, be suffered to bear down by superior force the efforts of the defenders of liberty.' Mr. Masterman, on the very day on which His Majesty signed the Proclamation of Neutrality, speaking at the Radical Club, Bethnal Green, asked his fellow-Radicals to "take a sympathetic view towards those fighting in the cause of liberty and progress, and who have been sufferers through years from the murders and pillages of the Turks.' Mr. Masterman, who has been reminded that as a member of the Government he should not have said what he did say, is now disputing with the reporters whether he said what is attributed to him. And the next morning Mr. George Lloyd, a Tory member—a different person from the celebrated Mr. Lloyd George, himself a sinner in this respect—protested in the 'Times' against Mr. Masterman's views on the ground that 'there are many millions of British subjects in India who are being deeply moved by the Balkan struggle and that such careless words could be read by them only with pain and dissatisfaction.' * * * *

"We have taken pains to explain at length the open and enthusiatic expression of sympathy with the Balkan States, and equally vigorous denunciation of the Turks, in which short-sighted people in Great Britain are indulging, to bring home to Muslim readers the undercurrents of thought which run in English society. Matters have gone so far that they have forced that staunch champion of Muslim interests and true friend of England, the Right Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali, to come to the field, who addressed to the 'Times' a long letter on the subject. * * * * *

"It is further interesting to note that in the House of Commons attention was directed to Mr. Masterman's speech, referred to above, and it was pointed out by Viscount Wolmer, Lord C. Beresford, and others, that his opinion, coming as it did from a Minister of the Crown, was calculated to increase animosities between Christians and Muslims, as well as to lead other Powers to the conclusion that the British Government was no longer preserving an attitude of strict neutrality. Thereupon, the Prime Minister declared with great emphasis that the attitude of the Government was and would continue to be one of strict neutrality, and it was the duty of Ministers, as well as of every one else, to use no language inconsistent with that attitude. By way of emphasising these declarations, the King's Proclamation of Neutrality was read the same afternoon from the steps of the Royal Exchange. And yet soon after, Mr. Asquith, the responsible head of the British Government, speaking on another important occasion and in the course of a speech, which must have been previously thought out and prepared beforehand, talks of the fall of Salonika as that of 'the gateway through which Christianity first entered Europe,' and contends that things can never be again as they were and emphasises that 'it is the business of statesmen everywhere to recognize and accept the accomplished fact.' Surely, the Prime Minister is siding with the Balkan States, when he declares it to be his belief that upon one thing the general opinion of Europe is unanimous, viz., 'that the victors are not to be robbed of the fruits which cost them so dear'; while Mr. Asquith is full of the talk of 'the decisiveness of the result.' According to him, the map of Europe is to be rolled up and Turkey and the whole Muslim world are given definitely to understand that the Turks have nothing to hope for from England. There is not, throughout the lengthy utterance, at least as reported by Reuter, one word of sympathy with Turkey, not the slightest reference to the difficulties of her situation, though Turkey and England have in the past been bound by ties of the closest friendship, though Turkey rendered signal service to England on the occasion of the Indian Mutiny, and though an eager and unanimous prayer has gone forth from one hundred million loyal Muslim subjects of the King Emperor, to urge England to see fair play accorded to Turkey.

"In face of all this, the poignant feelings with which the Indian Musalmans have perused the telegraphic summary of Mr. Asquith's speech can be but dimly realised by those Englishmen alone who are in touch with the people here. The vapourings of Mr. Lloyd George might be dismissed as the utterances of a constitutionally irresponsible personality, and the rantings of Mr. Masterman might be safely disregarded as the outcome of a vulgar desire to court cheap popularity. But the well-considered words of one who is at the helm of British affairs must carry the greatest weight. Portions of the speech appear to read like a breach of British neutrality in favour of the Allies. The reference to Salonika as the place where Christianity entered Europe would have been more appropriate in the mouth of one who wanted to make an open appeal to the anti-Muslim tendencies of the populace; while the declaration that the victors shall not be robbed of the fruits of their victories comes with ill-grace from people who had a hand in depriving the Turks of their conquest of Thessaly. Had the war gone at the outset against the Allies, would Mr. Asquith have employed the same expression? Or should the Lord of Hosts ultimately favour the Turks—and there are faint indications of a possible turning of the tide—would the Premier stick to his words and see to it that the victorious Turks are not robbed of the fruits of their conquests? These are the questions which suggest themselves to the loyal subjects of His Imperial Majesty King George V. In any case, one would have expected, in the words of the London Muslim League, that 'if Englishmen cannot extend their sympathy to a Muslim State, which has been the deliberate victim of persistent intrigues and constant attacks, they might at least refrain, in the name of humanity, from offering incitement to a fresh Crusade, with all its attendant misery, suffering and distress.'"

Egyptian Greeks and the Balkan War.

9. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 13th November 1912, has a note headed "Fortunate Greeks of Egypt." The paper says that after its recent criticism of the British Protectorate (?)* in Egypt and British policy there, it is also necessary to inform its readers that the Government of Greece has called for about 15,000 volunteers from Cairo and Alexandria alone, and that, according to the Muyyid, 700 a day have been leaving for the front, with passports from the Greek Consul and crosses in their hands. These volunteers, most of whom were born in Egypt and rose from poverty to riches there, have also already subscribed £2,500 (in aid of their country). This means that wolves are nurtured on the blood of Egypt and are then let loose to attack her "mother."

Indian Muhammadans and the proposed Turkish loan.

10. Writing under the heading, 'the Sacrifice,' the Comrade (Delhi), of the 16th November 1912, makes the following remarks:—

"While we are on this subject, let us dispose of a few objections to the suggestion. His Highness the Aga Khan thinks 'he has been completely misapprehended.' 'Nothing,' says Reuter, 'is further from the truth than that the Aga Khan wishes the University Funds to be transferred to non-educational purposes.' We do not know who misapprehended His Highness and when; but if he refers to us we may equally well complain that we have been completely misapprehended. We have no desire to wreck the University scheme which we ourselves had suggested to His Highness on the accession of His Majesty King George V. Had we any such desire, we could have easily gratified it by asking for the return of our own contribution, however small, or its transfer to the Turkish Relief Fund. We are not too modest to think that at least a small, but fairly disconcerting, landslip would have occurred. But we have no such desire, and our mite is still safe in the University coffers. All we suggest is that the Capital Fund of the University should no longer remain as a loan to the Government of India, which has no need of it, but be lent instead to the Ottoman Government, which has evident need of it and of much more. This Fund is invested in Government of India paper to-day, and could as well be invested in Turkish securities to-morrow. That is surely not the same as the 'diversion' of the Fund to 'non-educational purposes.'

"It may, however, be said that Turkey is not as safe as the Government of India. That is no doubt true, but this only settles the question of comparative security. Whatever Turkey may be, she has still a National Debt exceeding 120 million sterling, and many non-Muslims and Europeans believe so far in Turkey, that they have not yet sold out all their Turkish stock, which is still familiar to the bourses of Europe. Yet it may be asked: 'May not Turkey become bankrupt after this war?' Our reply to this is two-fold. In the first place, the surest way to make Turkey bankrupt is for Musalmans themselves to doubt the solvency of Turkey. In the second place, if the Turk goes under, shall we mourn the brother that is drowned or the gold watch we had lent him which lies with him at the bottom of the sea?

"It has been suggested that the Turk is a hopeless failure; that he must go because he cannot govern; that Indian Musalmans are bolstering up a moribund creature that is past such endeavours; and that the Musalmans of India are better men and better Musalmans than those of Turkey. Now, frankly, we do not believe a word of this, much as this confession may be humiliating to us. Those who thus flatter Indian Musalmans are exactly the people who talk of efficiency and education when a Muslim candidate applies to them for a petty appointment. But, for argument's sake, let us say we believe every word of this comparison and proceed. Does all the reasoning supply a single reason for withholding from the Turks the practical sympathy of Indian Musalmans? Abraham Lincoln once rescued a pig vainly struggling in a miry ditch, and when people marvelled at his altruism, because he had ruined his clothes for a mere pig, he said with evident sincerity that all the talk of altruism was nonsense, for he rescued the pig only because he could not otherwise relieve the anguish of his own heart. Surely the Turk struggling heroically against the encompassing misery of his situation is not worse than the pig in the mire, and may not Indian Musalmans relieve the anguish of their own hearts as well as Abraham Lincoln?

"But a truce to all needless arguments, and let us turn to business. In reply to our cable to His Imperial Majesty the Sultan of Turkey, intimating that His Excellency the Viceroy had declared the advance of a loan to Turkey by Indian Musalmans to be in no way in contravention of His Majesty the King-Emperor's declaration of neutrality, and that we were carrying on negotiations with banking houses in India, we have received a letter in French from His Excellency Djafer Bey, the Ottoman Consul-General at Bombay, of which the following is a translation :—

OTTOMAN CONSULATE GENERAL,

Bombay, 7th November 1912.

MR. EDITOR,

I am instructed by my Government to thank you for the lofty sentiments which you have shown in carrying on negotiations with the Banks to whom the Government of India has given permission to advance money to the Ottoman Government, and to inform you that, in view of the impossibility of contracting a foreign loan, we have levied a war tax. We are going to issue Treasury Bonds for £13,000,000, offering as a guarantee the new impost. We shall pay through the agency of the Imperial Ottoman Bank and the Public Debt interest at the rate of 6 per cent., and we shall redeem the stock in three years at the rate of two instalments per year. We should like to know the quantity required in India. We shall send to the Banks mentioned by you as many bonds as you require.

I beg you to send me a reply and to accept my thanks in anticipation.

(Sd.) E. DJAFER,

The Consul-General.

Muhammad Ali, Esqr.,

Editor of the "Comrade,"

Calcutta.

'This has made our task easy, for no new loan need be raised in India. All that Indian Mussalmans need do is to invest a portion of their savings in the new Treasury Bonds. We are arranging with some banking houses in the country for receiving deposits with a view to effect purchase of these bonds, and in the meantime the Proprietor of the Comrade intends to go on a tour to the chief centres of Moslem activity to canvass for the ready sale of these bonds."

The Cross and the Crescent.

11. The following is from the Comrade, (Delhi), of the 16th November 1912 :—

"The fruits of the political Phariseeism of the times must, in all conscience, be bitter; but the European who has supplied the motive and created the enthusiasm for all that has been recently happening in Moslem lands should be the last person to complain of his handiwork. He can state his standpoint with admirable force and lucidity, and the world is familiar with the passionate denunciation and appeal of his arguments. But has he ever taken the trouble to understand the standpoint of the victims of his ambition or his zeal? Would he care to know the feelings with which a Musalman is watching the Balkan struggle and the passions that it has stirred in Christian Europe? Perhaps he would not. Those feelings, however, are bound to affect the destinies of a large portion of mankind and may considerably influence the course of the world's history. They may not count to-day, but they will count in human affairs some day, if Islam continues to be a vital force in moulding the lives of millions. What then are the feelings of the Musalman who has been following the course of events in Turkey? He knows that the Ottoman Empire is the last bulwark of Islam as regards its secular power and moral prestige. He knows as well that the enemies of that Empire are many and formidable, and that the Turk has been steadily losing his power and prestige through intrigue, diplomatic manœuvring and combined aggression. Since the establishment of the constitution in Turkey, he had been doubting if the attitude of Europe towards the Turk was honest and the cry for reform sincere. If the old Turkish methods of government were repellent to European Liberalism, the Young Turk régime ought surely to have been an object of its support and sympathy. Every device has, however, been adopted by her enemies, ever since the success of the constitutional movement, to thwart the regeneration of Turkey. Hostility and aggression increased as soon as the Young Turks began to apply more vigour and energy to the task of building up a reformed administration and a consolidated empire. The forces that could not tolerate a strong and rejuvenated Turkey drew together and at last took shape as the Balkan Confederacy. It adopted 'Macedonian reform,' as its war cry, for it must needs pay some concession to the sentiments of Liberal Europe. What it really wanted was the partition of European Turkey. The hypocrisy of the whole business became manifest when the Confederacy informed the so-called European Concert that it had no territorial ambitions whatever in its demands for reform, while it resolutely set itself to rouse the Balkan mobs with direct and open appeals to their lust for power and glory and to their race hatred and religious fanaticism. The manifestoes of King Ferdinand and King Peter to their respective peoples and the messages received by the King of Greece from his allies, all of which we publish elsewhere, lay bare the motives that have been applied to drive the mobs to battle. The 'Tsar' of Bulgaria refers to the 'Christian Liberator,' who had freed the Bulgarian nation, exhorts that nation in turn to liberate 'the Christians in Turkey,' and invokes the blessings of the Almighty and the sympathies of Christian Europe "in this struggle between the Crescent and the Cross.' The Servian King openly strikes a note of conquest, bringing in its train 'liberty, fraternity and equality.' The King of Greece had already suggested the device 'In hoc signo vinces' to his allies in 'the new Crusade for the deliverance of their oppressed brethren.' Christian bishops and clergymen have preached in churches and in the European press that the Balkan struggle was a Holy War, and that Molsem rule in Europe must cease because it was 'incompatible with the conscience of Christendom.' The conflict has been deliberately heated into a war of creeds, and its religious aspect has been emphasised with an insistence that is amazing. Even a statesman of Mr. Asquith's cool, clear mind and even temper felt the thrill of the moment and could not help reminding his hearers, at the Guildhall Banquet, of the significance of the capture of Salonica, 'the gateway through which Christianity first entered Europe.' England is neutral, but her Government is composed of Christians, and it should not be surprising if they feel a natural sympathy with their Christian brethren in the Balkans. Mr. Lloyd George had declared his hope at the outbreak of the war that one result of the war would be 'that the boundaries of freedom and good government would be extended.' That a responsible Minister of England can indulge in flagrantly one-sided speeches and make veiled though quite obvious imputations against Turkey conveys its own lesson. The sympathy of Mr. Masterman, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, was even more emphatically declared at Bethnal Green at a small Radical gathering. He asked his hearers 'to take a sympathetic view towards those fighting in the cause of liberty and progress, and who have been suffering for years owing to the murder and pillage of the Turks.' It is, however, satisfactory to know that there are Englishmen who sincerely resent such expressions of sympathy on the part of responsible members of His Majesty's Government and who realise the grave consequences to which such utterances may give rise. The letters of Mr. George Lloyd and Sir John Rees to the Times on the subject are reproduced elsewhere and will be read with interest. * * *"

"* * * The word 'Jehad' was supposed to possess immense imaginary perils, but the cry of 'Christendom' and 'civilisation' is becoming a much greater and much more real peril to the freedom and independence of Muslim lands. The official, who stopped a speaker at a recent Lucknow meeting because he desired to explain the futility of 'jehad' and cried halt to another who was appealing with more than necessary emotion for funds to relieve the sufferings of the Turks, had taken fright at an old bogey that can have no terrors in India. The terrors of the war-cries raised in the Balkans have, however, become very real for the whole Islamic world. The dark shadow of this new menace looms ominously across the future of Islam. Everywhere the Muslim is beginning to feel as if he stands at the parting of the ways. He is passing through a grave mental and moral crisis. While we trust he will recover his faith and optimism in his own future and the moral tendency of human things, we fervently hope the cynicism, the intolerance and the hypocrisy of modern times will teach him self-reliance without embittering his feelings or obsessing his mind."

Mr. Asquith on the Balkan War.

12. Writing under the heading "Time for destruction," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 13th November 1912, quotes an extract from Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech and says that its readers should reflect whether the Premier has expressed joy or sorrow over the Caliph's sceptre being in danger and whether he is a well-wisher of Turkey or of the Balkan States. It would, in this connection, also remind them of Sir Edward Grey's pronouncements. They should not lose sight of the attitude adopted by Lord Kitchener, also, towards the Prophet's followers in Egypt. "All these are lessons which Muhammadans.....should thoroughly commit to memory, for the reason that they are to be the causes of our extermination." Further, it should be borne in mind that, according to Reuter's Agency, the impression is gaining ground at Constantinople that Russia, Britain and France (the Triple Entente) are not favourably disposed towards the Turks. Is it not extremely unfortunate and painful for "us" that the King Emperor's responsible officers should express themselves like missionaries at public meetings, should ignore their responsibilities as rulers, and should lacerate the hearts of crores of subjects. The fact of Mr. Asquith having fearlessly made the above speech, not in some Church, but in the Guildhall, constitutes no insult to "us," because "we" are of no account to the Premier. There can, however, be no doubt that it cannot prove a source of much pride even for the occupant of the British throne. Will the Prime Minister—or some one on his behalf—say which it is more advisable to do at present, to allay by silence and kindness the excitement prevalent in a large part of the British Empire, or still further intensify it? He should know that in these days people cannot be cowed by ironclads or armies, and that it is by kindness only that their hearts and tongues can be controlled. The Governor of Bombay and the Commissioner of Oudh know statecraft a thousand times better than Mr. Asquith; whatever they may desire in their hearts, their tongues (at least) are with "us" in this hour of trouble. Next the paper strongly urges Muhammadans to hold meetings everywhere to protest against the Premier's sentiments, saying that, if these ideas obtain a footing in the British cabinet, "we" are utterly undone.

Hindus and the Turks.

13. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 12th November 1912, publishes a letter headed "Islamic Kingdoms and some Hindu newspapers." The Hindu journals, says the writer, are expressing joy at the (threatened) destruction of the Muslim States of Persia and Turkey; indeed, they are bound to behave in this way, seeing that they regard Musalmans as the enemies of Hindus, and there exist good grounds for this attitude on their part. Muhammadans overthrew the Hindu States and raised as many as seven crore followers of Islam in India. Muhammadans should not, however, mind the writings of these papers and ought to take steps to render help to their afflicted brethren in Turkey, who are fighting, not the Balkans, but almost the whole of Europe.

In its issue, dated the 13th November 1912, the paper remarks that it is gratifying to see that, in the Punjab also, there has at last appeared a thoughtful and statesmanlike Hindu, who has tried to impress on his co-religionists the real significance of the Balkan war. This real patriot has taken to task those narrow-minded Hindu papers that are misleading people from personal considerations—trying to convert the war into a Hindu-Muslim question, when in reality the struggle is between the East and West—and are prompting Hindus to wound the feelings of their Islamic brothers by sympathising, not with an oppressed Eastern State, but with the usurping powers of the West. This wise and open-hearted Hindu is Mahashai Satya Dev, of Amritsar, who has only recently returned after having travelled in European countries and acquiring higher education in Japan and America. In the course of his speech on "Who are our leaders?" in the office of the Arya Pritinidhi Sabha, Lahore, he made remarks to the above effect and repeatedly challenged (? the aforesaid Hindu papers) to tell him on what grounds it could be justifiable for Hindus to sympathise with the enemies of the Turks. Turkish rule in Europe was a memorial of the past greatness of the East, and every oriental should desire its preservation. Europe's racial hatred, pride and bigotry would have justified "us" in sympathising with the Turks, even if they had not been in the right. As it is, however, they are manfully fighting to defend their country against four usurping enemies.

The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 13th November 1912, says that the Muslim Gazette (Lucknow) complains of the attitude of its Punjab Hindu contemporaries in respect of Turkish affairs, and praises the Hindustani (Lucknow) for the sympathy which that paper has been extending to Turkey. The complaint is, however, unreasonable; the conduct of the Punjab Hindu press in regard to the Turks is wise and advisable. If Babu Ganga Pershad Varma, of the Hindustani, lived in the Punjab and "had tasted of the fresh favours hourly conferred (on Hindus) by (their) Muslim brothers," he would never sympathise with the Turks.

Elsewhere the paper speaks of the sympathetic attitude of the Bengali, the Mahratta and the Hindustani, and of Bepin Chandra Pal towards Turkey, and goes on to remark that, since Ottoman rule is represented to be the fountain-head of Indian Muhammadans' political importance and leads to Hindus being set down as a degraded and (politically) insolvent people, it is extremely foolish for members of the Hindu community to pray for any increase of prosperity to the Turks. Some idea of the trouble that this sai-disant political importance of Musalmans has made for Hindus can be formed only by Hindus in the Punjab. It was in this Province that the Muhammadans of Tamman (Jhelum district) recently plundered the shops and houses of the Hindus, to the accompaniment of drums and singing. If Bepin Chandra Pal and his family were settled in Tamman, all his sympathies for the Turks would evaporate in one short week.

The Punjab Hindus and the War.

14. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912:—

"While all the leading Hindu papers of this Province are openly rejoicing at the victories of the Balkan Confederacy, our Muslim contemporaries are smitten with a morbid desire to gain Hindu sympathy with the plight of their co-religionists in European Turkey. The Paisa Akhbar has gone so far as to ask the Punjab Hindus to follow the noble example of the Hindus of other Provinces and to subscribe to the Red Crescent Fund. But the more such appeals are made, the greater is the contempt with which they are rejected. It is a very undignified attitude which our contemporaries have assumed. If the Hindus of this Province will not see in the downfall of Turkey the disappearance of the only Asiatic Power in Europe and if they will triumph in the trumphs of the Balkan Allies as precursors of the destruction of the political importance of the Indian Musalmans, it is sheer madness to appeal to their professed love for the Orient or to point to the practical sympathy expressed by the Hindus of other parts of India. And it is interesting to note that, though hardly any one of the Punjab Hindus has subscribed to the fund for Turkish relief, many of them are contributing enthusiastically to the fund created by a Greek, Mr. Dallaparta, for the assistance of the Balkan aggressors. With such facts before them, Muhammadans would be devoid of all sense of shame if they continued to pray for the sympathy of Hindu Punjab. The lessons of the past few months should ever be engraved on the tablets of their memory and teach them to be true Muslims,—self-reliant, self-respecting and self-controlled."

Mr. Gokhale's visit to South Africa.

15. The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 13th November 1912, has a note headed "Mr. Gokhale's useless visit to South Africa." The reception, it says, accorded to the above gentleman by the authorities and whites of South Africa, led some Indians to hope that the grievances of their compatriots there would now be redressed. It was, however, pointed out by the paper at the very outset that "the Transvaal Government," which had ignored repeated advice even from the Indian and Home Governments, was not likely to listen to Mr. Gokhale. And this is what has actually come to pass; while even the Calcutta Capital writes that the Government named seems averse from settling the (Indian) question in a spirit of fairness. Next the paper states how three Indians were recently prevented from entering Natal, in spite of their knowing English well.

Elsewhere the paper publishes a translation of a recent note in the Pioneer about Mr. Gokhale's visit to South Africa, and remarks in comment that the Mahratta leader fully deserves the Pioneer's praise, but that there is absolutely no truth in the paper's charge against Indian immigrants that they have been carrying on an unconstitutional agitation. It would appear that the authorities in South Africa wish to put off Mr. Gokhale with feasts and have no intention of ceasing to oppress Indians, while the Pioneer defends the excesses committed by them. That paper's sympathy with the Boers and apathy towards Indians show its praise of Mr. Gokhale to be selfish and hypocritical.

The Loyal Gazette (Lahore), of the 17th November 1912, says that the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale has suggested that the only way to end Indians' grievances is to place them on a footing of equality with other subjects. The suggestion, however, concerns only those Indians who are already settled in South Africa, and does not touch the general question of the entry of Indians into the Union. It would, nevertheless, be a matter for satisfaction, if even this proposal were adopted to begin with.

Hindu-Muhammadan Unity and affairs in the Near East.

16. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 16th November 1912 :

"It is interesting to hear of occasional suggestions for Hindu-Muhammadan unity. Sir William Wedderburn held a special meeting three years ago. At that time the Muhammadan star was in the ascendant and, of course, no Moslim cared for unity then and his joint committee is now forgotten. Since then Italy took its cudgels against the Arab in Tripoli. The blow was heard all over the Muslim World. Mr. Amir Ali bled profuesly and he at once suggested Hindu-Muhammadan Unity. We were wondering at the Muslim attitude. Now the Tripoli war is ended and a more serious Balkan War is being waged. If Turkey had won a few battles to her credit, or if the Powers had assisted it, the Indian Muslims would not have cared for the friendship of Hindu lambs. But the series of defeats and the more serious consequences have apparently upset their forecasts.

"It is somewhat amusing to see how, when trouble comes, the Muslims deign to seek for our friendship. But really how can the Hindus help them? The Hindus are not a fighting or aggressive race and cannot win back Tripoli and Macedonia to the Turks. The Hindus are not a 'politically important' race, to win the diplomatic 'favours' of the British Government on behalf of the Muhammadan States. The Hindus are not a diplomatic people either, to negotiate for international alliances. Moreover, they still have the ghastly wounds and scars of centuries of Muslim 'blessings', and the last scar is not healing fast enough. Fresh blows are being hurled. Of course the Hindus are a patient, enduring race and would gladly help any one in distress if they can. But what are the ways and means? We remember the stories told by Æsop to children and some of them convey morals good enough for all time. Let the Hindus be ever friendly to all within India, but they will not lend a hand in making international designs."

The Shaikh-ul-Islam and a holy war.

17. Writing under the heading, 'A Jehad against the Allies,' the Observer (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"The Shaikh-ul-Islam cannot be accused of undue haste in asking the Ulama to join the Turkish army and preach a holy war. Ever since the outbreak of hostilities, the Allies have appealed to the fanatical instincts of their soldiers through Christian priests. But while the Balkan States have preached a crusade, the Turkish Government has turned the other cheek to the smiter by appealing to the 'patriotism' of its subjects, 'patriotism' which has been exhibited in the flight of the Christian inhabitants who were liable to military service and in the Christian soldiers surrendering to the Allies and creating a panic in the Turkish army by their example. Had a policy of tit for tat been adopted from the first, it might have averted the war. At least, the Turks would never have sustained the reverses which have overtaken them in the name of the 'fatherland.' The cry of a holy war seems to be a somewhat belated one at the present moment, and will be interpreted by the enemies of Turkey as a circuitous route to inviting intervention. The Turkish Cabinet, guided as it has been by Kiamil Pasha, has misunderstood the forcers arrayed against the Khilafat. But the appeal for a holy war, though late, cannot but be attended with good consequences. It will inspire the Turkish soldier with invincible heroism and nerve him to repeat the noble exploits of his fathers. If Europe cannot control an expression of its sympathies with the Allies, let it at least keep out of the ring and give fair play to both sides. The present situation should teach Kiamil Pasha that the 'friends of Turkey' are a broken reed to lean upon and induce him to reconsider his mendicant policy and adopt one of unflinching courage, If Turkey can be saved at the present moment, there is no other course left for those who guide its destinies. A rift in the lute of the Allies, as suggested in connection with Salonika, or an extension of the area of hostilities are not without the range of practical politics. But it would be imprudent to trust to any such contingencies. A strong arm and trust in God alone can keep the Turks in Europe."

Bengal Hindus and sympathy with Turkey.

18. Writing under the heading, 'Sympathy with Turkey,' the Tribune (Lahore), of the 21st November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"The present difficulties of Turkey have had a most beneficial effect upon the relations of Hindus and Muhammadans in Bengal. Turkey is entitled to the sympathy of all Asiatic races, irrespective of creed and political persuasion. The downfall of Turkey means the disappearance of the last vestige of an Asiatic Power, and this is a prospect which no Asiatic race can contemplate with equanimity, far less with pleasure. In Bengal, meetings have been held at which Hindu leaders have expressed their earnest sympathy with Turkey in her distress, but a still more tangible token of sympathy is the readiness with which Hindus and Muhammadans alike have contributed to the funds of the Red Crescent Society. A most wholesome effect of this co-operation is noticeable in the celebration of the Bakr'id festival. In 1910 it was the occasion of serious rioting in Calcutta between Marwaris and Musalmans, and special precautions have had to be taken by the police since that year. The telegrams for the last few days about the situation in Bengal have been most reassuring. Although arrangements were made in Calcutta to meet any emergency that might arise, no trouble was anticipated. Hindus and Muhammadans have joined hands and both communities have subscribed to the Red Crescent Society. Muhammadans have determined not to wound the feelings of Hindus by killing cows during the Bakr'id. The Nawab of Murshidabad, the premier Muhammadan nobleman in Bengal, has issued a notice to that effect. Similar notices have been issued at Jessore, a Muhammadan centre. Trouble was expected at Telinipara, a small town near Serampur, but the measures taken by the authorities should prevent a breach of the peace. While we all regret the humiliation of Turkey and her distress, it will not be an unqualified misfortune if it has the effect of bringing Hindus and Muhammadans in India closer together, for it will justify the saying that out of evil cometh good."

Lady Hardinge and the Red Crescent Society.

19. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 14th November 1912, has a note expressing satisfaction at Lady Hardinge's sympathetic reply to Mrs. Habib-ur-Rahman's request for a subscription towards the fund started by the Muslim women of Quetta in aid of the Turkish sufferers. The paper also expresses a hope that Her Excellency's sympathy will create fresh zeal among Muhammadan women.

Lord Hardinge and the Red Crescent Fund.

20. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of 16th November 1912:—

"Lord Hardinge has given another example of the nobility and greatness of British statesmanship by becoming the patron of the Indian section of the Red Crescent Fund. He has given a liberal donation of Rs. 1,000. Provincial Governors have also acted nobly in a similar way. Subscriptions are being collected in every town and city and even ladies are busy collecting subscriptions to relieve distress. I read that the English ladies and French ladies are similarly collecting funds for the relief of Christian sufferers. As this is a purely humanitarian act, I should like to ask why a Red Cross Fund is not also started in India. Do not the Indians feel for all suffering humanity? If some missionary gentleman starts a Red Cross fund, I dare say the Indians will give a practical example of their catholicity by subscribing to the funds."

A Muslim meeting and the Commissioner of Lucknow.

21. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, publishes a letter describing a large meeting of the Lucknow Muhammadans, held on the 9th instant, under the presidency of Mr. H. V. Lovett, the Commissioner. In the course of his remarks, he states that one of the speakers, Mr. Mumtaz Husain, Barrister-at-Law, observed that non-Muslims were under the impression that the Prophet's followers were brimful of the spirit of Jehad and strife, and that but a slight pretext was sufficient to rouse them into action. He added by way of reply that, although the present was a most dangerous time for them, they had proved by their loyal conduct that they were not a bigoted and mischievous people and that it was the other nations that had been more intolerant. The president took these remarks ill and stopped the speaker, and the same treatment was accorded to another Muhammadan who, in appealing for funds, wished to relate a few stories about the Turks wounded in the war. Continuing, the writer states that the (Muslim) public of Lucknow is full of complaints of the conduct of the local leading Muhammadans in having selected the Commissioner to preside at a purely religious meeting. Their habits of flattery, he adds, have brought disgrace on Musalmans, and God alone knows what the future has in store for them.

Commenting on the above, the paper remarks that the report of Mr. Lovett's speech in the Civil and Military Gazette contains some remarks which a British officer of his position ought never to have made. He said for instance that "we had our lives to live, our own daily tasks to perform and that no good could result from complicating these tasks by vague agitation, however well-meaning." This shows that he is utterly ignorant of the fact that Islam is a great brotherhood and permits no distinctions of colour or race. Moreover, if his views had been shared by (all) Europeans, the recent bloodshed in the Balkans would have been averted. As it is, the Christians of Europe have not only extended their sympathies to the Allies, but have also helped them with money and men. Does Mr. Lovett, asks the paper, want the Prophet's followers to abstain from sympathising with the guardians of Mecca and Medina? After contending that they have remained thoroughly loyal to the British throne at the present juncture, it regrets that he should regard their sympathy for Turkey as a piece of sedition, owing simply to its being loudly expressed. Referring to his conduct in stopping Mr. Mumtaz Husain, it observes that, being a highly placed officer, Mr. Lovett can seal the lips of the people of his division, but that he cannot control their hearts. Besides, Mr. Mumtaz Husain wanted only to show that it was not Muhammadans but others who were engaged in a Jehad, a fact which, says the paper, cannot be denied.

Egyptian affairs.

22. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 12th November 1912, publishes a leader, headed "Occasion for surprise." It begins by saying that Lord Kitchener is displeased with Said Pasha over the latter's sense of "national self-respect and feelings of nationality." His Lordship prevents the Egyptian Premier from sympathising with Turkey and has at last threatened to deprive him of his portfolio. Next the paper states that the Pioneer's (Cairo) correspondent is of opinion that Husain Rashidi, Minister of Justice, should be dismissed in connection with the case against Sheikh Shawadesh. His reason for the suggestion is that the prosecution has made the Sheikh a national martyr and hero; but, if a nation has life, even men of a lower position than that of Shawadesh come to be worshipped by it; witness the cases of Lajpat Rai, Tilak and "the Bengali patriots," who have acquired honour owing simply to their having placed their lives in danger for the sake of "the nation and the country." And, if the dictum of the Pioneer's correspondent had been followed, many civilians in Bengal and the Punjab, perhaps the European rulers of those provinces also, would have been summarily dismissed. In conclusion, the paper says that the Egyptians should vigorously agitate that, in future, cases like the above should be disposed of independently of Lord Kitchener and his official influence, for the reason that the British Agent in Egypt sees everything through Western spectacles.

India Office Finances.

23. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, has a note headed "Indian cash balances in England," in which it says that the controversy about the India Office finances in the British press and Parliament has led to the exposure of some incredible things. It has, for instance, been admitted that a considerable part of the Indian gold reserves at the Secretary of State's disposal has been lent out at a very low rate of interest to firms with which certain members of the India Council are connected. Similarly, a very large quantity of silver is bought for this country through Messrs. Samuel, Montagu and Co., one of the share-holders of which, viz., Sir W. Samuel, is a prominent member of the Liberal Government. After remarking that the surname of Mr. Montagu, Under-Secretary of State, is borne by another share-holder, the paper says that the state of affairs described is deserving of serious consideration, and that a great deal ought to be heard even in the Imperial Council about the above disclosure.

IV.—Kine-killing.

Sacrifice of cows on the Bakr 'Id day.

24. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 18th November 1912, states that some recent telegrams from Calcutta hint that certain Muslim leaders there are thinking of preventing the sacrifice of cows on the coming 'Id day, in order to induce Hindus to give money for the Red Crescent Society.

It is not, however, to spite Hindus, that Muhammadans kill cows; the question is only an economic one and there is no necessity for imparting a political colour to it. As to Hindus rendering pecuniary help, the matter is one of fellow-feeling, and "worthy" Hindus in every part of the country are already obliging Muhammadans by giving money for the Turkish wounded.

V.—Native Societies and Religious matters.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

25. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 14th November 1912, has a note headed "Cow-killing by Muhammadans at a Hindu well." The Prophet's followers, it says, are welcome to go and throw away their lives in defence of usurping Turkey. Why should they, however, pursue the poor Hindus for no reason and daily devise new plans to offend and injure them? The news comes from Bahawalpur that (recently) some mischievous Muhammadans killed two cows at night at the well of a Hindu Seth. It is foolish for Hindus to say in spite of all this that they should sympathise with oppressive Turkey.

Dharmpal's Vedas and Swami Dayanand.

26. The Jiwan Tat (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, has a review of Dharampal's "Vedas and Swami Dayanand" The author, says the reviewer, not only declares that he no longer believes the Vedas to be the word of God, but also shows that the Swami's translation has been stuffed with extremely dreadful and dangerous teachings of battle, murder and rapine. The result of this teaching can only be unrest, fighting and enmity between man and man. The author substantiates his contention by quoting extracts from Dayanand's translation of as many as 125 verses in the Yajur Veda alone. It is to be regretted that he has not also had the courage to declare his disbelief of the Quran, the Bible and other religious books as inspired books on like grounds. The reviewer, indeed, is of opinion that, if other quotations were cited from the Vedas as translated by the founder of the Arya Samaj, all impartial people at least would say that no one could take the Vedas as his guide on the strength of Dayanand's translation if he knew anything of the real contents (of which most Aryas are entirely ignorant). It is possible of course for a person to follow Dayanand's preaching solely from a desire to profit by the mistaken beliefs of Hindus. If the number of verses in the translation relating to the acquisition of riches, the avoidance of sin and vice and attainment of higher spiritual life be counted, one would discover that the book is the work of an out-and-out materialist, filled only with low, worldly desires; but it would be a gross mistake to speak of it as a religious book or one calculated to do spiritual good to man. It teaches much that is sinful and vicious, and is couched in such vague, meaningless and faulty language that it is an insult to human intellect to call it the work even of a man of ordinary understanding, let alone the Creator of the Universe. It might indeed be truly called the ravings of a madman; and if, says the reviewer, educated Hindus were really honest in their religious convictions, they would have seen through the gross hypocrisy of which Swami Dayanand has made use in the preparation of his translation of the Vedas. They would then have been able to judge what position ought to be assigned to a man who led a life of continuous hypocrisy.

The Vedas and Swami Daya Nand.

27. The Indar (Lahore), for November 1912, is entirely devoted to a criticism on the Vedas and, the teachings of Daya Nand. The Editor quotes translations of some three hundred Mantras from the different Vedas and, after comparing the same with certain detached passages from the Sattyarth-Parkash, he comes to the conclusion that these Hindu religious scriptures are not inspired books. He goes on to say that he is altogether opposed to the general belief that a universal revival of Vedic culture will lead to peace and prosperity. On the contrary the Vedas preach nothing but war, fight, loot, murder, etc. The Vedic hymns are barbaric and in some cases even very dangerous. The world does not want such Vedic religion, but wishes rather to liberate itself from its clutches. In conclusion, the writer remarks that the dangerous education taught by the Vedas is sending forth its dreadful flames towards the sky and crushing the world under the unbearable burden of practical Vedic religion (sic).

VI—Legislation.

The Punjab Council Regulations.

28. In its leader, the Tribune (Lahore), of the 17th November 1912, publishes the following :—

"Our esteemed London contemporary, India, in noticing our forecast of the Punjab Council Regulations published in these columns in September last, fully endorses our remark that the reform Regulations for this province stand as badly in need of revision as ever. Our comments on the Regulations were made on the strength of unofficial information and were, as such, liable to correction on the official publication of the Regulations. Unfortunately, our forecast proved only too true. We said that the District Boards, on which has now been conferred the privilege of electing three members of the Punjab Legislative Council, were bodies composed generally of nominated members, that they were the happy dumping ground of ignorant Zamindars and Zaildars, and that the educated element was at a discount in these bodies. An analysis of the figures of the preliminary electoral roll will show that our criticism was by no means far-fetched. In the Cis-Sutlej group, out of a total of 217 voters, at least 129 are Zaildars and Lambardars. In the Central group of District Boards, out of a total of 201 voters, 102 or more than 50 per cent., are Zaildars and Lambardars. In the Western group, out of 420 voters, 132 are Zaildars and Lambardars. It is also well-known that the majority of the voters of the District Board groups are nominated by the Government. Indeed, in the Western group, nearly all the District Boards are composed wholly of nominated members, and in other groups, nomination is the general rule, the elective principle being recognised in a feeble manner in a few Boards. The extension of the privilege of election to the District Boards is therefore a most dubious boon. It does not require any gift of prophecy to say that the nominated members, who swamp the Board, will generally return legislators of the type with which we are familiar. We were, therefore, not at all wrong when we refused to regard the extension of the franchise to District Boards as an enlargement of the elective principle. As regards municipal groups, their value as popular electorates is greatly discounted by the prevalence of sectional representation in some 12 Municipalities of the Punjab (members whereof, as has been admitted by the Government in the Municipal Administration Review, are men of extreme views) and by the mixing of Cantonment Committees therein, consisting of nominated members. Leaving aside the Panjab University, which cannot be said to be a purely Indian body, the only other electorate is the Punjab Chamber of Commerce, which is sure to return a European. It is only by accident that the result of the representation of the Panjab University happens to be a popular one. In fact, it is due to the personal popularity of the present representative with the European members. We may, therefore, truthfully say that there is not a single electorate, the composition of which can be said to be altogether satisfactory from the view point of the representation of the educated public. There has been indeed very little in the revised Council Regulations to enthuse over.

"The sense of public disappointment at the revised Regulations is deepened by a comparison with the Regulations of the other provinces. Nay, even the most backward province in India, Assam, will get a Council, similar in size to that of our Council, but containing no less than 11 elected members, as against 8 of our own Council. It is our rightful claim that, leaving aside the Presidencies, our province is ahead of every other province in point of culture, commercial and industrial enterprise, as well as educational, social, religious or philanthropic activity. Nay, our Muhammadan friends say that the Punjab is politically more important than any other province. But in point of administrative reform, the Punjab seems destined for the last place, even the swamps of North-Eastern India being given precedence over it. The question concerns and vitally concerns all Punjabis, whether Hindus or Muhammadans. The Muhammadans in this province claim to be more progressive than their co-religionists elsewhere and we ask them in all seriousness whether they are content with the status of their province, which from the administrative point of view is inferior even to Assam. Here is a golden opportunity for united action. Let all sons of the Punjab band themselves together to remove the wholly undeserved stain on their province. Let them agitate for an enlarged Legislative Council and for a majority of elected members in it. Let them show that they strongly resent the insinuation that they are not fit for an extension of the elective system and that they are more backward than the Assamese.

"It may not be out of place here to enquire into the reason why the Punjab has been accorded all along a stepmotherly treatment in respect of the privilege of reformed Councils The reason is that the province has been ill-served both by its officialdom and some self-styled leaders. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was perhaps unduly hard on the Punjab officialdom in his well-known book, The Awakening of India, but there can be no denying that the bureaucracy here is by no means progressive in its ideas. A well-known Punjab official, now dead, when asked his views on the respective merits of nomination and election said that in ancient times the throne was surrounded by the arkan-i-daulat who were always nominated by the Sovereign and never elected by the people and no departure should be made from the ancient precedent. This view is typical of the Punjab bureaucracy, barring only one or two exceptions. It does not occur to them that the hands of the clock are moving fast even in the conservative East and progress cannot be stopped, in order to let the laggard arkan-i-daulat to catch up. And it is this officialdom, which made short shrift of the Council reforms in this province. Indeed, Sir Louis Dane once observed that, in throwing open five seats to election, he acted against the advice of the most experienced officers of the Province. To our shame, it must be confessed that their efforts were fully seconded by some soi-disant and self-seeking titled gentlemen. It may be remembered that, during the discussion of the Punjab Municipal Bill in the Provincial Legislative Council, Mr. Fenton made a flourish of these views and said that any extension of the elective principle would be opposed to the best opinion of the province. There were other gentlemen who could speak with experience and authority on the question and who had spoken in favour of the elective system, but their opinions were ignored by the Government for reasons of its own. The Government did not choose to consult again with the public at the time of the revision of the Regulations. Thus it is that we have been condemned to an administrative status, worse than that of every other province. For the present, the Regulations cannot be amended. We must wait for another three years. But we should not rest on our oars. As Mr. Shadi Lal said in his presidential speech at Delhi, far from being discouraged by the failure that has hitherto dogged our footsteps, the seriousness of our disabilities should spur us to further and more vigorous action than we have hitherto taken. It is to be trusted that both Hindus and Muhammadans of the province will combine in this effort."

The Revised Imperial Legislative Council Regulations.

29. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore) of the 23rd November 1912 :—

"We find thus that while the non-official members of the several Provincial Legislative Councils, together with the District Councils and Municipal Committees in the Central Provinces are to return thirteen Members in all to the Supreme Legislative Council, the landholders will have the privilege of returning as many as six members, and the Muhammadan community as many as five from their special electorates. This shows clearly the unsatisfactory nature of the regulations which favour certain communities at the expense of others. It is to be very much regretted that while the Bengal, Bombay, Madras and United Provinces Legislative Councils will each be able to return two members to the Supreme Legislative Council by the votes of their non-official Additional Members, the non-official members of the Council of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab will be permitted to return only one member. While the Muhammadan community and the landholders in other Provinces have been permitted to return their representatives to the Supreme Legislative Council, the Governor-General in Council has reserved the right of nominating one member from the Muhammadan community in the Punjab and another from the landholders of the Province. We do not understand why the landholders and the Muhammadan community in the Punjab should not be deemed fit to enjoy the privilege of electing their representatives to the Supreme Legislative Council when the landholders in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, in the new Province of Behar and Orissa, and in the Central Provinces, and the Muhammadan community in Behar and Orissa and in the United Provinces are permitted to elect their representatives. In the matter of the Regulations for the nomination and election of Additional Members to the Provincial Legislative Council as also to the Imperial Legislative Council no Province has been treated so shabbily as the Punjab. We had so long been hoping that when the revised regulations were introduced these anomalies would be removed and our Province fare better. But our hopes have been dashed to the ground and we have now to wait for another three years before anything can be done to improve the present unsatisfactory position. We are glad to find that it has now been distinctly laid down that no person, who is an official, shall be eligible for election as a Member of any Council."

(d)—Education.

Proposal for a new Muslim University.

30. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 20th November 1912 :—

'In a series of articles contributed to the Aligarh Institute Gazette, Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk has discussed the University question in detail: * * *

" * * * If no fair compromise can be struck off between the Secretary of State and the Indian Muslims on the University question, Nawab Mushtaq Husain would suggest the establishment of a University which would practically be absolutely independent of Government. Let the M. A.-O. College and the Lahore Islamia College be maintained for those who seek Government service, let fresh schools and colleges be started on the same lines wherever necessary and be affiliated to the Government Universities; but schools and colleges should also be opened for those who do not seek Government service—educational institutions for the sons of Muslim Zamindars, Taluqdars and other wealthy people for the sons of big merchants, manufacturers and capitalists, for the sons of religious and spiritual leaders, for the sons of Yunani physicians, for the sons of artists, artisans and working people, and for the hundreds of thousands of students who are too poor to join a school affiliated to a Government University. The writer would impart to these classes education suited to their requirements through the vernacular and in institutions which would be affiliated to the proposed new Muslim University only. The University would thus be an all-India one and take under its wings schools and colleges affiliated to Government Universities, as well as those which would be suited to the genius of the Indian Musalmans. The scheme is a most ambitious one. It would require ten times the thirty lakhs already subscribed and hundreds of selfless workers to carry it into execution. But, as the Nawab points out, it would create for itself an enthusiasm which would far transcend that generated by the project still before the Muslims. We are, however, afraid that the writer is oversanguine. The fate which already seems to be in sight for the existing University scheme will not encourage Muslims to participate in fresh schemes emanating from Aligarh. It would, therefore, be well to make the best use of the money already subscribed."

M. A.-O. Educational Conference and the Muslim University.

31. One Ahmad Shafi Minas, of Lahore, contributes the following to the Tribune (Lahore), of the 21st November 1912 :—

"Sir—The All-India M. A.-O. Educational Conference may legitimately feel proud of the record of solid useful work it has done since its birth. A glance at the past would bring out in relief that the idea of raising the Aligarh College to the status of a University has figured prominently till to-day, when matters have come to a head. The forthcoming meetings of the Conference will chiefly be concerned with suggesting, asserting, maturing, and elucidating the reasons for rejecting the modifications and alterations suggested by the Secretary of State in the constitution drafted for the governance of the Muslim University as conditional to the grant of a Royal Charter. The need at the outset of the agitation for a sectarian University was emphatically justified on the grounds of the tendency of the neutral system of education to lead the young Musalmans astray from the Sarat-ul-mustaqim (right path). It was dreamt at that time that by means of purely religious (not necessarily unscientific) as opposed to godless education we, the Musalmans of India, would revive the old glory of Baghdad, Cairo, and Granada. But as ill-luck would have it all dreams of the revival of the Muslim literature, learning, civilisation, and culture were frustrated by the astounding decision of the Secretary of State to refuse the right to educate the whole of India to a solitary University at Aligarh. At once the cry was raised that great injustice was done to the faithful subjects of the Crown, and it was resolved at the spur of the moment to refuse to accept the decision and to appeal for its reversal. It surpasses the wit of a matter-of-fact onlooker how a community that only recently cried hoarse on the urgent need and importance of self-educating its youths mainly on the plea of their failure to receive a religious education by any other means, can conveniently afford to ignore the importance and importunity of that very need to-day, when it is deemed fit to limit the experiment to a few hundreds of youths and to save whole Muslim India being plunged in the unknown. Sahibzada Aftab Ahmad Khan at this juncture stepped in and, with that judicious judgment and well balanced mind that has characterised the public career of this gentleman in matters educational, advised the clamourers to accept the half-loaf (the first half, as he said) offered, but the stubborn 'no' of the obdurate man without did more than ever convince the passersby that hunger was only an excuse to wring out something from within. Without any disrespect to anybody and with all regard to their various opinions it may be said that the attitude adopted is characteristic of an unsatiable beggar. Still more amusing is the objection raised at the change of name. It only shows how strong a part the sentiment is playing in the Indian body politic. Has not 'the Aligarh College' become the duplicate of 'the M. A.-O. College, Aligarh' without offence to the subtle susceptibilities of our friends? Has not the name of Aligarh acquired a pervasive aroma of Muslim air about it? Verbum-sap!

"A preposterous suggestion is put forward to utilise the sum accumulated for the Muslim University for the Red Crescent Society. The only saving factor in the situation is the faint hope that the better mind of the community may prevail at the next deliberations of the Educational Conference and the people be saved a degrading disgrace."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Hindustan's complaint against the Fouji Akhbar. A contradiction.

32. The Millat (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, publishes a communication headed "The Hindustan's mistake." The writer says that he cannot understand why the Hindustan should blame the Editor of the Fauji Akhbar for an advertisement in the paper for tenders for the supply of beef to the Commissariat Department, Multan. All questions connected with advertisements are decided by Rai Bahadur Mohan Lal, Manager of the Fauji Akhbar. There is moreover no truth in the Hindustan's assertion that pressure is brought to bear on Hindu and Sikh soldiers to subscribe to the said paper.

Mr. Montagu and the Hindus.

33. Writing under the heading "The Right Hon'ble Mr. Montagu," the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"Lahore, the capital of the Punjab, is almost the first city of importance in British India which Mr. Montagu has visited. After landing at Bombay he went straight to Simla and saw how the rulers can hide themselves there for six months in the year away from al popular influences. He then saw the primitive conditions obtaining in the North-Westernl border and the slowly changing conditions in the Native State of Kashmir. The Punjab came under British rule almost simultaneously with the creation of Kashmir as a Native State; and the comparison between that State and the British districts will perhaps be put to the discredit of the Indian administrators in the States. Mr. Montagu doubtless remembers that there is such a thing as the Foreign Office of the Government of India and that the British Resident is a factor in such States. When he goes to Southern India and visits Mysore he will find how the value of an excellent constitution given to that State has been undermined and the whole power transferred from the constitution into the hands of the European I. C. S. Private Secretary of the Maharaja. So much for the apparent difference between the States and the British districts. It has not been possible for Mr. Montagu to accept an entertainment from the Punjab Hindus. He will nevertheless have found a way of meeting the Hindu leaders and learning from them the serious disabilities to which they are subject. We fully trust that in the principal towns and cities he visits he will make it convenient to grant interviews to the independent section of the people, thereby to know the difference between the official and unofficial view of questions of public interest."

The Nicholson Committee.

34. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore) of the 23rd November 1912 :—

"It is announced by the Pioneer that owing to the great volume of evidence to be considered and the intricacy of the questions involved the report of the Nicholson Committee is not likely to be presented to the Government of India before the end of December. The members of the Committee, it is added, will remain in Simla to complete the report. So far as we have been able to gather from the statements published now and again in Anglo-Indian journals, the witnesses who have been examined by Lord Nicholson and his colleagues have been officers of the army and financial advisers of the Government. No non-official witnesses have been examined. We think there is time even now to rectify the omission. Retrenchment in the expenditure incurred on the army has for many years past been a prominent plank on the platform of the Indian National Congress. There are not a few Indian publicists who have made a careful study of this question and we feel sure that they will be able to throw some new light on the problem of military expenditure if Lord Nicholson makes up his mind to examine them. They will be able to lay before His Lordship the people's point of view."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

War in the Balkans.

1. Writing under the heading "Enthusiasm among the Damascus Muhammadans over the Balkan War," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, reproduces an article from the Muyyid (Cairo), which reports that intense enthusiasm prevails among the said Musalmans over the war in the Balkans, that thousands of them have volunteered to serve in the Turkish Army, and that they have held several meetings, at one of which a Sheikh Abdur Rahman urged the audience to wage a Jehad.

Under the heading "A song of self-respect," the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 17th November 1912, publishes a poem recited at a very largely-attended meeting of Muhammadans, held on the 7th idem in the Madanpura Mohulla, Bombay. The poet begins by praying God to make the Turks victorious over the Balkans, and then urges "the (Muslim) nation" to shake off its sleep; for East and West are on fire and the Prophet's followers must realise their troubles, and how they have been ruined by disunion. They formerly put infidels to the sword, and now again they should sacrifice their lives and property for their religion.

"Four wolves (Greece, Servia, Bulgaria and Montenegro) have appeared;

"But there are 10,000 wolves at their back.

"How could one count them? They are numberless;

"These wolves are the so-called sheep of Christ."

In its issue the Zamindar of the 19th November 1912, says that, according to Reuter, the Crown Prince of Greece has left Salonica and has proceeded in the direction of Monastir. It appears that he has found Salonica too hot for him and has hurriedly left "the gateway through which Christianity first entered Europe." The Greeks, it adds, are a worthless and rude lot: they have dashed Mr. Asquith's hopes to the ground. They are also likely to quarrel with the Servians at Monastir, just as they have been unable to pull on with the Bulgarians at Salonica.

Commenting on Reuter's telegrams about the landing of international troops at Constantinople, the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 20th November 1912, says that the whole of Europe has strained every nerve to foment anarchy and disturbances in Turkey with the object of getting an opportunity to interfere. In spite, however, of the fact that its Muslim subjects are greatly excited and ready to sacrifice themselves for their land, the Porte has managed to maintain unexampled peace. Its reward, nevertheless, is that Europe has landed forces at Constantinople on trumped-up pretexts.

In its issue the Zamindar of the 22nd November 1912, publishes a letter headed "Burst!" in which the writer—"Nazir," of Saifabad, residing at Patiala—calls on "the fire of the Islamic sense of self-respect" to burst into flames; to rid the earth of the enemies of the Prophet's faith; to reduce the unclean bodies of the inhabitants of Sofia and Athens to ashes; and to show (to the world) "that thy veins still contain drops of Arab blood and that thou canst even now re-enact the horrible scenes of Yermuk (the early Arabs defeated the soldiers of the Eastern Roman Empire there and acquired Asia Minor) and Nihawand (here they destroyed the Persian Empire)." The correspondent also apostrophises "the fire of revenge" and asks it so to burst forth that the keen Ottoman sword may cut off the heads of innumerable tyrants and "cause such fighting on the vast plain of the Balkans as to put Vesuvius and Etna to shame."

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), dated the 19th November 1912, publishes a report of the second meeting of the Zenana Branch of the Red Crescent Society, Punjab, held in the local Muhammadan Hall on the 16th November. The meeting consisted mostly of women of the poor and middle classes; and, with very few exceptions, the wives of the Muslim leaders in Lahore, who never fail to attend the pardah parties given by European ladies, were conspicuous only by their absence. The collections amounted to about Rs. 900 in cash; and some ornaments also were received.

In the same issue the paper also refers to the excitement prevalent among Indian Muhammadans over the Balkan war, and reports that, by the 16th November, the Editor had collected Rs. 1,08,305-0-6 in aid of the Turkish Relief Fund, and that he intends raising the total to one crore of rupees.

The paper also publishes an Egyptian letter from Maulvi Abu Said, of Rangoon, who says that the Tripolitan and Balkan wars have shown that Europe can invent the blackest lies in order to mislead Asiatics. But for the presence, he adds, of "our special correspondents" at the front and the publication of authentic war news by the (Turkish) Government, the Bulgarian forces would long ago have been reported as masters of Constantinople. The writer states that he is going to the front at his own expense to find out the truth.

The Millat (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, says that the Powers have derived the fullest advantage from the Turks' unprepared state and from the fact that her attention was taken up with Tripoli. The members of the Committee of Union and Progress, who are really the secret agents and informers of Europe, have thoroughly accomplished their mission to work the ruin of Turkey. They paved the way for Italy's success in Tripoli by removing the Ottoman forces there to Yemen. They advised the Italians to attack Turkish coasts through the traitorous Hakki Pasha at Rome. They used these attacks as a pretext to despatch the Turkish soldiers in Europe to Asia and thereby facilitated the invasion of Turkey by Greece and the Balkans. Again they recruited Christians in the Sultan's Army, handed over the Commissariat Department to them, and (as it were) sent word to Europe that the coast was clear. They also turned out all the experienced (Turkish) military officers and gave their places to the sons of drunken Christian mothers. Their relinquishment of the reins of government without a protest made the Editor think at the time that these own brothers to Satan must be aware of some impending danger; for, otherwise, they would not have transferred themselves from the helm of the administration to the brothels of Europe. The Editor then goes on to say that the European papers recently received are unanimous in holding that the Turkish rule in Europe is about to end. Now, however, that the Turks have concentrated their forces at Tchataldja and there is a fear of the Bulgarians being wiped out, Turkey has been represented as desiring peace, the object in view being to invent an excuse for intervention. It has too already been plainly laid down that the Sultan's rule would be confined to Constantinople alone. The Turks cannot fight the whole of Europe and will have to bend the knee, "but God's command is that they should continue fighting as long as there is breath in their bodies." The sword must decide the matter. It does not matter if they die in the performance of their duty, because their sacrifice will revivify Islam, and "Turks and Arabs" will again conquer the world.

Elsewhere the paper says that, if the Turks feel convinced that all Europe is bent upon exterminating them, they should lose no time in ensuring the safety of the roads to Asiatic Turkey, so that the international ships (at Constantinople) may not cut off their retreat from Europe and destroy both their army and their families. The Editor is of opinion that the Sultan and the (other) Turks in Europe will be killed; that only one Turkish prince will escape to Asiatic Turkey; that there he will place himself at the head of an army and engage in war; and that finally Imam Mehdi will make his appearance. In case, however, the present war is not the last one (? that the Turks are to wage in Europe) even the whole world combined can work no injury to Constantinople. At all events, the Editor feels certain that Muhammadans will triumph in the end, which event has, indeed, been already predicted by the Prophet. The reported successes of the allies are untrue, and they are only intended to help in the attainment of the unholy object which the Powers have at heart. The parts of Turkey which the Powers wish to liberate from the yoke of Turkey are described as already in the hands of Greece and the Balkans. All reports from the front, except of the actual Bulgarian attack, are wholly unfounded; and the fact of the matter is, says the Editor, that the Powers have despatched their fleets and are threatening the Sultan so as to make him give up all his European possessions with the exception only of Constantinople.

Writing under the heading "The War" the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"If Turkish reports are to be believed, not a day has passed since the war began when the Turks have not gained a victory which might be regarded as one of the most brilliant feats in Ottoman history. No engagement has occurred in which the Bulgarians have not retreated in disorder before the bayonet charges of the Turks. But by some malicious combination of events the Turks have been compelled to 'advance' homeward despite their memorable victories, and the Bulgarians are just now thundering at the gates of Constantinople. The Sultan is anxious for peace, though he has been compelled to reject Bulgaria's terms for the present. The consensus of expert opinion, on the other hand, is that if the war continues, whatever still lingers of European Turkey will follow the way of the Turkish 'advance.'"

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War.

2. Writing under the heading 'Difference of opinion,' the Paniabee (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"As a rule the Muhammadans of India are a united body and there is greater union among them for a semi-religious purpose than among the Hindus. But it is not surprising that even in regard to the Balkan War a split has arisen and a new party is forming itself who disown any territorial interest in Turkey which they think is artificially introduced. What is called a Loyal Muslim League has been formed in Bombay, whose policy seems to be moderation and who understand that Muslims have their duty in India and they would not be lost if Turkey is lost. They have already protested against such unwise decisions as boycott of Grecian and other European goods. Nor do they support the proposal of transferring the University funds to Turkey in any form. With regard to the general Muslim policy also there seems to be a split and the birth of a new moderate party. We should be glad if a more constructive and less aggressive party is formed to steady the course of events."

The Balkan War and Indian Volunteers.

3. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 17th November 1912, has an article on Mr. Shaukat Ali's proposal to despatch a Muslim volunteer corps to the front and his declaration that Government would surely lend Musalmans a helping hand in the matter. As if, ejaculates the Editor, the British Government, having issued a proclamation of neutrality, would nevertheless allow Indian Muhammadans to serve in the Turkish army in order to bring the Christian States of the Balkans to their senses! The Aligarh Institute Gazette heartily approves of the above proposals saying that the allies have imparted a religious colour to the war; that they have at their back powerful States like Russia and Austria; that natives of the Balkan States are going to the front in crowds from every part of the world. There is, however, absolutely no truth in the accusation against Russia and Austria. And presumably, says the Akhbar-i-'Am, Turkish subjects everywhere are also free to go and participate in the war. But those Musalmans, who, like their co-religionists in India, are neither subjects nor residents of Turkey and who own allegiance to neutral powers, cannot serve in the Turkish army. Again, if the war had really been of a religious character, the Christian powers of Europe would never have followed a policy of neutrality in connection with it. After regretting that the Aligarh Institute Gazette should have tried to cause such dangerous misunderstandings, the paper asks how untrained Muslim volunteers could prove of any use to the Turks.

The Watan and the Zamindar and news from the seat of war.

4. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912, has a paragraph headed "Concealing war news and keeping the people in the dark." The Turks, says the paper, have unfortunately had to suffer reverse after reverse. That must be admitted. And, as a result, certain Muhammadan papers of Lahore have been distorting news from the seat of war. Either they do not credit the telegrams or, in the event even of their believing any of them to be true, they interpret it in their own way and cause misunderstanding in the minds of the Muslim public. The Watan is particularly given to questioning the truth of Reuter's telegrams, and daily flings grossly mean taunts at the Balkans. The Zamindar too, says the Editor, laughed to scorn the news about the Greek occupation of Salonika and has applied to the whole war the appreciation by the Times' military correspondent of the splendid Turkish defence of Adrianople. It has also afforded proof of its sobriety by publishing the following couplet :—

"The noise made by the Balkans is the cawing of crows :

"The reports of their victories are all false."

But its greatest journalistic achievement consists in having suppressed the telegram from Reuter's agency, containing the account by the Daily Telegraph's London correspondent of the Turkish retreat after the battle of Lale Burgas. Nor is this all ; it published a note instead under the heading "Bigoted and lying correspondents" taking the writer in the Daily Telegraph to task. Both the Watan and the Zamindar perhaps consider it to their interest to mislead their readers and keep them in the dark, caring nothing for journalistic honesty and seriousness.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 20th November 1912, publishes some verses by the Editor, beginning with the couplet objected to by the Paisa Akhbar. Continuing, he writes :—

"God's glory will soon manifest itself :

"These victims of Satan's graces (? the allies) cannot stay.

"Europe has shaken the earth with (its) oppression,

"Let Muhammadans move heaven with their prayers."

Next he questions the truth of the war news supplied by Reuter and asks why he should not criticise these false telegrams.

Hindus and the Balkan War.

5. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912, remarks that Muhammadans are never tired of saying that they are (politically) more important than Hindus, and therefore they hold themselves aloof from the latter. In their hour of need, however, they speak of the followers of Hinduism as brothers ; and this parrot cry is being repeated by them even to-day, in order to induce Hindus to render help to Turkey. It was remarked by Maulvi Leakut Husain at the recent swadeshi mela at Calcutta that Turkey's troubles adversely affect, not only Indian Muhammadans, but Hindus too. It is, however, difficult to understand how the Turks' defeat can be a source of humiliation for Hindus ? If the prediction means that the devastation of Turkey will inflame Indian Musalmans to plunder and loot, that is quite a different thing. But Government also wields some power and there is consequently no reason for Hindus to give way to anxiety.

Referring to the Paisa Akhbar's comments on Sat Dev's denunciation of Hindu hostility towards the Turks (vide paragraph 13 of Selections No. 47), the Parkash (Lahore), of the 19th November 1912, says that the Muslim papers know that Islamic power is at its last gasp and that the political importance of Muhammadans must also expire with it. They are also aware that, intoxicated by this idea of their importance, they have grossly insulted the followers of Hinduism. It is only natural then that Hindus should have no sympathy with the Turks in their troubles. Sat Dev's denunciation of their conduct has, however, highly gratified the Paisa Akhbar, which has attached special weight to his words. The lecture, the Parkash states, in which Satya Dev found fault with Hindus, was not delivered under the auspices of the Arya Samaj, although the compound of the Pritinidhi Sabha's office was undoubtedly lent for it.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 19th November 1911, complains that some mean-minded Hindus and Hindu papers have been expressing joy at the defeats and troubles of the Turks. They forget that it is a matter of pride for Asiatics that, at a time when Europe bids fair to occupy the rest of the world, there is an Eastern nation which still reigns over a part of the European continent. There, however, also exist noble-minded Hindus—and their number is legion—who deeply sympathise with the Turks. After stating how Sat Dev recently snubbed those despicable Hindu papers, the Paisa Akhbar publishes a letter from "A Hindu Journalist" finding fault with the Hindustan for wounding the feelings of Muhammadans by expressing joy at Turkish reverses and saying that the Turco-Balkan War being one between the West and East, Hindus must sympathise with the Osmanlis.

Egypt and the Balkan War.

6. In its issue, dated the 17th and 18th November 1912, the Rafiq (Delhi), says that the Khedive's recent prolonged stay at Constantinople has rendered the Pioneer's Cairo correspondent uneasy. After quoting an extract from the correspondent's letter, to the effect that, Britain having issued a proclamation of neutrality (in regard to the Balkan War), Egypt will have to follow her example, the paper expresses its inability to understand his logic. If the Khedive is a liege subject of the Sultan, then he is so in every case. Otherwise it should be plainly stated, once for all, that the Sultan has nothing to do with Egypt. It is a pity that such thick-skulled Englishmen should cast a stain on Britain's hereditary generosity, love of freedom and sense of Christian sympathy, thereby causing prejudice and ill-feeling in the Eastern World. Continuing, the Rafiq states that the Porte has demanded that Egypt should, in accordance with the treaty between her and Turkey, despatch an army to take part in the Balkan War. The requisition, it adds, has been published in Egyptian papers and all of them are clamouring for compliance with it. The Editor hopes that the Khedive's return from Constantinople will be followed by a report that the Egyptians have performed their "Islamic duties."

Mr. Asquith and the Balkan War.

7. The Mister Gazette (Lahore), of the 15th November 1912, reprints the following from Mr. Asquith's Guildhall speech :—"Upon one thing I believe the general opinion of Europe to be unanimous, that the victors are not to be robbed of the fruits which have cost them so dear." When, however, Turkey conquered Greece at the sacrifice of a large number of lives, she was forced, by "these same European worthies," to return the conquered territory to Greece. The fact of the matter is that the strong disregard the dictates of justice in their dealings with the weak. Those who used to think that Britain would never throw justice overboard have had to change their opinion in consequence of the Balkan war. It is perfectly true that oppression has usurped the place of justice and falsehood reigns supreme (in England).

European officials and the Turkish Relief Fund.

8. The Millat (Lahore), of the 22nd November 1912, says that not only the existence but even the religion of Muhammadans is now in danger. (? Christian) tyrants, swayed by feelings of bigotry, are determined to destroy the Turks, "the guardians of the sacred places at Mecca and Medina."

After appealing to Musalmans to give money in aid of the Turkish sufferers, the paper praises European officers in some districts for having taken part in meetings held to collect funds for the purpose. They have, it adds, not only subscribed themselves, but have also induced others to follow their example.

Indians in Canada.

9. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 29th November 1912 :—

"Referring to the scandalous and disgraceful treatment which is meted out to British Indians in Canada a correspondent very properly points out in a Montreal paper that it would be well to send some of the missionaries intended for India to Western Canada, where they would probably find plenty of work to do in their line among the white settlers. In this connection it would be interesting to read what the Aryan, the only Hindu paper in Canada which is devoted to the spread of the Eastern view of Truth and in the interests of the Hindus in the British Dominions, says on the subject. The Aryan says :—'The reverend gentlemen composing the Vancouver Ministerial Association, whilst anxious to save the soul of the heathen in India by sending Canadian missionaries, are averse to the Hindus here having their wives join them. According to them it would appear that, whilst India's coral strand is a good climate for Canadians to share the gospel feast and preach the brotherhood of man to Hindus, Canada is too cold for the Hindus' families. It does not occur to these learned gentlemen that Hindus cannot see any good in sending Canadian and Australian missicnaries to India, whilst they want to shut out Hindu student and missionaries from their shores. It is only a matter of time when Hindus in sheer self-preservation will have to retaliate against Canadians, Australians and Afrikanders.' We cannot conceive of a more miserable blot on the honour of Canada as a British nation than the refusal of the Canadian Government to admit into the country the wives of British Indian citizens resident in Canada which is tantamount to a denial of the most primary of human rights."

Mr. Gokhale in South Africa.

10. Writing under the heading 'The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale' the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

* * * * *

* * "The Indian Opinion says that public men in South Africa have realised the immense importance to the Empire of a proper solution of the Indian difficulty there and the high esteem in which India's foremost spokesman is held in the very highest circles, and our contemporary considers that the tone of the European press is all that can be desired and that the attitude of the Europeans does honour alike to them and to the people of India. The visit has been most successful and paves the way for better understanding on both sides."

The Liberal Ministry.

11. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 17th November 1912, says that the fall of the Liberal party has been growing more probable every day for the last six months. It became abundantly clear when the Prime Minister indirectly admitted at a public meeting that "the British Parliament and Ministry" were composed, not of statesmen, but of Christian missionaries. The remarks made by him and Sir Edward Grey on the subject of the Balkan War have hurt the feelings of Indian Muhammadans. For some time the present Ministry has been affording proof of its incompetence and the news of its fall may be received at any moment.

Mr. Montagu and the defeat of the Liberal Government.

12. Writing under the heading 'An unexpected surprise,' the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

"It was at Lyallpur that Mr. Montagu heard of the defeat of his Government in a division on the finance provisions of the Home Rule Bill. He received the intelligence with commendable equanimity. * * * But somehow or other we cannot divest ourselves of a suspicion that he must have at that very moment inwardly thanked his stars that he was standing on the soil of India instead of England. For had he been on that day in the venerable British house of Parliament instead of on the railway platform at Lyallpur the chances were nine to ten that his ears would have been boxed. Events have shown that the dignity of even an Under-Secretary of State for India is of no avail against the 'Imperial' Briton stimulated by opportunity and brandy."

The Beyrout University and a proposed University at Mecca.

13. In the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 16th November 1912, a correspondent writes to say that the Beyrout University (sic.) was in a flourishing condition in his day. Last year, too, he met two Indian students who had joined the University owing to some unpleasantness with the Principal of the local American Mission College. From what they and others have told him, he is of opinion that those (Muhammadans) who desire their sons to acquire a higher education and a greater love for morality and Islam could send them to no better place; and the University is deserving of all help from charitable Muhammadans. Particularly would it be a good action to present it with a piece of land large enough to ensure the College becoming a University. It provides a thorough grounding in Islamic Theology and young Muhammadans are warned against the efforts being made to sow the seed of Christianity in their midst. Continuing, the writer states that there are "thousands of Madrassahs" and "hundreds of Hospitals" in Beyrout, connected with foreign governments, and their real object is to change the moral condition of (the) Muhammadans and to drive the love of Islam out of their hearts. They are also being used, he adds, to win the hearts of Turkish subjects, both Muslim and Christian, and to make them hostile (? towards the Sultan). In conclusion, he suggests that in the event of the Indian Government not giving Muhammadans the sort of University they desire, the funds collected should be utilised for establishing a University at Mecca.

Pandit Ram Bhaj Datt on the removal of the Capital to Delhi, Pan-Islamism and other matters.

14. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912, publishes an article by Pandit Ram Bhaj Datt declaring that the real struggle between Muslim and Western civilization will commence on the removal of the Government of India's head-quarters to Delhi. The persecution of Hindus by Muhammadan Kings is well known; and towards the close of the Mughal rule Islamic debauchery rendered it impossible for any beautiful (?Hindu) woman to remain in the country. This wickedness could not be tolerated even by the Muhammadan God and so Muslim rule in India came to an end. God's mercy then rained down at last on the whole of India in the shape of British justice. Queen Victoria began to look after Hindus and Musalmans, but the hungry Bengalis took milk from their European mother's breasts "by violence," while some fools among them began to kick the King's own children. Stray Punjabis, Mahrattas and Madrasis also began to behave insolently after having been nurtured and taken care of. Most Muhammadans, however, had passed their babyhood; they understood the world and played their game (well), the result being that, while they were held to be loyal, Hindus were set down as rebels. The English got angry and began to think of taking back the coat and pantaloons they had given them (Indians). Agitation ensued, but the King Emperor pacified the irate Bengalis at the Coronation Darbar and also assured Indians that Britain still abided by the pledges given to them by his grand-mother. His words have left no room for doubt that the British Government has found out the correct solution of its political difficulties in India. Continuing, the writer refers to the Balkan War and says that the constitutional Government established by the Young Turks had the effect of causing strife in Turkey. The powers, he adds, which professed friendship for these fools also engaged themselves in the task of inciting the Balkans. The reason for this was that, when the Mejlis proposed to place western Persia under Turkish "guardianship," the tassel in the Young Turk's fez began to shake violently "with pan-Islamic zeal." In his newly-found enthusiasm the Young Turk knocked off Russia's turban and Great Britain's hat, thereby revealing his heart to both of his friends. This led to western statecraft letting loose Italy on Tripoli, while her knowledge of Turkey's dishonest intentions made England hold her peace. It was only when blows began to rain down on these Khan Bahadurs that the followers of Usman Pasha recovered their senses; but, before they could rid themselves (of Italy), Germany, the claimant to Asia Minor, set the Montenegrin hunter, through the instrumentality of Austria, upon the featherless and aged (Turkish) falcon. And the sad plight to which pleasure-loving Turkey has now been reduced not only draws tears from some weak-minded "Indians (? Hindus)," but has also cooled a little the heads of thousands of Pan-Islamites intoxicated with their political and historical importance. It has also opened the eyes of hundreds who used to dream the shameful and regrettable dreams of again subjugating the world, especially Hindus and Christians. The writer cannot say when the Russian Bear will tear off the teeth and jaws of the Deputy Caliph, the ruler of Kabul, in driving away the flies from His Majesty's face. Persia, he adds, has ceased to exist and Turkey is sharing the same fate, while the selfish leaders of the Pan-Islamites in India feel jubilant over their loot of the posts of chaprasi and Magistrate, Judge and Superintendent. They attempt, after taking their evening peg of whisky, to make out Hindus to be rebels and enemies of Great Britain; and represent them as being inferior to Muhammadans and themselves as descendants of the Persians and Turks; while mujahids have scattered along the frontier and are engaged in "attacking the women and cash of their Hindu neighbours." Proceeding, Pandit Rambhaj Datt finds fault with Muhammadans for their mad cry to England to drive Russia, Italy, and the Balkan Confederacy out of Muhammadan lands. He also condemns the conduct of some foolish Bengalis in joining hands with them, and goes on to say that some Musalmans have even held out to the Indian Government and the British people the threat that, if they do not listen to the above cry, they will alienate the followers of Islam. He asserts next that mujahids and Pan-Islamites will soon be at war; that there will be a collision between the Aligarh boots and Cawnpur shoes; that the Dacca muslin and Murshidabad tussore will sell in the Delhi and Agra bazars through Patna brokers and Bareilly merchants; that the brisk sale at Agra will lead to disaster, that Hindus will get an opportunity of sacrificing their all for the English; that the Hindu sword will flash in defence of the British Government and its Indian subjects; and that it will then be decided who are truly loyal and who are rebels.

The Swadeshi movement.

15. The Sanatan Dharam Parcharak (Amritsar), of the 16th November 1912, publishes an article headed "Remedy for the disease of poverty." India, it says, which at one time supplied the wants of other countries, is now herself steeped in abject poverty. Before the introduction of British manufactures Indians used to supply all their own requirements, but in these days they have to use all sorts of imported articles. Their country has, therefore, become very poor, and it is now incumbent on them to abjure the use of foreign-made articles in favour of indigenous manufactures.

India and the defence of the Empire.

16. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated the 26th November 1912:—

"* * * The opinion in official circles in England appears to be that India's contribution to the defence of the Empire is not adequate and we hope that the matter will be settled by consultation with the Government of India. There is no disposition anywhere in India to decry the adoption of measures which are considered absolutely necessary for rendering the Empire impregnable against attack or aggression of any sort, but the financial position of India must also be considered."

Mr. Abbas Ali Beg on Hindu-Muhammadan unity.

17. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912:—

"Presiding at the complimentary luncheon given to Mr. S. P. Sinha in London, on the 26th ultimo, Mr. Abbas Ali Beg, C.S.I., made some remarks on Indian unity. He began by saying that Indians 'had British citizenship.' But as a matter of fact every page of Mr. Sagrant's book proclaims that Indians have it not. He criticised the tendency in certain quarters to discourage Indian students from completing their education in England and other countries and said that he did not share the views of those who would confine the mental horizon of the Indian students to Indian skies. 'The breadth of view and the wider outlook of life,' he went on to say, 'which were necessary for those who hoped in the future to take a part in the Government of their country, could not readily be acquired without crossing the ocean.' All this was admirable, and even the expression of his belief that His Majesty's visit would fuse and weld into one great nation the 'disconnected racial fragments which hitherto had constituted the weakness of their country.' But when he came to tackle the Hindu-Muhammadan problem in its stronghold, as impregnable as Adrianople itself, his heart quailed and he shrank back. While stating that Mr. S. P. Sinha's 'perfect freedom from racial and religious prejudices' had excited their admiration and esteem, he could only give expression to a qualified approval that it was received with 'almost equal gratification by Indians of every class and creed.' If even 'perfect freedom from racial and religious prejudices' on the part of a Hindu was not enough to fully gratify a certain section we fail to perceive what else could. Mr. Abbas Beg went on to say that 'he did not remember any time when the mutual good feeling between Englishmen, Hindus and Muhammadans and other races was so encouraging and so pronounced as it was at present—except, perhaps, in one province.' Excluding Englishmen and "other races" he should have said that the mutual ill-feeling between the two races was never so bad as at present. His attempt to make an exception of the Punjab overlooks the real obstacle in the way of unity—the communal compact and Pan-Islamic propaganda; and he absolutely fails to suggest a remedy by implying that even when other provinces would remedy it the Punjab should remain an exception, reminding the country of the festering national sore."

II.—Afghanistan and Trans-Frontier.

The Mangal Rising.

18. Writing under the heading "The Mangal rising and the cares of the Times of India," the Siraj-ul-Akhbar (Kabul) of the 13th October (received on the 26th November), 1912, quotes an article from the Times of India on the subject. To begin with, it endeavours to controvert the Times' reflections on the Afghan commissariat arrangements and on the fidelity of the Amir's forces. It also contends that there is no truth in the statements that the Governor of Khost has been imprisoned for having been the author of the rising and that the rebellious tribes have been completely victorious. Next it declares that the Times is also wrong in asserting that Afghanistan is prominently connected with the Pan-Islamic movement and that the Amir is a mere puppet in the hands of bigoted Mullas. The paper also proves that the propaganda is not directed against the Christians. The paper then disagrees with the Times' remark that the leniency with which the rebels have been treated is calculated to cause misunderstanding in Afghanistan. As to the suggestion that they should have been punished in a "savage" way, had the Amir done so the Times of India would probably have denounced the incident in such terms as to make one's hair stand on end. There can be no doubt, says the Times of India, that, in order to protect itself against civil wars, the Afghan Government would like to introduce Pan-Islamism in its dominions and "raise the cry of jehad," and that, from the British point of view, this is fraught with the greatest danger. There, is however, says the Siraj-ul Ahhbar, no occasion for Afghanistan to wage a jehad, least of all on her friend Great Britain.

Railways in Afghanistan.

19. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 22nd November 1912, states that, according to the Pioneer's frontier correspondent, the people of Kabul are against the building even of small railways in Afghanistan, on the ground that the construction of the same would necessitate the importation of European engineers into Afghan territory. Their objection appears to be based on narrow-mindedness; but those who have carefully studied the history of European colonies for the last 75 years and have seen railways lead to scores of places passing into the hands of Europeans, will regard the Kabulis' distrust (of Europeans) as being perfectly natural.

III.—Native States.

Bahawalpur affairs.

20. Writing under the heading "Unfounded charge against the officials of the Bahawalpur State," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, complains that some bigoted and uninformed papers are, on the strength of misleading writings from short-sighted correspondents, charging the authorities of Bahawalpur State with having imposed "heavy taxes" on Hindus. They also report that the followers of Hinduism have been so hard hit that they did not celebrate even the Dussehra and Diwali this year. The fact of the matter, however, is that an income tax, such as obtains in other parts of India, has this year been introduced into Bahawalpur also. And as Hindus monopolise all the trade in the State, it is mostly they who have been assessed. To call this the imposition of a special tax on Hindus is mischief-making, and the correspondents who write this wish to disturb the peace which, thanks to the admitted impartiality of the State authorities, has always existed between Hindus and Muhammadans. The dissemination of such complaints is the more regrettable in view of the fact that it has been proclaimed by the authorities that the objections filed will be considered in a spirit of liberality. If the Hindu subjects of the State continue making their protests in the present objectionable way they should be regarded as deserving of no sympathy.

IV.—Kine-killing.

Sikhs and cow-protection.

21. The Kam Dhenu (Ludhiana), of the 15th November 1912, has a letter from one Harnam Singh, written in the form of a dream, condemning the apathy of Sikhs towards cow-protection and urging them to interest themselves in the work; and the writer quotes a verse from the Granth in favour of kine being protected. In conclusion, Harnam Singh announces that he has made up his mind to devote the rest of his life to the cause of cow-protection.

Cow-killing riots at Ayodhya and Rangoon.

22. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912 :—

"It will be seen that in all these cases the authorities first of all ordered there might be cow-sacrifice at certain places which they considered inoffensive. Apparently they were not so to the Hindus, and the consequence has been regrettable. The Bengalee makes a useful suggestion of appointing District Councils to settle these matters amicably. The Hindu and Muhammadan leaders can, in most cases, arrange these things and prevent rioting. The proposal of District Councils was rejected by the Government last year, but we think that there are occasions when their services could be used to advantage, and we wish that the proposal to establish District Councils will be reconsidered favourably."

VI.—Legislation.

Zamindars, the ensuing Council Elections in the Punjab and the Land Alienation Act.

23. The Rajput Gazette (Lahore), of the 16th November 1912, publishes a communication headed "Zamindars and the Land Alienation Act. District Boards should elect their representatives on the Punjab Council from among zamindars." The writer—an Executive Engineer and a very big landowner—says that strenuous efforts are being made to secure the repeal of the Land Alienation Act, which has proved highly beneficial for agriculturists. To help to bring this result about, it has recently been proposed that non-agriculturists should be returned to the Punjab Legislative Council to represent even zamindars, i.e., District Boards. Zamindars, especially the Rajputs among them, should, therefore, see that their representatives on the Council are elected from among themselves. The (Local) Government, Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners should attend to the matter.

The forthcoming Punjab Council Elections.

24. A voter contributes the following to the Tribune (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912 :—

"To one who was present at the house of Rai Bahadur Shadi Lal on Sunday last there was a good deal to show that the Hindu position in this province is hopeless. What hope can there be for a flock, the shepherds of which are determined to divide the flock and to use them only as so many pawns in their own game of chess. The whole of yesterday was spent in trying to bring about an understanding or agreement between the candidates who aspire to represent the central group of Municipal and Cantonment Committees in the Punjab Legislative Council, but the result was nil. The best efforts and pathetic appeals of Rai Sahib Murli Dhar of Ambala, of Dr. P. C. Chatterjee, of Rai Bahadur Shadi Lal, of Lala Harkishen Lal, of Rai Bahadur Sham Dass and Lala Lajpat Rai, proved of no avail.

"The arbitrators appointed at the last meeting tried their level best to induce the candidates to agree to be bound by their decision, but two of the latter refused to be so bound. Rai Bahadur Gopal Das raised a technical plea to the effect that until the nomination day was over fresh nominations were possible and therefore any decision arrived at on that day will lack finality. But Rai Bahadur Ram Saran Das was not willing to bind himself to the decision of the arbitrators until the latter agreed to count the promises obtained by each candidate and give their decision in favour of him who had the largest number of promises. To this the arbitrators declined to agree because they said the promises obtained were one-sided representations and were not final and that they could not bind themselves to one principle of decision only. They promised to take that fact into consideration but the candidate concerned was not satisfied and the result was that after a waste of a whole precious day nothing could be decided. There were lots of people present in that meeting who never promised secrecy and I do not think I am laying myself open to a charge of breach of confidence in giving publicity to this. My own opinion is that the Council elections are not a matter of so very great importance as to justify such a fuss over them, yet the occasion supplied evidence conclusive and positive of the hopelessness of the Hindu position in this province and of the fact that, the Hindu Sabha movement notwithstanding, Hindus are hopelessly divided and disorganised. The Hindu Sabhas and Hindu Conference can be of no good at all, if something drastic is not attempted, and attempted at once, to put our house in order. For example, what is the use of all talking of Hindu unity, of mutual good-will and reciprocal confidence if the leaders of the Hindu Sabha themselves, showed such a hopeless want of confidence in their own good selves? Dr. Sir P. C. Chatterjee is the President of the Hindu Sabha, Rai Bahadur Shadi Lal is its General Secretary, yet the candidates including some of the office-bearers of the Hindu Sabha, could not rely on the good sense and impartiality of these gentlemen and could not leave their case in their hands, while people not belonging to the Hindu Sabha were prepared to do so. It is a matter of standing disgrace that of all people, the Hindus should be so lacking in a spirit of compromise in matters affecting the general welfare of the community. The different candidates profess a desire to serve their community by going to the Council, yet at the very threshhold of their careers they ignore and insult the community by showing such a lack of common sense although they pose as leaders and saviours of the community. Various methods were suggested of settling the differences between the candidates, viz., I, that lots may be drawn, II, that some of the richer candidates might win the goodwill of others by subcribing liberally to Hindu institutions, or III, by all withdrawing in favour of Lala Lajpat Rai, if any of these was acceptable to the gentlemen concerned. Yet they want the Hindus to send them as their representatives in the Council. I am afraid the educated Hindu leaders have spoiled the game by paying too much heed to the sentiments of a particular class of men. The truth seems to be that the community is being made a cat's paw for the fulfilment of personal ambitions, otherwise the best interests of the community require that the best men available from the point of view of fitness for the duties to be performed should be accepted as the representative of the community, and not the richest men.

"There is no objection to the richest man being selected if he is otherwise fit or if he is likely to have a regard for the public opinion of the community. But what right has a man to claim the suffrage of the community if he requires by flouting its leaders and representative men and by declining to provide the ends of communal unity by submitting his claims to the arbitration of its best men and by refusing to abide by the award. Such a man deserved to be rejected on that ground alone and it should be the sacred duty of every Hindu voter to inform him of his serious displeasure without any further delay. It is time that the community should assert itself and decline to be victimised by such men. Some unscrupulous people are using these elections for the purpose of creating more bad blood between Hindu public men, and it is a shame that sensible and shrewd people should not see through the game and allow themselves to be misled by enemies in the garbs of friends.

"In the Cis-Sutlej group also it appears that the news of Lala Ganga Ram's withdrawal was rather premature. The latest news is that his supporters are still working against Lala Lajpat Rai, in the hope of eventually forcing Lala Lajpat Rai to retire.

"I am of opinion that it is time that the Hindu middle classes should assert themselves and take some steps to teach a lesson to those who lose no opportunity of keeping the community divided sometimes in the pursuit of their own selfish ends and at other times at the instigation of its enemies.

"Before I conclude I want to inform the public that all candidates but one agreed to retire in favour of Lala Lajpat Rai; thus leaving the Cis-Sutlej seat for Lala Kashi Ram, of Ferozepore."

The Redemption of Mortgages Bill.

25. In its leader, the Punjabee (Lahore) of the 23rd November 1912, publishes the following :—

"It is understood that the Punjab Government is anxious to secure the passage of the Redemption of Mortgages Bill at the meeting of the Legislative Council which is to be held on the 14th proximo. It is a Bill which is subversive of the elementary principles of civil justice and strikes at the root of civil liberty. As explained in the statement of objects and reasons, it seeks to oust the jurisdiction of civil courts in mortgage suits relating to land not exceeding 30 acres in extent. It seeks to transfer the jurisdiction in such suits to the Deputy Commissioner, who already exercises, along with his multifarious functions, certain powers to restore mortgagors to possession of their property under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. Complaint is growing both in volume and strength, not only from the general public but also from the Chief Court, that the Deputy Commissioners in this Province are unequal to the burdens put upon them and that as a consequence the work done by them is becoming indifferent and purfunctory. This being so the attempt to invest them with additional civil powers for the disposal of this class of mortgage suits is quite inexplicable. The ostensible object of the Bill is to save the innocent class of small zamindars who get into the clutches of the 'villainous' class of money-lenders and find themselves unable to redeem their property, owing to the superior cunning of the mortgagees in preventing lawful redemption. It is pertinent to inquire first whether the class of Zamindars whom the Punjab Government is anxious to take under its protecting wing is more gullible than the identical class in other provinces. Secondly, we have to inquire whether the class of money-lenders against whom it is proposed to legislate are more dishonest and less business-like than the identical class in other provinces. Not only this, the Government should state the number of cases in the year in which the Zamindars of this class find themselves baulked in their efforts to redeem their mortgaged property. The Government should also state whether this evil has been growing from year to year and making the position of the small Zamindars worse than their confrères in, say, the Province of Agra. In the absence of these facts, we do not see any reason why the Punjab Government should attempt this class legislation, while other provinces are quite content to leave the matter to existing laws and to ordinary civil courts.

"Our objection, however, is not limited to any particular provision of the Bill. We object to the principle of the Bill, to the attempt to invade the rights of civil courts, to the expediency of adding to the burdens of the District Officer, and to the legislative tinkering which unsettles popular belief in the permanency of contracts once entered into and in the binding character of decisions once given, whether by revenue courts or by civil courts. As we have stated the measure strikes at the root of the principles of civil law.

"The Bill does not provide for finality in the decision of the Deputy Commissioner. The aggrieved party is at liberty to file a regular suit in the civil courts. Both the mortgagee and the mortgagor can exercise this right. As has been pointed out both by the Pioneer and the Civil and Military Gazette, the Deputy Commissioners cannot influence the decisions of civil courts which are rightly guided by the rulings of the Chief Court. When civil courts reverse, as they are bound to do, the order of the Deputy Commissioner whose knowledge of the law of mortgage is anything but decent, what respect can he or his court inspire in the class of people whom the Government proposes to protect by means of this ill-advised legislation? We are certain that in no Province can the appellate courts allow themselves to be influenced by executive mandates, and we doubt very much that even a Munsif will permit the Deputy Commissioner to interfere with judicial procedures as the Civil and Military Gazette supposes. If the Munsif reverses the order of the Deputy Commissioner, what will be the position of the Deputy Commissioner in this prestige-ridden land? It is doubtful whether the Government can contemplate such a turn in the administration of the proposed measure with any degree of equanimity. The measure adds to the burden of over-burdened District officers; interferes with the procedure in the ordinary contract; encourages byaimani transactions; impairs still further the decreasing credit of the Zamindar; promotes dissensions between the executive and judicial branches of the service; visibly affects the prestige of the District Officer; and, lastly, operates as fuel to the fire of litigious spirit which the Government has been deploring. It is fraught with numerous unforeseen consequences, and in reality bids fair to prove a curse, though intended as a blessing. It is destined to be a veritable Pandora's Box. The Bill ought to be abandoned and we appeal to the Chief Court to protest against it.

"At any rate the Government will concede that no case has been made out to rush the Bill through in the manner it has been projected. We are entitled to ask whether the Government has invited opinions from a sufficiently large class of persons who can speak with authority on this question. So far as we are aware, a sense of despair has seized the people in the face of the legislative policy of the Government. It is openly said that it is futile to protest, when the Government is determined to legislate against classes and to take particular classes under its protecting wing. We are told that in the mofussil money-lenders are talking in bated breath of the insecurity of mortgage contracts under the proposed law. It may be that this view is too sweeping and unfair to the present Government; but it rests with the Government to disabuse people from such erroneous impressions, by inviting opinions from a larger number of the members of the bar and in particular from the class of money-lenders who will be most affected by the contemplated measure. We appeal to His Honour Sir Louis Dane to put off further consideration and circulate the Bill for opinion."

VII.—General Administration.

(b)—Police.

The dread of the Police.

26. The following is from the Panjabee, (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912 :—

"In the Imperial Legislative Council Sir Henry McMahon adduced some extenuating circumstances for the prevalence of raids and dacoities in Western Punjab and the North-West Frontier Province. He appeared to think that the Hindus by their wealth attracted raiders and got themselves plundered. Of course he said the Government was doing its best to protect life and property. Reviewing the administration report of Pudukota, a small State in the Madras Presidency, the Pioneer remarks: 'The Durbar is working hard to improve the State police who, like their comrades in British India, are hampered by want of public spirit among the people. Strangely enough, the Nattukkattai Chettis, a great community of thriving bankers and tradesmen, are particularly averse to seek police protection, although their wealth makes them favourite objects of attention by the criminal classes. They prefer, however, to hush up crime and accept almost any loss by theft or robbery rather than run the risk of endangering their business interests during the tedious course of investigation and trial.' This is hardly complimentary to the police and its methods. We in the Punjab know that reporting raids and dacoities to the police has been equally futile. Seeking police protection has failed to avail the 'wealthy' Hindus of the Punjab. Whether the policeman is or is not, whether the sufferers report their loss or not, the effect is the same. Why then do papers like the Pioneer add insult to the injury suffered by the 'thriving bankers and traders?"

(d)—Education.

New Universities; A suggested compromise.

27. The following is from the Panjabee, (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912 :—

"A suggestion has been made with reference to the Aligarh University scheme that the conditions of the Government may be accepted and that mofussil schools and colleges be opened for those who do not seek Government service. We believe the object of this suggestion is to exercise influence and control over a larger number of educational institutions outside Aligarh, to the principle of which Government have objection. It is perhaps thought that if Muhammadans do not seek Government service, they can establish mofussil colleges and schools to train men for trade, arts and industries. Though the idea of opening schools and colleges for these purposes is excellent, still it is unwise and hardly useful to suggest it as an alternative to the affiliated mofussil colleges and the principle disapproved by Government. We hardly think that time has come for either the Hindu or the Moslem University to begin not only with local institutions but with a perfect network of schools and colleges all over the country. A time may come when this might be pressing, but not now. If the Government cannot grant any concession asked for, the people will do well to accept Government proposals wholeheartedly and gratefully—leaving expansion to the future. No compromise is possible here as it touches an important principle."

Indian students in England.

28. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 29th November 1912 :—

"It appears that the opinion held in India regarding the uselessness of the arrangements made in England and maintained at a cost of nearly half-a-lakh of rupees per annum is fully endorsed by our countrymen in London and other English cities, who are in a position to see the working of these arrangements. Shortly before the last mail left London a well attended meeting of Indian students and others was held at Caxton Hall in order to enter a protest against the arrangements referred to above. A resolution was unanimously adopted at the meeting, which was to the effect that the Bureau of Information at 21, Cromwell Road, had failed to establish any of the claims made on its behalf, and that its maintenance for the benefit of a limited number of well-to-do Indians at the public expense was unjustifiable. It was also resolved that Indian parents who wished to have guardians for their sons in Great Britain should make their own arrangements, and that they alone ought to provide the necessary funds for an official adviser, if the services of such a person are required. As regards the benefits that have accrued from the arrangements in question, the opinion in India is that they have only provided certain persons with comfortable and well paid jobs. But it is hard lines on the Indian tax-payer that he should be mulcted to the tune of half-a-lakh of rupees annually, in order to keep up arrangements which do not benefit him in the least. It is well-known in India that, left to themselves, very few parents would care to avail themselves of the agency at 21, Cromwell Road. It may be mentioned as an instance of how the arrangements in question are being forced on the people of this country, that of late a ruling appears to have been secured from the heads of Colleges in Oxford and Cambridge that in future no Indian student would be admitted to the Colleges at those places unless he was under the guardianship of the agency at 21, Cromwell Road. Now that is distinctly open to objection. With reference to the meeting referred to above our London correspondent writes :—'A striking feature of the meeting was the large number of Muhammadans who attended. In spite of the appointment of a Muhammadan on the staff at Cromwell Road the members of that community seem to be as strongly opposed to the institution as their Hindu fellow-countrymen.' It is doubtful whether these arrangements have benefited any one, with the exception, of course, of those who have got some comfortable and not very exacting berths."

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

Cotton cultivation in India.

29. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated the 24th November 1912 :—

"For some time past strenuous efforts have been made to induce the Government of India to adopt special measures in order to extend the cultivation of cotton in India. With this end in view representations have been made to the Secretary of State and deputations of British cotton spinners have waited on him. Proposals have been made suggesting the adoption of compulsion on the part of Government to induce the Indian cultivator to devote his land to cotton and not to other crops. The Government of India, to whom the case has been referred by the Secretary of State for India on several occasions, have always stated that, whilst they are ready to adopt any reasonable measures to stimulate the cultivation of cotton, they are not prepared to do so at the risk of other crops being neglected. * * * * The position taken up by Government is quite correct. In the best interests of India itself it is desirable that the cultivation of cotton should be encouraged in every feasible way. But it stands to reason that India cannot devote herself entirely to the cultivation of cotton and neglect the other crops which are needed to feed her millions. The Imperial Department of agriculture in India issued not long ago a bulletin in which the present position, as regards the cultivation of cotton, was set forth in ample detail. The bulletin has evidently not given satisfaction to the cotton spinners and manufacturers of Great Britain, or they would not have troubled the Secretary of State again. Last year the Secretary of the Cotton Spinners' Federation came out to India to see things on the spot, and on his return he submitted a lengthy report, in the course of which he suggested that the Government of India should adopt measures to compel the cultivators of this country to grow cotton of the long-stapled quality, which alone is required by British and European spinners and weavers. The short-stapled cotton, grown in India at present, cannot be utilised by British and European cotton mills. The Government of India are quite right in stating that they do not see their way to adopt the measures in question."

(f)—Railways and communications.

The Baghdad Railway.

30. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912 :—

"The war raises indirectly the question of the future of the Baghdad Railway, the construction of which has been in abeyance owing to the absence of Italian workmen at the front in the Tripoli operations and, since then, the call made on Turkish reservists in Asia Minor. It is eight years since the first section of the Konich-Eregli-Bugurlu line was opened, and as the construction is in the hands of wealthy German financiers, the 'Company for Railway Construction in Turkey,' the entire line should, in the near future, be in a fair way to completion. Not only will a large area of Turkey's Eastern possessions be thus provided with up-to-date railway communication, but it is probable that Sir William Willcocks' great irrigation scheme for Mesopotamia, which has been in suspense, will be taken up again with renewed vigour, bringing fertility to a now arid region."

Train thefts and outrages.

31. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912 :—

"When a proposal was made to introduce corridor trains in India a howl of protest was made by Anglo-Indian newspapers, except the Times of India. But will these critics please explain how they propose to prevent the horrible train outrages, attacks and thefts? The most recent outrage and tragedy on the Bengal and North-Western Railway, in which a female compartment was raided by an Afghan dacoit who threw two females out through the window from a running train and robbed the third, affords another instance of the futility of the existing preventives. The alarm chord is useless on such occasions, and nothing will save the mild and lawful inhabitants of India from plunders and outrages but the corridor trains—at any rate for Indian passengers. We think the members of the Local and Imperial Councils should urge the subject on the attention of the Government of India, failing which we must ask for a lady conductor being employed to protect passengers in each female carriage. Every year train outrages and thefts are increasing and railway travel, especially for women, is becoming less and less safe. We cannot understand why the corridor train is vehemently opposed. There would be enough privacy to the second and first class passengers if carriages are built on the plan of the S. I. R. with the passage at one side of the carriage instead of in the centre. The people should in each province ask for the corridor train and send memorials."

The Railway Board.

32. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912 :—

"We think the time has come for an enquiry as to whether it would not be much more economical and convenient for the efficient transaction of railway affairs if the Railway Board were abolished altogether and the President of the Board created an Ordinary Member of Council, presiding over the Railway Department. Competent authorities have borne testimony to the fact that the Board has been tried and found deplorably wanting. It cannot now be doubted that the administration of Railways by the Railway Board has been found unsuitable and inefficient in various ways. Capital rightly points out that the appointment of Sir Henry Burt as Additional Member for congestion should be convincing of the hopelessness of the Board as at present constituted. The Board has, according to our commercial contemporary of Calcutta, so far shown an enormous capacity for doing nothing. The agitation which has been started by certain influential people in London and India to induce the Viceroy and the Secretary of State to grant extension of service to some Members of the Board has given our Capital an opportunity to make certain suggestions in regard to the future constitution of the Board. It is rather surprising that the commercial community which had so long insisted upon the appointment of a commercial representative to the Presidentship of the Board should now propose that a Member of the Indian Civil Service should be appointed to it. 'What the Railway Board wants,' says Capital, 'is a Civilian President, who has a head for figures in addition to conspicuous administrative ability. Such a man the Government of India possess in Mr. Gillan, and the whole mercantile community would rejoice to see him succeed Sir T. Wynne. The other members will have to be railway experts, one for traffic, the other for engineering ; and above all they must be men with ideas, able to keep abreast of events and active and willing enough to do a day's honest work. Given these qualifications they will get plenty of the proper kind of advice and assistance from the public bodies who protect the interests of trade and commerce and general economic development.' This is certainly an opportune moment for considering the advisability of abolishing the Railway Board and creating a separate department of Railways, the Posts and Telegraphs, and the Public Works in charge of an independent Member, who should have a seat on the Viceroy's Executive Council.

(h)—Miscellaneous.

The Urdu and Roman scripts.

33. Writing under the heading "A new rival to Urdu," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 18th November 1912, says that some members of the ruling race, owing to their ignorance of the country's real condition, have joined the Hindus in an attempt to do away with the Urdu script and replace it by the Roman character. The advocacy of the Roman character by certain Anglo-Indians, as recently in London at the East India Association, and especially by missionaries is more dangerous for the Urdu-knowing public than the Hindu opposition, because the Roman character is used by the present rulers of the country. The supporters of Urdu should, therefore, display even greater activity and courage in combating the threatened danger than they have ever yet exhibited in opposing Hindi.

34. Writing about the recent demand of a security of Rs. 2,000 from the Afghan of Peshawar, the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 20th November 1912, says that the article objected to contains no word or sentiment calculated to bring Government into hatred or contempt. After remarking that the event has practically proved that the Afghan was not supported or subsidised by the Government of the Frontier Province, it expresses a hope that the people of Peshawar will not let financial difficulties kill the only Muslim paper in their Province.

Security from the Afghan.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 21st November 1912, says that, if the writings complained against are really objectionable under the law, no one can complain of notice having been taken of them. It would, nevertheless, have been in consonance with the usual practice if a mere warning had been considered sufficient in the first instance. It is, moreover, inexplicable why no action is taken against the Hindustan and certain other Hindu papers which continue, in spite of having been repeatedly warned, to give dire offence to "Hindus and Musalmans."

The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 20th November 1912, says that it remains to be seen whether the Afghan will be able to preserve its existence. Two frontier papers—the Edward Gazette (Abbottabad), and the Frontier Advocate (Dera Ismail Khan)—have already ceased to exist in consequence of having been called upon to furnish security.

Similar remarks are published by the Hindu (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912.

The Parkash (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912, says that the proprietor of the Afghan tendered an apology and promised to be more careful in the future; but it was in vain. Although the Afghan has followed an objectionable policy from the very outset, still the Editor is sorry that it should have been asked to deposit a security. There was a time when Government considered it deserving of help, whereas now it has had to demand security from it. The change is due to the Afghan's own doings.

35. In its leader the Tribune (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, publishes the following :—

The All-India Sanitary Conference.

"* * * The first resolution was that 'the introduction on modern lines of town-planning schemes and the relief of congested areas in town are among the most urgently required sanitary needs in India, and that the time has come for experimental action on these lines in selected areas.' In large towns and cities where congestion and overcrowding have already very injuriously affected public health, it is absolutely necessary that some steps should be taken in consonance with this resolution. In the matter of building new houses or creating what may be called suburbs of large cities, Municipal authorities are sometimes deplorably lax. So forgetful sometimes are they of their duties and responsibilities in this matter that in not a few cases they have allowed the reproduction, in what are parts of civil stations, of veritable cities. The result in not a few cases is that in areas where model houses designed in accordance with the requirements of sanitation and hygiene should have been allowed to be built, all sorts of tenements of a most overcrowded and congested description have sprung up. In considering the plans of these houses no regard appears to have been paid to the dictates of sanitation and hygiene. * * *

"Two resolutions were adopted suggesting amendations of the law relating to the acquisition of land for public purposes, and its interpretation with a view to placing it on a clear footing. The first of these was that 'the term 'public purpose'' inthe preamble of the Land Acquisition Act should be held to include the acquisition of so much land, immediately adjacent to the land required for any public improvement, as it might be necessary to acquire in order to complete that improvement in the interests of the community, or make it financially possible.' This suggestion would considerably extend the scope of the Land Acquisition Act. Though a little hard on the owners of property it would assuredly operate for the good of the people. It would enable local bodies to act with greater freedom and to carry out large schemes of public improvement unfettered. Of course a local body has no right to buy any property and to make money out of it; but when the profits derived from such transactions are all to be spent for the public good, there is every justification for its action. * * *

"* * * The second resolution in the same connection was to the effect that to meet the cases in which it is financially impracticable to apply the Land Acquisition Act, an Act should be introduced embodying, on the general lines of the English Act and in particular the necessary safeguards of the English Act principle of betterment, under which the local authority have the right to a share in the improved value of the property which results from the carrying out of the improvement scheme, and also the German Act principle of redistribution by which power is given to duly constituted authority to alter the shapes of or otherwise to re-arrange plots so as to render them more suitable for building purposes.' The suggestion here made would, if adopted, introduce the principle of compulsion, though in a mild form and fenced with proper safeguards. There is no doubt much force in the argument of those who object on principle to compulsion, but it must not be forgotten that unless and until some sort of compulsion is employed, the introduction of improvement schemes on a really large and comprehensive scale will not be feasible. *

"There are two more resolutions which also relate to improved sanitation and the betterment of dwelling-houses. One of these is 'that in congested areas action is desirable on the general lines of the provisions of the English Housing of the Working Classes Act of 1890 and 1909, adapted to conditions in India, and in particular with reference to (a) improving (? empowering) local bodies to prepare and carry out improvement schemes in insanitary areas and strengthening their powers in dealing with obstructive and unhealthy houses, (b) simplifying the procedure for acquisition of such areas and for assessment of compensation; (c) securing the regular inspection of insanitary dwelling houses and prompt action in dealing with defects.' The second is 'that in all towns in India local bye-laws should be examined and where necessary revised with a view to the provisions of sufficient air, light and ventilation in every house and room according to prescribed standards; that after a period of grace there should be an absolute veto on the occupation of rooms which fail to reach these standards; that provision should be made to prevent over-crowding, and that sanitary officers should be employed with powers sufficient to see that such bye-laws are enforced.' Both these resolutions enunciate principles of considerable importance; and the reforms that they suggest are very urgently needed to remove evils from which not a few large towns and cities at present grievously suffer. It is further true that no sanitary reform is possible in these towns unless rules more or less on the lines indicated in those two resolutions are formulated and impartially yet vigorously enforced. But it cannot be denied that they embody and seek to enforce the principle of compulsion in its most direct, and consequently the most objectionable, form. There is, however, a proviso attached to both these resolutions, which would take out of the compulsion recommended in the resolutions their sting. * *

"* * * There is yet another resolution which also relates to the improvement of dwelling-houses. It is to the effect 'that as a measure of demonstrations and education, efforts should be made in different parts of India to construct a model town or quarter of a town, with broad roads, sufficient air, light and ventilation at least behind and before each house, good water-supply and lighting, efficient drainage and conservancy, rat-proof and mosquito-proof houses in which over-crowding is not allowed, up-to-date markets, slaughter houses, bathing places, open spaces, recreation grounds, and an ample sanitary staff under expert supervision.' We hope efforts will be made to give effect to it in the new Delhi which is yet to be built. After it has been carried out in the new Delhi in an adequate manner, the municipal committees of various other places in the country might be asked to send their officers to see these new houses and to try to reproduce them in the areas under their charge."

* * * * * * *

Drink and Crime and the Excise Department.

36. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 27th November 1912:—

* * * * * *

"The test of the successful working of the excise department does not at all lie in the enhanced revenue to Government. In fact, considered per se, such enhanced revenue constitutes a condemnation of the department. What the department of the Excise in an Indian Province should aim at is the reduction in the consumption of liquor. Such reduction would repay the country manyfold for any loss of revenue that might take place thereby. There is a clear and an intimate connection between drink and crime, and less drinking would mean less crime. Then the gain in the moral efficiency that must result on account of reduction in drunkenness cannot but be considerable. Any increase in the consumption of liquor cannot but be a calamity to the country and it does not in the least matter whether that increase takes place in the consumption of licit or illicit liquor. The increase itself is open to objection on moral as well as on economic grounds."

37. Writing under the heading 'The Viceroy's Tour,' the Tribune (Lahore), of the 24th November 1912, makes the following remarks :—

Lord Hardinge at Jaipur.

"No one could have failed to have been struck by the singular grace, charm and sympathy of the numerous public utterances of Lord Hardinge during his present tour. Beginning with Kashmir His Excellency has visited a number of Native States, besides receiving addresses from various public bodies and representatives of the nobility. In every instance his utterances have been marked by a felicity of phrase and sentiment and an appropriateness of expression which have left an abiding effect. Not less remarkable is the intimacy of knowledge and the familiarity with past history displayed in these speeches. At the State banquet at Jaipur, at a similar function at Udaipur, in Kashmir, and elsewhere, the Viceroy spoke on subjects intimately concerning those States and justly complimented the Chiefs on their loyalty and efficient administration. At Jaipur His Excellency spoke of the embarras de richesse by which a Viceroy is faced, when acknowledging the hospitality of a Chief with glorious traditions and great wealth. Lord Hardinge re-called the famous ancestors of the Maharaja of Jaipur, Raja Man Singh and Mirza Raja Jai Singh I. His Excellency referred to Maharaja Sarvai Jai Singh II, the founder of the famous Observatory at Benares, and Maharaja Ram Singh, the present Maharaja's immediate predecessor. An outbreak of cholera has unfortunately interfered with the full ceremonial of the Viceroy's visit to Jaipur and many of the great Thakurs could not come with their followers to the capital. Lord Hardinge spoke with great sympathy of this calamity and said that, if he had thought that by cancelling his visit he could have saved a single life, he would have declined the pressing invitation of the Maharaja to visit Jaipur."

I.—Politics.

(a)—Foreign.

War in the Balkans.

1. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 23rd November 1912, publishes a leader headed "See whether there remains any part of our ashes." After referring to the past greatness of Islam, the paper says that, of the 25 Muslim States in existence in the last century, there remains only one (Turkey), which is, moreover, as good as lost. The Cross is determined to crucify it, too; and the Trinity has decided to sweep Unity out of this last remnant of Islamic rule. The Turks are undoubtedly making a brave stand at Tchataldja and Adrianople, and are even likely to win the day. The final result will, however, be only what the statesmen of Europe have already decided upon, viz., the expulsion of the Turks from Europe. Continuing, the paper remarks that, if even half of what Reuter has been wiring about the war in the Balkans be true, Turkey may be said to have expired. "We," it adds, have forgotten God's commandment—"Provide yourselves with strength to combat your enemies." It is this that gives the Parliaments of France and England an opportunity to express joy over "our" failures.

The paper has also a note headed "Excitement among the Arabs." It is the people of Arabia, says the paper, who have been most deeply moved over the outbreak of war in the Balkans. Those glorious springs of bravery which once enabled the Arabs to bring the whole world under the sway of Islam will be stirred up again. Next it publishes some verses by an Arab named Abdul Halim Hilmi Effendi who urges the Turks to give a good account of themselves on the battlefield; enquires whether the Crescent flag will be removed from Omar's mosque at Jerusalem, and whether crosses will be planted near the Kaaba; and cries shame on the Arabs for their inertness while war is being waged in the Balkans. Commenting on the same, the paper remarks that Indian Musalmans also should learn a lesson from the poem. They are foreigners in their own country and are now in every way a weak, degraded and petty people. If their brethren of Turkey are wielding the sword in the Balkans, they in India should fight with their brains, waging war on ignorance, indifference, and immorality. If they prove victorious and acquire "the Kingdom of high character" they will become supreme all over the world.

The paper also publishes a Cairo letter headed "The Crusade," in which the writer—Abu Said, of Rangoon—says that a contemplation of the oppression which is being practised on Muhammadans in these days of enlightenment sends a shiver through one's heart. The body of Islam had already been wounded by oppression perpetrated in Morocco, Tripoli and Persia; but now the cutting off of the very head of the Prophet's faith is contemplated. Four European States have, at the instance of the great Powers, been waging war on the Islamic kingdom of Turkey. The King of Bulgaria has been declaring that he intends freeing his country from infidels, i.e., Muhammadans. His Christian subjects and soldiers enter into the houses of Muhammadans and ask the latter to accept Christianity. The followers of Islam, however, refuse, on which their property is plundered, they are butchered like sheep, and their wives and daughters are outraged and killed, children and aged people even not being spared. Some houses were locked up and set on fire, and their inmates burnt to death. Again pig's flesh was thrown into mosques, which too have been pulled down. The King of Greece says that he is fighting in the name of the Holy Cross; and the same is the case with the rulers of Montenegro and Servia.

In a second letter headed "Invasion of the East by the West," the writer says that Europe's unholy intrigues and satanic acts to exterminate Islam have startled Muhammadans everywhere; filling them with the fear that Europe is about to involve Islam in serious trouble, and that efforts have been begun to sweep the Quran into oblivion. Indeed, he adds, the unclean tongue of a certain European statesman has given utterances to the words that civilisation cannot spread so long as the Quran is in existence, and that the time has arrived to avenge the doings of the Prophet by degrading his followers. Next he refers to the recent happenings in Morocco, Tripoli and the Balkans, and goes on to say that the promotion of union among Muhammadans over the present misfortunes of the Islamic world has led to new means being adopted to prevent them from congregating at their religious centres. After remarking that the pilgrimage to Mecca is, in a way, being stopped, he tells how France and Russia have adopted measures for that end. Proceeding, he asserts that, but for incitement by Europe, the Balkan confederates would never have waged war on Turkey, and that Europe is at the bottom of the oppression which the allied forces are practising on Muhammadans. The war has, however, brought home to all Musalmans the fact that their existence is bound up with that of the Ottoman Empire. The writer then goes on to state that he is going to Constantinople, and that he will not only take part in the war, but will also attend on the wounded and contribute to the papers.

Adverting to the telegram from Reuter that, if the Porte is not agreeable to the terms of peace proposed by Bulgaria, the latter is willing to consider any others that Turkey may have to put forward, the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 24th November 1912, remarks that the reason for Bulgaria's climb down is that she has sustained a severe drubbing. She owes her escape from ruin to the international fleets at Constantinople, and to the secret pressure which the powers are bringing to bear on the Turkish Government. After ridiculing the Bulgarians for their boasts that they would dictate the terms of peace at the Capital of Turkey, the paper writes that it is these jesters who wanted to drive Islam out of Europe. It also refers to the message relating to the refusal of the ambassadors of the Powers in Constantinople to withdraw their foreign troops from the Capital. Commenting on this it observes that the ambassadors could not have acted otherwise, for the reason that, with the exception of these troops and warships, there is no other machinery at Constantinople to compel the Porte to accept terms of peace agreeable to Christianity.

In its issue of the 28th November 1912, the same paper publishes a letter headed "Come out," in which the writer—"Faqir," of Lahore—calls "on the symbol of Islamic might and power (? the Crescent)" to come out, to destroy the enemy's forces as if by lightning, and to bring Muhammadans the news of victory. It is also asked to cast its (protecting) shadow over Muhammadans, who will then prove "that they are and will continue, a living race." They will also show that they can defend Islam, the Caliphate, the Kaaba and the Prophet's tomb.

Writing under the heading "The present stage of the war," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 25th November 1912, says that the brave stand which the Turks have made at Tchataldja has turned the tide of the war. Instead of desiring to make an entry into Constantinople, the Bulgarians are now anxious to save their skins. Since, however, Russia and some other powers side with Bulgaria there is a fear of the Turkish Government being prevented from continuing the war. This is all the more probable as it has a weak person like Kiamal Pasha at its helm and the Foreign portfolio is held by a Christian. Nevertheless, if the British Government were to follow its traditional policy (of sympathy towards Turkey) and remind Russia, who is the real author of the war, of her Foreign Minister's declaration about the maintenance of the status quo the Balkan trouble would not prove a disaster for the Turks; while Great Britain would make a grand political achievement, for she would win the hearts of Muhammadans throughout the world.

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War.

2. A Gouhar Ganj (Bhopal) correspondent, writing to the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, says that the Begam of Bhopal has ordered the starting of funds throughout her State in aid of the Turkish sufferers. In pursuance of this order, Saiyid Habib-ul-Hasan, a Vakil, made an effective speech after prayers on the recent 'Id day at the instance of Mian Nemat Ulla Khan, the local Nazim. The speaker observed in the course of his remarks that the European Powers were under the impression that Islam had been reduced to such a position that the Cross should now replace the Crescent.

Commenting on the press communique contradicting the rumour that the Government of India is averse from the despatch of any Medical mission to Turkey, the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th December 1912, heartily thanks Lord Hardinge for the announcement on behalf of all Indian Muhammadans.

Hindus and the Balkan War.

3. Writing under the heading "Hindus sympathy with the Turks," the Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 23rd November 1912, employing arguments similar to those already advanced by the Hindustan, &c., finds fault with those Bengalis who have been sympathising with the Turks. After observing that the difficulties which now beset the Turks are as nothing in comparison with the oppression practised on Hindus by Mahmud, Tamerlane, &c., the paper asks how it can be possible for Hindus to sympathise with Turkey and stint themselves in order to help Muhammadans.

The Arjun (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, has a note headed "Hindu help to Turkey," in which the paper says that it would be contrary to their religion for Hindus to give money in aid of a society (the reference is to the Red Crescent Society) which is being financed by the sale proceeds of the skins of sacrificed cows.

In a note headed "The Balkan War and sedition in India," the Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, states that a member of Parliament recently enquired from the Secretary of State for India whether the latter was aware that Bengali agitators had, in conjunction with Muhammadans, been holding meetings to bring Government into hatred and contempt. After transcribing the reply returned to the question, the paper asks Hindus to pay special attention to the matter. The above question has probably been asked because Babu Bepin Chandra Pal and some other Bengalis, whom Government regards as agitators, have begun to take an active part in the meetings held in aid of the Turks. These gentlemen are thoroughly loyal to Government. Still, if Muhammadans were to indulge in any violence, the blame would fall, not on them, but on Hindus. The agitation against the Colonization Bill was caused by Musalmans, but it was Hindus who suffered the consequences.

The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 27th November 1912, says that Babu Bepin Chandra Pal's reward for having participated in the above meetings is that he has been accused in England of disseminating seditious ideas. The conduct of Musalmans, it adds, is always pardonable, whatever excitement they may display, or however adversely they may criticise the policy of Sir Edward Grey. Some members of the ruling race have, however, become suspicious of these Bengalis who have joined Muhammadans in the present excitement and have expressed a senseless sympathy with the Turks. Babu Bepin and those other Bengalis of his way of thinking should think before they act; otherwise, they will assuredly involve Hindus in trouble.

England and the Balkan War.

4. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 26th November 1912, has a note headed "Stupefaction," in which it says that the repeated defeats of the Turks are "so disappointing for Constantinople" that the European Powers are now convinced that the time for the accomplishment of their centuries-old (sinister) intentions (? regarding Turkey) has arrived. (? The consequent) flutterings of the heart have had the effect of stupefying England first of all. In (his speech) in the Guildhall on the 9th November, Mr. Asquith tried to make "all his companions" co-operate with him in sharpening the dagger with which the body of Turkey will shortly be divided. "In this way" England wishes to carry out the grand achievement of having wielded the mightiest sword in dismembering the body of Islam. Next the paper quotes (? a verse) to the effect that "Their words have betrayed (their spirit of) enmity, and the intentions kept concealed in their hearts are worse than those they have expressed." Commenting on the same it writes:—"This is the reality which we have disclosed to Muhammadans, if only they act with sense and reflection."

Mr. Churchill and the Balkan War.

5. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 3rd December 1912, has a note headed "Mr. Churchill's unfair attack on Turkey," in which it complains that the leading members of the Liberal Ministry have been patting the Allies on the back. Their religious prejudices have overcome their statesmenship and lead them to disregard the feelings of His Majesty's ten crores of Muslim subjects. Recently Mr, Asquith expressed joy at the Greek occupation of Salonika, and now Mr. Churchill has declared the Balkan invasion of Turkey to be justifiable, which cannot but wound the susceptibilities of Muhammadans.

Writing under the heading 'Mr. Churchill's effusion' the Observer (Lahore), of the 4th December 1912, makes the following remarks:—

"We appeal to the King Emperor against the speeches now being made by members of the Radical Ministry in England. Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Masterman, Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Asquith have given utterance to sentiments that have wounded deeply the feelings of millions of subjects of His Imperial Majesty. Mr. Churchill has, however, beaten all of them hollow by remarking that 'there never was a clearer case for war than that between the Balkan States and Turkey.' That no falser observation could have been made is proved by the depredations of Bulgarian robbers who are now devastating Macedonia. Is this the case for the Allies which in the eyes of Mr. Churchill is clearer than crystal? If observations like those made by the Minister for the Navy do not constitute a breach of British neutrality, nothing else could be characterised as such. It is, however, doubtful whether Mr. Asquith will do anything to gag the mouth of his obstreperous colleague."

European Powers and the Balkan War.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 25th November 1912, publishes an article headed "Europe's bigotry in connection with the Balkan War." During the Italo-Turkish war, says the paper, none of the Italian Statesmen ever endeavoured to prove that the contest was of a political character. Nay, they always followed the contrary course; and Europe proved by its conduct that the war was a crusade "based on bigotry and Christianity." The forces proceeding to the front were exhorted to earn merit, in this as well as the next world, by relieving the people concerned from the Turkish yoke. Again, wherever Christianity triumphed (in Tripoli) crosses were hung in the mosques; while the indifference of Muhammadans to their duty in the matter enabled the European Powers to go on with their work of partitioning Muslim States. Indeed, the only rivalry between these Powers is in the matter of being the first to swallow a Muhammadan possession, to practise which oppression all sorts of pretexts are invented. Continuing, the paper says that the declaration by the Macedonian Committee published by the Times the other week, leaves no room for doubt that the Balkan War also is the outcome of religious passions and is intended to free the Christian subjects of Turkey. Europe, it appears, desires to fan into a flame the smouldering fire of envy and malice that has been lying hidden in its heart since the days of the crusades. The religious conference, which met last year at Liverpool and was attended by representatives from all over Europe, discussed the question of how to exterminate Islam. A copy of the report of the proceedings of this conference has fallen into the Editor's hands and shows that a deal of intolerable nonsense was talked about Islam. A German philosopher is reported to have remarked in plain language that Christianity would now take its revenge on Islam, and that it was highly shameful for Christians that their sacred places should continue in Muslim possession. The Zamindar then goes on to say that the present war is being waged at the instance of the Powers, which could have, if they had so wished, damped the ardour of the Balkan States. But the essence of European politics consists in not restoring to the Crescent even an inch of soil that has been taken from it. It has hitherto been the settled policy of Europe to use every means to reduce the number of Turkish possessions and wrest the sceptre from the descendants of Othman. The Allies have declared in clear words that the war is of a religious character, and the first shot fired by them was hailed with rejoicings in churches. Europe, however, keeps silent, the plain reason for which is that it is engaged in waging a crusade. Muhammadans should, therefore, leave nothing undone to help their own kingdom (Turkey), the extinction of which would end their own days also.

In its issue of the 28th November 1912, the Zamindar remarks that this is a fine sort of justice. The Balkan States were first incited to attack Turkey, but now when the latter has hammered them, especially the ringleader, Bulgaria, she is being forced to conclude peace so that the Bulgarians may not only be saved from ruin, but also be given Albania and Macedonia. If the continuance of the war is likely to strain the relations between the Powers, and to result in hostilities between Austria and Russia, that is what the Editor desires from the very bottom of his heart.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, reports that the Power's ambassadors at Constantinople have requested the Porte to avert the danger of a universal war in Europe by expediting the conclusion of peace. It is to be hoped, however, that the Turkish Government will return "a crushing reply" to the request and remind Europe of the indifference with which it has so far treated Turkey.

The Powers and the alleged Bulgarian atrocities.

7. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 4th December 1912, publishes the recent telegrams from Reuter about the alleged Bulgarian atrocities. Commenting on the same it remarks that when the false news—which was the work of European statecraft—was spread in Constantinople that, in exasperation at their repeated reverses, the Turks would massacre the Christian residents of the said city, the Powers lost no time in despatching warships to the Turkish Capital for the protection of Christian blood. Now, however, when the cruel and tyrannical Bulgarians are indiscriminately killing the inhabitants of Macedonia, both Turks and Christians, not a single Power thinks of interfering with them. Such is the bloody European civilization of which the West feels so proud.

The Balkan War and jehad.

8. The Tahzib i-Niswan (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, publishes a communication headed "Islam in difficulty." After remarking that the whole Islamic world is beset with difficulties and that the Balkan States have imparted a religious colour to the war with Turkey, the writer—Fatima Sughra, of Delhi—enquires whether it would be improper in Muhammadans to proclaim a Jehad. Next she appeals to Muslim women, especially those of Delhi, to follow the example of their Lahore sisters and establish committees for the collection of money in aid of the Turks.

The Powers and Turkey.

9. Writing under the heading "War between the Cross and the Crescent," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, publishes a translation of a lecture delivered by a Mr. I. M. Abdul Aziz at a meeting held at Colombo on the 29th October last, in connection with the Balkan war. The speaker is reported to have said, in the course of his remarks, that, since the decline of the Ottoman Empire in Europe, the neighbouring Christian Kingdoms had constantly kept it engaged in war and compelled it to conclude treaties relinquishing parts of its European provinces. The great powers of Europe had several times undertaken to preserve its integrity, but their responsibility had always been a paper one, while their individual and collective attitude towards Turkey had frequently proved most calamitous for her. On the occasion of the Greek War of Independence the Powers, including even England, combined to destroy the Turkish sea power and thereby facilitated the task of Greece.

England and France undoubtedly helped Turkey during the Crimean War, but not out of sympathy. Their only object was to prevent Russian expansion. An idea of their solicitude for the integrity of the Turkish Empire could be formed from their respective doings in Egypt and Algeria. Besides, England's help to Turkey during the Crimean War was merely a return for the service rendered by the Sultan to the English on the occasion of the Sepoy Mutiny (sic). According to a correspondent of a Berlin paper, it was due only to the mutual jealousies of the Powers that the Turks had so far been allowed to remain in Constantinople. Could the Powers, however, come to an agreement as to which of them should exercise sway over the Bosphorus, not one of them would have taken pity on Turkey's wretched condition, not to speak of saving her. The Turkish massacre of Christians in Bulgaria and Armenia resulted in a great outcry throughout Europe, especially in England. But the Powers have taken no notice of the cold-blooded massacre of Muhammadans in Tripoli, Persia, and elsewhere.

Christianity and Islam.

10. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 24th November 1912, say, that Muhammadans in all parts of the world are being tried by God. After remarking that the present is a time of trouble for them, it complains that the War in the Balkans has been given the colour of one between Islam and Christianity. The Prophet's followers have had an opportunity of distinguishing between their true and hypocritical friends. Next it expresses its inability to understand why the above two faiths should be at enmity. It is patent, however, that the first stone has been thrown by Christianity, a class of whose missionaries had taken umbrage at the spread of Islam in Africa. "Never had Muhammadans borne to Christian priests the enmity which these priests now display towards the followers of Islam." Reuter's telegrams show that Christian priests and preachers always accompany Bulgarian forces and use the name of Christ to inflame the soldiers. Europeans charge Musalmans with being mere puppets in the hands of their mullahs, but what is the class that to-day is dictating the actions of statesmen in European countries?

The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 27th November 1912, publishes a communication headed "The dangerous rays from the sun of civilisation." The writer finds fault with the Young Turks, who, he says, have ruined themselves by adopting European civilisation and the luxurious life of Paris. The result is that to-day Muhammadans have not a single supporter in the wide world, and it is being said in the greater part of Europe that they can no longer be allowed to remain in that Continent. Europe should, however, bear in mind that, were it to try till Doomsday, it would still not be able to ruin Islam. To oppose Islam is to offer opposition to God Himself. As for the worship of the Cross and the Trinity, it has already received its quietus at the hands of Europeans themselves and cannot now be revived. This was the first work which Islam had to do and it was accomplished long ago. The writer concludes by urging Muhammadans to rise and help the Turks with money.

Should the Turks conclude peace?

11. In its leader, the Observer (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912, publishes the following:—

"Although many of the war telegrams sent by Reuter have proved contradictory or unreliable, there can be no reason to doubt the accuracy of the report that the ambassadors of the Powers are urging the Porte to conclude peace 'in view of the danger of complications.' What the danger is, it is not at all difficult to see. The war threatens to set Russia and Austria by the ears and also to embroil the allies of the two Powers, that is to say, Germany and Italy, on one side, and France on the other. It is feared that unless Turkey accepts the terms of peace offered by Bulgaria and her confederates, there will be a universal war in Europe. And what are the terms offered by the Allies? These are that the Turks should make over practically the whole of European Turkey, with the exception of Constantinople and the small surrounding area, to the Allies. Europe evidently desires that the Porte should unhesitatingly submit to these demands for the sake of Europe.

"But besides the interests of Europe, the Porte must also take into consideration the interests of the Turks, the interests of the Muslim world, and the interests of the Orient. Europe has never done any altruistic act for the sake of Turkey. If some European Powers helped the Turks in the past, it was, to quote a Persian saying, through the hatred of Moaviyah, not through the love of Ali. It was to maintain the balance of power that Europe fought on the side of the Turks, in the same way as Europe fought on the side of Spain and Portugal during the Napoleonic wars. Europe has, therefore, no moral right to urge the Porte to conclude peace. It has robbed Turkey, during the recent years, of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Tripoli. It has deprived the Muslim world of the Khanates of Turkestan and Morocco. It has destroyed the constitutional régime in Persia, discredited it in Turkey, and is seeking to foil it in China. With the blood of the Persian martyrs dripping from the swords of its Cossacks, with the cries of the orphans of innocent Arabs resounding in the wilderness of Tripoli, with the heart-rending anguish of the widows of non-combatant Muslims pervading the theatre of the present campaign, is it not most cynical on the part of Europe to ask the Turks to patch up a peace for the sake of European tranquillity? It was not the Porte that provoked the war. It is the Balkan Allies, the protéges of the Powers, that are responsible of it. Let the Powers then urge the Allies to withdraw from Turkish territory and let them honourably carry out their word that the status quo would be maintained after the war, but let them not talk of the Turks accepting the terms of the Allies. If the whole of Europe should be plunged in war as a consequence of the prolongation of hostilities, what is it to Turkey? Has Europe ever paid any regard to the interests of the Porte that the Porte should consider the interests of Europe? It is now that the tide has begun to turn. The Turks will be false to themselves, false to the Muslim world, and false to the Orient, if they listen to such representations and conclude a dishonourable peace, England alone has done something for Islam, and Islam is grateful to her for her benign rule. But England is really not a part and parcel of the continent of Europe. She is not bound to Russia or France by the ties of alliance that bind Germany and Italy to Austria. She cannot be embroiled in the war if her Ministers so wish it. There is, therefore, little fear of England being touched by the war. The only fear is that the Turks may disappear from Europe as a result of the general conflict. But a life of dishonour is worse than death. If the whole Turkish race should be wiped off the face of the earth in the struggle, and extinction be also the fate of the despoilers of Turkey, the war of extermination would redound more to the credit of the Turks than an acceptance of the terms offered by the Allies. It will be a case of

"عاشق کا جنازہ ہے ذرا دھوم سے نکلے۔"

'(Ashiq ka Janaza hai, zara dhum se nikle)'

('It is the funeral of a lover, let it be performed with due ceremony).'

The British proposal.

12. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912 :—

"A Reuter's message from Berlin talks of a British proposal for a conference of ambassadors to consider the question of Albania, the Ægean Islands and the Dardanelles; and unless its details be published, it is too early to make an attempt at understanding what the proposal is. Does Sir Edward Grey imply that the other questions, we mean those of Macedonia, Thrace and the war, will be settled by the Turks and the Balkan Allies among themselves, and that when these have been settled one way or the other, the ambassadors will step in to decide the fate of the remaining portion of Turkish territory? Or does the suggestion mean that Turkey will be allowed to remain in effective possession of the rest of her territory, including Macedonia? The latter alternative is so very improbable that one is inclined to believe that whereas the Allies will be left to settle their terms about the other points with Turkey direct, and while Turkey may refuse—and with reason—to negotiate with the Allies about Albania, the Ægean Islands and the Dardanelles, the Powers will intervene to settle the fate of these parts of the Ottoman Empire? It is difficult to answer the questions unless full details of the suggestion be known, and we prefer to await them before expressing our opinion with any degree of confidence."

England and Asiatic Kingdoms.

13. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 23rd November 1912, has a note headed "England in danger," in which it translates portions of Lord Roberts' recent speech at Manchester. Commenting on the same, it says that if England has really lost her military strength she should conclude offensive and defensive alliances with Eastern States. This would not only raise her in the estimation of Orientals, but would also greatly strengthen her hands. If she is really weak and still continues indifferent to the waging of jehads on Asiatic Kingdoms it is difficult to say how long Orientals will remain under her sway.

The paper also publishes a letter in which the writer asserts that the time is not far distant when the storm which Christianity and the West have raised against Islam, the bulwark of peace, will involve the non-Islamic world in adversity. He, therefore, advises Indian Muhammadans strongly to urge the East—Turkey, Britain, Japan, Afghanistan, China and Persia—to unite against European powers in defence of truth and justice.

Indians and emigration.

14. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 3rd December 1912 : —

"The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale said that the Indians are a home-loving people, and they would not have been in South Africa but for the indentured system adopted by Government. This is true, but if he meant thereby that Indians should not emigrate into foreign countries, to earn in the open market the fruits of their industry, he can hardly be in the right. People of Madras and Bengal have a great opening in Burma and Ceylon, but what about Punjab and United Provinces ? Bombay and Central Provinces are probably the homes of mills and factories and employ working men on a fairly large scale. In the Punjab there are special reasons why men should, if they like, emigrate. These reasons are both social and economic, and it is not true that workmen have an unlimited field of remunerative employment now. The wages are low and opportunities few. The cost of living is increasing by leaps and bounds and as the Indian masses become more enlightened, they should find an outlet for their ambitious career, if they have the capacity for it. Moreover, Indians have for centuries past been a stay-at-home, conservative, timid and resourceless people. The emigrant after wandering in search of work returns with some experience of the outer world and is found to be in all cases a more resourceful, self-reliant worker. Even women acquire pluck and are all the better for their exile. We can hardly approve of closing the outlet, whatever may be home requirements, and Indian emigration should not be stopped on any account under fair and equitable condition."

Muhammadan loyalty.

15. Writing under the heading "Is Muslim loyalty an admitted fact ?" the Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 23rd November 1912, says that during the recent unrest in India Muhammadans strained every nerve to prove Hindus rebels and to represent themselves loyal subjects ; going the length even of saying that, if the British Government had to wage war even on the Sultan, they would unhesitatingly take up arms against the Turks. After remarking that this assertion by them was only lip-speech, the paper observes that a consideration of what they have been saying in their speeches and writings since the outbreak of the Turco-Italian War leaves no room for doubt that they can give to no other crowned head the love which they bear the rulers of Turkey and Persia. Some time back, it adds, the Siraj-ul-Akhbar of Kabul charged the correspondent of the Zamindar (Abdul Wali Khan) with being a spy of the British Government, and this at once led Musalmans to pour on his head the grossest abuse. Will they say, asks the paper, whether it constitutes treason to one's country to work as a spy for one's own Government and collect information for it about the rulers of foreign countries ? In conclusion, it asks the Prophet's followers to give up the double-faced policy followed by them.

Hindus and their British rulers.

16. The Arjun (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, publishes a note entitled "The English are our brothers." Adverting to the rivalry between England and Germany, it reports that a respectable Hindu has expressed the opinion that if Britain were strong enough on the sea she would have nothing to fear (from the Fatherland), that Hindus ought to regard the British Government as their own and render it pecuniary help, and present it with a warship. The idea, adds the paper, is highly commendable, but Hindus should rest assured that England is by no means inferior, in fact she is superior, to Germany. If the two countries ever go to war twenty-one crores of Hindus will willingly help their Government, not only with money, but also with their lives ; for the reason that the English, who come from the same Aryan stock, are "our" brothers, and rescued "us" from the oppression that was practised on "us" in pre-British days.

Hindu demands on Government.

17. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, has a letter under the heading "What do Hindus want?" After referring to the British Government's high sense of justice, the writer states that Hindus make the following demands on Government :—

(1) That cow-killing be forthwith abolished in India.

(2) That Hindi be made the universal language of the country.

(3) That the frontier Hindus, who are daily looted by tribal dacoits, be permitted to keep arms.

(4) That primary education be made free and compulsory, so that Hindus may rise to the level of other civilized nations and not have to suffer humiliation in Canada, British Columbia, etc.

(5) That they may be given a sufficiently large share in the administration, so that they may be able fully to safeguard their rights.

(6) That the Hindu University may be allowed to affiliate mufassil Colleges also.

(7) That the number of Hindus in the Police force be greatly increased.

(8) That the Land Alienation Act be suitably amended and Hindus of higher castes be granted the necessary rights under it.

(9) That the proposed amendments to the Pre-emption Act be adopted at a very early date.

(10) That the King Emperor should pass some months of the year at Delhi, so that His Majesty may become fully aware of the loyalty of his Hindu subjects.

The ideal of Swarajya.

18. In its leader, the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 3rd December 1912, publishes the following :—

"There is a kind of lull in the political atmosphere in India. Most people attribute it to the Reform Scheme, which has created a wholesome aspiration in the people. The Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale, who is very optimistic about the future of India, regards the present period as one of constructive reform. Others of the same school of thought have regarded it as a period of assimilation of Western political theories to Indian conditions. There are few who think probably that the present lull does not indicate any improvement or that there is going to be a radical change in the political ideals. But whatever may be the actual state of things, all admit that Indian ideals cannot be definitely formed with the present state of education. Those who build great theories or formulate policies form but a very small fraction of the people of India. The majority of the people are inarticulate and there is nothing to show in what direction their sympathies tend. They are being, however, gradually educated and familiarised with the modern conditions of progress. Mr. Gokhale is very thoughtful when he says that we must concentrate all our attention on education. The nine-tenths of the masses of India who are now swayed one way or another by ignorance and impulsiveness must first be turned to become fairly self-reliant and intelligent units of the State. Till then, Indian aspirations and Indian ideals will be more or less ill-defined and imperfect. The educated section of the people may till then only confine themselves to the enunciation of broad principles of progress, restricting their activities to constructive methods. We must utilise the present to the best advantage possible and, whether in the social, political or religious domain, no root and branch change can be thought of till the masses are able to take an intelligible part in the movement. The ideal of Swarajya, the ideal of a common religion, of language and social order, the ideal of commerce and manufacture—must all be more or less distant aspirations about which nothing very definite can be decided now. There is doubtless a new awakening in India—a new hope and aspiration of national existence. There is also the ideal of Swarajya, whatever it may mean. And we can neither believe those who hope to realise the ambition as if by a magical process or those who altogether deny that India can ever have a Swarajya.

* * * * * *

"There are hundreds and thousands of educated men, idealists, practical men, young enthusiasts, pessimists—men of all conditions of thought, who have their own views on Indian future. Few of them have patience for evolutionary progress. The ideal of Swarajya is either to be realised too quickly or it can never be had! We are accustomed to miracles and in the childhood of the individual, quick transformations of scenes from the sordid to the sublime, please the hearts of all. We cannot see through the history of living and growing nationalities, as we do through the enchanting scenes on the comedian stage. The growth of every human institution, as of organic life, is subject to the laws of evolution. As we stated at the outset, we deprecate undue haste as we do undue pessimism. We believe in the ideal of Swarajya. But it is an ideal to be evolved, and the outlook is not anything like so gloomy as some disappointed idealists frequently say."

British naval defence and the Indian Chiefs.

19. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore) dated the 6th December 1912 :—

"So far nothing definite has been officially or even semi-officially announced as regards the rumoured offer of the rulers of Indian States to provide a dreadnought at their own expense. The idea of such a magnificent contribution on the part of Indian Chiefs to naval defence is laudable. The leading newspapers in Great Britain, it is stated, welcome this fresh proof of the loyalty of Indian Princes in this suggested Indian contribution to the navy, but they are, at the same time, of opinion that the proposal is scarcely practicable, as it involves grave questions of policy and principle. The cost of a really effective Dreadnought is not less than two millions sterling which is equivalent to 3 crores of rupees, and we quite agree with a local paper that it is not clear how and from where Indian Chiefs can find so much money. The people of India are second to none in their desire to contribute to the defence of the Empire, but it must not be forgotten that the amount at present spent on the army in India is much larger than what should be spent with justice and reason. The numerical strength of the army is much larger than it should be in times of peace. If there is any need for more troops in any part of the Empire, India will be glad to place her troops at the disposal ot the British Government. In the South African War of 1899 and 1900 troops from India went to South Africa and did good service. In Egypt and the Soudan and in China Indian troops have done much useful work on several occasions duriug the last fifty years. India cannot, however, afford to increase her military burdens and the rulers of Indian States are certainly not in a position to afford the large sum of money that will be required to carry out the idea attributed to them."

India and Protective Tariff.

20. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore) of the 7th December 1912 :—

"Lord Crewe is entitled to the gratitude of India for his outspoken and vigorous speech at Cheltenham traversing Mr. Bonar Law's statement at Oldham about the fiscal policy towards India. Ever since Mr. Joseph Chamberlain raised the cry of protection and a protective tariff for the empire it has been the shibboleth of the Unionist party. The idea is to raise a wall of protective tariff in England and the Colonies against the rest of the world. The position of India has never been clearly defined, probably because it is well known that the inclusion of India in such a scheme would be strongly resented both by the Government and the people of India. Mr. Bonar Law, whose leadership of the Unionist party has not been distinguished by discretion, declared that the tariff policy for India should be based on England's claim to India's gratitude for past services. This was very properly denounced by Lord Crewe, who said the idea was already resented in India. * * * The Indian politician, as Lord Crewe justly pointed out, would vote for protective tariffs but would apply them to British produce. Our memories are not so clouded yet that we have forgotten the treatment that Indian industries have received from English manufacturers and English commercial opinion. It was at the mandate of Manchester that a duty was levied in India on Indian yarn and cotton goods, and factory legislation is also due to British commercial initiative. Even under free trade India is handicapped while under protection she would never have a fair deal and would soon go to the wall."

IV.—Kine-killing.

Cow-killing in Ajudhya.

21. Writing under the heading "Shedding of Hindu blood in Shri Ram Chandra's City," the Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, complains that, thanks to the Prophet's followers, a stream of Hindu blood has recently flown through the city (Ajudhia) which was once ruled by Rama. The arrival of the Bakr'Id, it adds, proves calamitous for Hindus, because on this festival the spirit of jehad blazes among Muhammadans, and they become blind in their desire to perform sacrifices. Continuing, it remarks that cows had never before been sacrificed in Ajudhia on the occasion of the Bakr'Id, but that their increasing political importance led Musalmans to desire the performance of this sacrifice there on the recent 'Id day. This had the effect, as was but natural, of inflaming the passions of Hindus, who attempted to stop the sacrifices. After remarking that a sanguinary riot was the result, the paper publishes a brief account of the disturbance and goes on to say that, but for the determination of Muhammadans to kill cows in the city of Rama, the untoward incident in question would never have happened.

The Rangoon cow-killing riot.

22. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912, has a note on the Rangoon cow-killing riot on the occasion of the recent Bakr'Id. After publishing an account of the disturbance, the paper says that similar breaches of the peace are by no means infrequent. Why does not Government, therefore, take the matter in hand and make definite arrangements once and for all? Experience has shown that the feelings of Hindus in regard to cow killing continue unchanged, and are likely to remain so. Why should not Government, then, pour balm into their wounds?

Hindus and cow-protection.

23. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 26th November 1912, has a letter headed "A plan for cow-protection," in which the writer, Assistant Secretary, Arya Samaj, Amroha, Moradabad district (United Provinces), states that Mr. Jassawala has written to the said Samaj to ask it to persuade Hindus to give one pice per head per diem in aid of the cow-protection movement; adding that, if even 5 per cent. of them agree to do so, he will request Government to import beef for the British Garrison from abroad, making up the loss incurred out of the above collections. The Samaj named, however, regards the proposal as impracticable and is of opinion that Hindus should, instead, request Government to make the loss good by itself realising an annual tax from the Hindus. All individuals and Samajes who have received similar letters from Mr. Jassawala should reply to it in the above terms.

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Muhammadans.

24. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, has a letter headed "Ruin of Muhammadans," in which the writer—Nawab Haji Muhammad Ismail Khan, of Datawali (United Provinces)—says that his co-religionists ignore the fact that the ruin which has overtaken them is due solely to their own shortcomings. This ignorance, he argues, leads them to think that they are being ruined by other peoples impelled by religious intolerance, whereas it is they themselves who are bigots. Continuing in this strain he remarks that the statesmen of Europe, whom the Prophet's followers charge with bigotry, are unjustly so charged. Nothing could be more untrue than to say that the fall of Turkey has been wrought by Christians acting and fighting as such. He blames those Muhammadans who will not send their sons to Government Schools and Colleges, because they are under the delusion that Islamic educational institutions are the sole means of effecting the regeneration of the Muslim community.

Commenting on the above the Editor disagrees with the statement that Europeans are free from religious intolerance.

Muhammadans and Arabia.

25. Writing under the heading "Islamic practices," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 25th November 1912, says that the crusade of 1912 (the Balkan War) has awakened Muhammadans throughout the world. The time has come, it says, when the followers of the Prophet should regard Islam, rather than individual countries, as their true home. Ceasing to ignore facts they should reflect on events. A mighty force, equipped with all modern aids, has arisen to exterminate them. They should turn their thoughts to Arabia, and the well-to-do among them should consider it a duty to pass their leisure time there; bearing in mind that it is their real home and that the time is sure to come when they will have to fight in its defence. Wealthy Muslim families should be urged to reside there from time to time and to possess houses in Mecca and Medina; those of them, that can afford to do so, settling there permanently. The idea should be disseminated among Muhammadans by means of preachers; small tracts and booklets being also published to shew in what parts of Arabia the necessaries of life can easily be procured. Able men should be sent to collect this information and a society should be established, with head-quarters at Bombay, whose special object should be to provide such necessary information for intending emigrants. Continuing, the paper asks Muhammadans, especially Muslim students, to adopt "the Islamic fashion" in matters of dress, external appearance, and the like.

Alleged cruelty towards Hindu children at a religious fair.

26. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, states that a very large fair is held at Garh Muktsar, United Provinces, in the month of Katak every year; and (some) Hindus throw their children into the Ganges on this occasion, the little things being at once rescued by Brahmans and restored to their parents. This is done five times and the proceeding is spoken of as the offering of a child to the river named. The practice results in the death of a large number of children, and Government should pass a law to put it down.

Hindu-Muhammadan relations.

27. In its leader, the Tribune (Lahore), of the 6th December 1912, publishes the following:—

"The Bakrid festival in India passed off without any trouble except for the regrettable riots at Ajudhia in which the armed police had to fire to quell the riot with the result that a number of persons were killed and several were wounded. The recent war in the Balkans and the repeated reverses sustained by the Turks have deeply stirred the feelings of the entire Moslem world. This fact is so patent and we have had such conclusive evidence of it in India that it does not require to be laboured. The Hindu attitude has generally been one of entire sympathy with the Muhammadans in the present crisis. This has been most marked in Bengal where not only Hindu speakers at public meetings openly expressed sympathy with Turkey which is rightly regarded as an Asiatic Power, but the Hindu community translated their feelings into action by subscribing liberally to the funds of the Red Crescent Society. In Bombay public meetings were not held but there could be no doubt as to the universality of the sympathy with Turkey. A meeting was held at Sialkot in the Punjab for the same purpose and the audience was mainly composed of non-Muhammadans. Now the feeling at the back of this sentiment may be analysed with advantage. The relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans in India have been more or less strained for several years. The tension is more acute in some provinces than in others. The bitterest feeling exists in the Punjab and the United Provinces and it is due to some obvious causes. In the Punjab the first complaint is as regards the inadequate representation of the Hindus in the Punjab and Supreme Legislative Councils. This is a just and well founded complaint. But the new constituencies that have been created should help to remove this complaint partially unless the Hindus themselves help to defeat one another. Then there is a strong feeling in the Punjab that in the public service the claims of Hindus are not fully recognised. There are other reasons with which the Government is not concerned. As a matter of fact the misunderstanding between Hindus and Muhammadans in the Punjab is of long standing and events in the last few years have not tended to heal the breach. In the United Provinces the state of things is somewhat similar, while, unlike the Punjab, the Hindu population is in a large majority. In Bengal the relations between the two communities were excellent till East Bengal was wrenched away from West Bengal but now that the status quo has been restored there is a marked tendency for Hindus and Muhammadans again coming together in friendly relationship. In the Bombay Presidency, with the exception of the mob in the city of Bombay, the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans are satisfactory and the same thing may be said of Madras.

"It is important to remember that this description of the state of affairs applies to the two communities in India and not outside of India, that is to say, both Hindus and Muhammadans have their interests confined to India and whether those interests clash or combine they cannot take their friendliness or their differences elsewhere. Latterly, however, a new factor has appeared in the equation between Hindus and Muhammadans. The Hindus can have no communal or religious feeling of affinity outside India. Christendom comprises many countries, so does Islam, but there is no Hinduism and there are no Hindus out of India. Nevertheless, the spirit of Pan-Islamism is comparatively of recent growth, while it is a curious fact that the largest number of Muhammadans in any country are subjects of the British Crown. However, it is undeniable that the sentiment of Pan-Islam is a living force as is demonstrated by the keen sympathy felt for Turkey throughout the Moslem world. In India, in Afghanistan and everywhere where Muhammadans are to be found funds are being raised for the help and succour of wounded Turks and their families. Medical help is being volunteered by Muhammadans in India. The Amir of Afghanistan has received a letter of thanks from the Sultan of Turkey and is interesting himself personally in raising funds. In India the feeling is so strong that proposals have been seriously made for diverting or lending the funds raised for the Muhammadan University to the Turkish Government. Impractical as this idea is it has found favour though it is clear that the fund can only be given for helping the sufferers in the war and not for the purpose of prosecuting the war itself for that would be a distinct breach of neutrality. The Moslem sympathy for Turkey can be easily realised but that is no reason in itself why the Hindus should sympathise with Indian Muhammadans or the Turks, specially in view of the estrangement of feelings between the Hindus and Muhammanans in India. All the same the fact stands out clear and incontrovertible hat the great majority of Hindus sympathise both with the Indian Muhammadans and the Turks and many have given practical tokens of their sympathy. If the sentiment of Pan-Islam is influencing the Moslem world the Pan-Asiatic sentiment is a much wider one and it has been steadily growing during the last six or seven years. Whether the fact is admitted or not Hindus and Muhammadans in India have much in common and there is no cause for any real antagonism between them. The events of the last few months should bring this fact home to both communities.

"What are the causes of difference between Hindus and Muhammadans? There may be some soreness of feeling on account of the Council regulations and the special treatment of Muhammadans; there may be some bitterness due to the preponderance of one element in the public service. But surely these are fleeting causes of difference and should not be permitted to create a permanent estrangement between the two great communities of India. The proposed Hindu and Muhammadan Universities have helped to promote friendly feelings between Hindus and Muhammadans and to convince them that in important matters they are subject to the same disabilities. In their union is strength, on their loyal and earnest co-operation depends the future rise of India. Much as the Muhammadans in India may sympathise with their co-religionist in Turkey and elsewhere their own destiny lies in India which is their motherland as well as of the Hindus. There are evidences on all hands of past Muhammadan greatness in India nor are the glorious traditions of the Hindus forgotten. Circumstanced as they are both Hindus and Muhammadans must put away the thought from their minds that they can achieve greatness independently of one another, or that in their case antagonism will lead to development. Hindus and Muhammadans must stand or fall together and if the love of the motherland is a living reality for both Hindus and Muhammadans they will allow nothing to come between them or to divide them one from the other."

VI—Legislation.

Dharamsalas and Act No. XII of 1867.

28. Writing under the heading "Are Dharamsalas also Sarais?" the Hindu (Lahore), of the 23rd November 1912, replies to the question in the negative, and says that the proposed application of Act No. XII of 1867 to Dharamsalas would lead charitably disposed Hindus to abstain from building such places. It, therefore, urges the Hindu press to take up the matters. Government should not interfere with these sacred and useful places.

The Copyright Bill,

29. The Munir (Jhang), of the 24th November 1912, takes exception to the proposal to introduce the copyright law of England into this country, saying that it would arrest the development of vernacular literature and that it is useless to try, at this time of the day, to prevent the democratic and patriotic sentiments embodied in Eurcpean literature from taking root in India.

VII.—General Administration.

(d)—Educatiou.

Indian students and the rules relating to admission into the Inns of Court in England,

30. Writing under the heading 'Invidious distinctions,' the Tribune (Lahore), of the 1st December 1912, publishes the following:—

"* * * When the rules relating to admission into the various Inns of Court in Great Britain were revised in 1910 it was laid down that in the case of Indians seeking admission the qualification will be a degree in Arts of any of the Universities in India. It was further laid down that as an alternative to this the passing of the Matriculation of the London University, or the "Little go" of Cambridge and Oxford Universities or the preliminary examination (Arts) of the Universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, St. Andrew's and Aberdeen will also be deemed a sufficient qualification for admission. On this understanding several Indian students who intended to study law went to Edinburgh in order to prepare for the Preliminary examination (Arts) of the University of Edinburgh. It is now stated: 'When it was first decided to revise the regulations at the close of 1910 and, in lieu of preliminary examination, each applicant was required to pass one of certain examinations set out in a scheduled list, the Council of Legal Education agreed, at the instance of the Secretary of State, to allow three months to elapse before bringing the regulations into force. On the present occasion, however, the amendments have been introduced without notice or warning of any kind. The acceptance of candidates who have passed the preliminary examination for the M.A. degree conducted by the Joint Board of Examiners of the Universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, St. Andrew's and Aberdeen, is qualified by the addition of the words 'for students whose native language is English and in the case of the Oxford and Cambridge Senior Local Examinations, it is now laid down that the candidate must have passed in English language and literature and Latin. Previously in the preliminary examination Latin was dispensed with in the case of Indians because of the small extent to which it is studied by them.' Whatever opinion one might hold as regards the merits of these amendments, the manner of their introduction has naturally caused much discontent. Since no previous notice has been given to the students concerned and the amendments have been introduced quietly the action of the Council of Legal Education constitutes a hardship of a serious character. May we hope that the Secretary of State for India will intervene in the matter and see that the amended rules do not come into force this year. This demand is based on reason and justice and we hope there will be no delay in conceding it. If no notice is taken of the protest entered by and on behalf of the students concerned, there will be distinct cause for dissatisfaction."

(f)—Railways and communications.

31. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912:—

The Railway Board.

"* * * -The present members of the Railway Board are Sir T. R. Wynne, Mr. W. H. Wood, and Mr. S. Finney. The first and the third are Engineers, pure and simple, and the traffic experience of the second is confined to the goods section of British railways. There is no one on the Board conversant with Indian traffic and the relation of rates to Indian commerce and Indian industries. In constructing the new Board the Government of India must needs remember this defective character in its present composition and make every effort to supply the deficiency. The temporary appointment of Sir Henry Burt to examine the congestion in coal traffic leads to the inference that ultimately he might be confirmed in his appointment. He is an experienced Engineer with some knowledge of traffic requirements and is certainly an acquisition to the Board. But he does not and cannot fulfil the requirements of one having an extensive knowledge of rates and their effect on traffic. For this purpose the Government ought to find a sympathetic retired railway official like Mr. W. B. Wright, C.S.I., who was one of the most successful and popular railway officials in this country. Mr. Wright is reputed to be pro-Indian in his sympathies, and has done a great deal to develop Indian trade and to afford facilities for Indian industries. At the same time he commands the respect and confidence of the European community. He will be the right man in the right place and a helpful co-adjutor of Sir Henry Burt, who is held in great esteem by the Indian community in the Punjab. Then, finally, with a civilian like the Hon'ble Mr. Gillan as President of the Board, the constitution ought to give satisfaction to all alike. We trust that the Government of India and the Secretary of State would bestow on this question that consideration which its importance from the Indian point of view demands."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

32. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912, says that Indian-made sugar cannot compete with its foreign rival owing to the latter being a much cheaper article. After remarking that the manufacture of sugar is on the decrease in the country in consequence, it states that, two years back, the question of increasing the import on foreign-made sugar was raised in the Viceregal Council, but that nothing came of the discussion. This important question should, however, be decided without much delay, so that Indian capitalists may not have to suffer loss.

The Indian Sugar Industry.

The Public Services Commission.

33. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), dated the 5th December 1912 :—

* * * * * *

"So far no tentative list of non-official witnesses has been prepared nor has a set of questions been drawn up for circulation. Of course this cannot be done until all the members of the Commission are assembled together. It is our hope that some independent and well informed witnesses will be found to draw the attention of the Commissioners to the position of Indians in the Indian Civil Service. Theoretically all Indians in that Service have the same status as Europeans in the Service and are entitled to hold the same offices. We can all understand that the time has not probably yet arrived when an Indian can be appointed a Lieutenant-Governor, though we are sure that an official like Sir K. G. Gupta or the late Mr. R. C. Dutt would have filled such an office with great dignity and success. Barring, however, that one office an Indian Civilian has an absolute and unquestionable right to every office open to members of the Indian Civil Service. Take the five appointments that have been thrown open to Indians in Executive Councils, one in the Governor-General's Council and one each in the Councils of the Governors of Madras, Bombay and Bengal and the Lieutenant-Governor of Behar and Orissa. Just at present there may be no Indian in the Indian Civil Service who, by seniority, is entitled to such an office, but the claims of Indian Civilians cannot be overlooked very long. What is the reason that Indians in the Indian Civil Service are entirely excluded from all Secretariat appointments both under the Government of India and Local Governments? There is not a single Indian Civilian in the Foreign Office, the Home Office or the various departments under the Government of India, with the one exception of the Law Department, of which the head is an Indian, and his assistant is also an Indian. There is not a single Indian member of the Indian Civil Service in the Political Department, or Resident or Assistant Resident in any Native States. In brief, all Indians are carefully excluded from what may be designated the inner circle of the Civil Service and the arcana of the Government."

Official corruption.

"We may summarise the position at which we have now arrived as follows :—A system of ethics, a civilisation, excellent in many respects but evolved by centuries of experience under totally different conditions, has been imposed on India, the great majority of whose inhabitants are engaged in agricultural pursuits and have had no opportunities of becoming educated. The educated classes of the country by reason of their superior intelligence and ancestral tendency to acquire and profit by knowledge have reaped countless benefits from the advent of Western civilisation. The common herd have gained little but peace and security, while a few of their number, a limited few, required for administrative purposes have succeeded in imbibing unintelligently enough some of the western principles which have been grafted on the country. Generally speaking, it is these who are called upon to form the rank and file of the administrative army, the educated classes properly so called being left until comparatively recent times to work out careers in private and public life for themselves. Thus while the class of persons best suited to the task of spreading the benefits of modern civilisation among the proletariat have kept aloof from official life, the proletariat has suffered by being left to the tender mercies of those of their own classes who, attracted by motives of profit and advancement, have placed their services at the disposal of Government. The result is that Government is not well served while the proletariat, suffering under a species of petty tyranny, resent any tendency on the part of Government to improve their lot, if such improvement is to involve the creation of posts for unworthy subordinate officials. From the beginning till recent times the Government of the country was carried on by a foreign element with the aid of a class of subordinates selected, we should rather say created, for the purpose out of most unpromising material. That class has, it must be admitted, succeeded in building up a reputation for ability in matters of ordinary routine and from that point of view has proved itself an apt pupil, but few who are intimately acquainted with the ordinary type of subordinate official will be disposed to deny that his intellect is far from elastic. On these persons Government is compelled to rely for the disposal of much of the detailed work of administration, while, owing to the wide gulf separating them from the foreign element socially, intellectually and otherwise, the work of supervision and check is extraordinarily difficult. In other words, those with a grievance against the action of subordinates must perforce air their grievances through those subordinates and consequently remain unheard. The press has, it is true, always acted as a medium between the governing classes and the people and has played a useful rôle in giving expression to the popular view of the actions of subordinates, but the press must always be the refuge of the educated alone; in recent times, however, an attempt has been made to enlist the aid of the hitherto independent educated classes who alone can form an effective link between the people and their rulers. That this has had a decidedly beneficial effect will scarcely be denied. We would point, for instance, to the effect on the morale of the police force produced by the active interest taken in its methods by the general public as represented by the press, by members of Council and independent patriots. It is extension on these lines which is required if the blending is to be really successful. It is the creation of a public opinion averse to corrupt practices which is essential to the successful tackling of the problem of corruption. It is only thus that the loopholes which admit of excesses will be closed while the enlistment of the sympathy of the educated classes will have a doubly beneficial effect in that the general public will be able through their medium as fellow-countrymen to make known to those responsible for the government of the country their ideas on a variety of matters affecting their interests, and the Government will be able through their instrumentality to spread among the masses the ideals of probity and progress which are necessary to the well-being of every community.

"We are therefore of opinion that not only is the ultimate eradication of corruption in official life possible, but that a beginning in that direction has already been made on the right lines. * * * * *

* * * * * *

"We are convinced that, with the spread of education among the masses and a consequent rise in the level of general intelligence, not only will a public opinion averse to corrupt practices gradually come into being, but that the opportunities for such practices by the would-be corrupt will become increasingly fewer, for no man is likely to indulge in corruption if he thinks he will be found out—we would take for instance, some of the districts of the Central Punjab, where the ordinary zamindar experiences no difficulty in reading the village map and deciphering the records of land tenure, where the patwari is a nonentity and does not pose as the leader of society and faction which he undoubtedly is in the more backward parts of the province.

"Next to education we must put the question of pay for the reason that a considerable decline in the popularity of subordinate service under Government must follow as a matter of course on the closing of the doors of unrecognised emoluments. An intelligent man trained in a Government office or even straight from school has no difficulty in these days of progress in securing a post in private employ on, say, Rs 25 or 30; such a man under present conditions is content, nay prefers to take a post in Government service on from Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 with the prospect of rising to Rs. 25 or Rs. 30 after many years, because he realises the possibility of bringing his superior intelligence to account in doubling and trebling his official salary. Such persons will no longer be available when the avenues of corruption are closed and it will be necessary to revise the whole system of salaries with a view to making them more adequate to the needs of the classes employed, who, owing to a rapid rise in prices and in the standard of luxury, will no longer be content to draw the meagre salary which was considered ample 30 years ago. With reforms in the direction indicated above we shall find in Government employment a more intelligent class of subordinates drawing salaries adequate to their needs. Having secured such a satisfactory state of affairs Government must draw tighter the reins of control which at present, possibly owing to the fact that excessive severity would deter recruits from an ill-paid service, are certainly too loose.

"We have briefly attempted to indicate the origin of official corruption and to diagnose its essential characteristics. We have shown that, by welding together the whole community by means of inserting the educated classes as a link between the Government and the people, a successful attempt may be made to eradicate corruption from official life, and we have tried to show the lines on which that attempt may be made. We would conclude our discussion of the subject by impressing both on Government and on the peoples of India themselves that co-operation is essential to the encompassing of the great reform which is sorely needed. A healthy public opinion alone will make co-operation between Government and people possible and the diffusion of education broadcast through the masses is necessary to the building up of public opinion which is the greatest asset of every civilised community."

The jail riot at Madras.

35. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore) of the 5th December 1912:—

"It may be hoped that the moral of the jail riot at Madras will not be lost upon Provincial Governments. The cause of the riot at Madras was the rigid, unsuitable and insufficient diet. * * * While prison should not lose its terror there is no meaning in converting man into a brute by excessive severity and harshness. It is notorious that not unoften the most hardened criminal becomes a warder and finds jail life exceedingly comfortable while those who are guilty of less heinous offences are so tyrannised as to bring out their tiger qualities. In India we are still happily free from that class of idlers and loafers who are called unemployables; and the prison population, whatever the nature of their crime, do not compare unfavourably with that of any other civilised country. It is for the Government to realise this fact and humanise the treatment given to them. The question of the treatment of convicts in prisons is important enough to engage the attention of the Government of India and the public would be glad if a committee of enquiry could be appointed to overhaul the system."

War in the Balkans.

1. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 1st December 1912, says that the thick, black, and revolting layers of falsehood with which the Bulgarians and their friends covered the incidents of the war are being gradually removed by the hands of those wretches themselves. After showing that there is no truth in certain news from the seat of war but that the Turks have succeeded in gaining the whip-hand over the Allies, the paper remarks that the international situation in Europe shows that God's unseen hand is working for the followers of Islam. The relations between Russia and Austria have been strained and it will not surprise Moslems to hear at any moment of the outburst of a terrible war between those countries, which event will undoubtedly prove the forerunner of Islam's revival.

Commenting on some telegrams about the international situation in Europe, the Zamindar (Lahore), of the 12th December 1912, says that the fire which European statesmen prompted the Allies to kindle in order to disturb the peace of Turkey is apparently about to attack their own homes. The truth, it adds, is that the political existence of Turkey is essential to the maintenance of the balance of power among European States. The fate of Albania and Macedonia has not yet been decided, but Europe's war thermometer has already begun to approach the boiling point. Even if the provinces named are wrested from Turkey it should not be concluded that peace will thenceforth reign supreme in Europe. On the contrary, the event will prove the forerunner of a great European War, which will shake the foundations of several countries and lead to the shedding of oceans of blood in very truth.

The paper also refers to the telegram that the Turks will on no account agree to the proposal of the Allies to partition Turkey. After thanking God that the news that the entire Muslim world was anxiously waiting to hear has at last come from Constantinople, it says that if, in spite of the repeated reverses suffered by them, the Balkan confederates put forward terms of peace dishonourable to Turkey she will consider it a duty to resume the war and bring them to their senses. The codes of European civilisation and statesmanship do not contain the words "justice" and "honesty." These words are to be seen inscribed only on guns and cannon. If Turkey wishes to live she also should use these weapons to the very end.

The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 3rd December 1912, has a note headed "A hidden secret," in which it says that Bulgaria has given out that she has had to send lads of 16 or 17 to the front. There is, however, no truth in this, and the statement is intended only to make the peace committee believe that it is at the cost of lakhs of lives that Bulgaria has taken the Turkish places conquered by her. The object in view is that she should be left in possession of these places.

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War.

2. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 29th November 1912, says that the Hon'ble Malik Mubariz Khan was the first reis in the Punjab to subscribe towards the fund opened for the relief of the Muslim sufferers of the Tripolitan War. Again, on the occasion of the last Id-ul-Fitr he collected money in a Simla mosque in aid of the Turks with a beggar's bowl in his hands. He has now contributed Rs. 3,596 to the Zamindar Turkish Relief Fund through Chaudhri Shahab-ud-din, Pleader, Lahore.

The Watan (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, has a letter, in which the writer one Hakim Sahib Dad Kadri, of Shikarpur, Sind, says that, with a view to allaying the anxiety which has been caused among Muhammadans, especially those of Sind, by the writings of Islam's enemies, about the attack which has been delivered against the Caliph through the traitorous machinations of the army of Devils ( ? Europeans), he has forecast the result of the war and finds the same favourable for the Prophet's faith.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912, has a letter headed "Should Muslim University funds be given in aid of the Turkish Empire"? The writer—one Mustfa Hussain, of Aligarh—says that as 35 lakhs of rupees cannot ensure victory for Turkey in the war and as Muhammadans are not likely to be able to again collect such a large sum of money, the amount should not be made over to the Turks.

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War. A speech at Fatehpur (United Provinces).

3. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 28th and 29th November 1912, publishes a report—supplied by Saiyed Mazhar Ul-Islam, Secretary, Muslim Club, Fatehpur (United Provinces)—of a speech made by a Maulvi Niaz Muhammad Khan at a recent meeting of the local Muhammadans in aid of the Red Crescent Society. After referring to "the heartless massacre" of Muhammadans in Morocco, Persia and Tripoli, the Maulvi spoke of the Balkan War and strongly urged his co-religionists to render pecuniary help to the Turks, saying that Islam was about to expire.

Commenting on the last remark the Editor says that it is the oppressors (of Islam) that are to die and to taste of God's wrath. The riches, the power and might of which Europe feels proud are but a passing shadow. It was, therefore, declared in the beginning of the world, "Tyrants do not live for ever.") He added that infidels were trying to end the days of Muhammadans and that the Cross was about to be re-installed on St. Sophai's Mosque, which was obtained by Muhammadans at the sacrifice of lakhs of lives. He also stated that batches of 1,000 Tripolitan women, followers of the Arabian Prophet who could not bear to see the women even of infidels disgraced, were made to stand up in Adam's garb and were riddled with bullets from the rifles of infidels.

Hindus and the Balkan War.

4. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, has a note headed "Foolish Hindus and Muslim machinations." Hindus, it says, are still being crushed under the weight of injuries which they have suffered at the hands of selfish Muhammadans. It is, however, to be regretted that their simplicity has hitherto prevented them from seeing through the artfulness of their (Muslim) fellow countrymen. They have failed to learn a lesson even from the reverse which they lately have sustained in the political and social arena by allowing themselves to be deceived by the Prophet's followers. Continuing, the paper remarks that Muhammadans in whom it is inherent to practise oppression, have of late been giving money in aid of Turkey. It is, however, a pity that some short-sighted Hindus also should afford proof of their foolishness by following this example. The Hindus of Bombay have given Rs. 51,000 for the Turks and have, therefore, foolishly fanned the fire of tyranny into a flame. Next the paper speaks of the Sheikh-ul-Islam's fatwa requiring the entire Islamic world to abstain from performing sacrifices on the occasion of the recent 'Id. Indian Muhammadans, however, had the cleverness to declare that they would not sacrifice cows as "an act of great kindness to Hindus." May God, nevertheless, involve these tyrants in "similar calamities" every year, so that they may refrain from oppressing (animals).

The Haq Pasand (Amritsar), of the 1st December 1912, reprints the above.

The Rajput Gazette (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912, publishes an article entitled "Should Hindus show sympathy for the Turks? A respectable Muhammadan's wish," in which the writer states that the fact that Hindus have given money in aid of the Turks furnishes another proof of their kind-heartedness. Indeed, they never bear malice to Muhammadans, who, on the other hand, are always on the watch to find means to wound the feelings of Hindus, so that scarcely a year passes but a riot takes place over the slaughter of cows. In spite of all this they do not refrain from singing the praises of the merciful and kind disposition of Hindus in order to gain their own private ends. Continuing, the paper asks how Hindus can help the Turks, saying that the latter are the co-religionists of the cow-killing Muhammadans of India. Indeed, if the former do so, their conduct will amount to providing means for the wounding of their own national and religious feelings. In conclusion, the writer says that the shock which the recent conduct of the Prophet's followers at Ajudhia has caused to Hindus is such as cannot soon be forgotten by the latter.

Commenting on a recent note in the Observer on the attitude of the Punjab Hindus in regard to the Balkan War (vide paragraph 14 of Selections No. 47), the Hindustan (Lahore), of the 4th December 1912, says that Muhammadans wish both to hold their heads high and at the same time to beg for money (from Hindus in aid of the Turks). Next it asks the paper named to publish the address of the Greek who, it says, has started a fund in aid of the Balkan States, saying that it has received letters from a number of Hindus desirous of subscribing towards such a fund.

England and the Balkan War.

5. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 27th November 1912, publishes a letter from one Saiyid Umed Ali, who deplores the efforts of the Allies to induce England to take a hand in the religious Balkan War in disregard of the feelings of her Muslim subjects. The argument, he adds, advanced to embitter her against Indian Muhammadans is the allegation that the Sepoy Mutiny was their work. After asking whether such things can avoid hurting the love which Muhammadans, nay, even other Indians, bear for Great Britain, he goes on to enquire whether any Englishman can honestly say that Turkey has ever been given a chance to introduce reforms. Whenever she exerted herself to put her house in order Russia forthwith stepped in with sword and gun : witness the doings of 1839, 1849, 1856 and 1877.

Messrs. Asquith and Churchill on the Balkan war.

6. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 2nd December 1912, says that Mr. Churchill has remarked in a recent speech, which could have become only a Lord Bishop, that the Allies were perfectly right in attacking Turkey, but that a war between Austria and Russia would be dangerous and deplorable. In other words he means that Christian civilization regards a sword drawn to kill Muhammadans as a blessing, but considers that if the same sword is turned against Christians it becomes a curse. It is to be desired that, before making such offensive speeches Messrs. Asquith and Churchill would realise the heavy responsibilities devolving on them as ministers of the King Emperor, who rules ten crores of Muslim subjects. They do not know what strain their conduct puts on the love and loyalty which "we crores of Musalmans" "entertain" for the British throne. Mr. Asquith's ministry has left nothing undone to inflict wound upon wound to the feelings of Muhammadans, and has done its utmost to snap as under the ties which bind Indian Muslims to the Crown.

Egypt and the Balkan War.

7. Writing under the heading "Egypt and the Balkan War," the Millat (Lahore), of the 6th December 1912, refers to what has been done in the Nile Valley in aid of the Red Crescent Society. Continuing, it states that one British regiment has been ordered to Egypt from India, and observes that, if the cost thereof is also charged to the Egyptian Exchequer, the local Nationalists will raise a great outcry. Again, the general public also will regard this concentration of (British) troops (in Egypt) with suspicion. In case, however, the regiment has been despatched to replace the forces which are to be sent to help Turkey the move will have a very good effect.

English and German relations with Turkey : a contrast.

8. In its leader, the Observer (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912, publishes the following :—

"Of all the Great Powers, England is the one Power which should be most interested in the maintenance of Turkey in Europe. Turkey is no doubt the greatest Muslim Power from the spiritual point of view. The Sultan as guardian of the sacred places of Islam occupies a position of pre eminence in the hearts of the Muslim world, a position from which no temporal power can oust the Commander of the Faithful. But England is the greatest Muhammadan Power from the political standpoint, as it has the largest number of Musalman subjects. The comradeship in arms which Englishmen and Turks enjoyed during the Crimean War, the assistance given to England by the Porte during the Indian Mutiny, when the Sultan not only permitted British vessels a free passage of the Suez Canal but also called upon Indian Muslims in his capacity of their spiritual leader to remain loyal to the British Raj, the help given by England to the Porte in setting the terms of the Treaty of Berlin, these are ties which further bind the two Powers together. And if any further inducement were needed for friendship between England and Turkey, it is to be found in the pro-English tendencies of the Ministry of Kiamil Pasha. Turning to Germany we find that that Power has no real point of contact with Turkey. Germany has hardly got any Muslim subjects. It is not connected with Turkey by any bonds of former friendship or comradeship in arms. Abdul Hamid, the Kaiser's friend, is in confinement. The present Turkish Ministry is pronouncedly in favour of Great Britain, the rival of Germany. But if we turn to the speeches recently delivered by responsible statesmen in England and Germany what a contrast is to be discovered. The Radical Ministry in England ignores the traditional friendship between the two Powers. The Prime Minister betrays joy at the fall of Salonika and indulges in day-dreams of the fall of Stamboul. The first Lord of the Admiralty characterises war, which England professed at the outset to regard as unjustifiable, as a most just war. And the Radical papers condemn Greece for its untractable attitude, since that attitude is calculated to prove useful to Turkey! And what does Germany do? Its Chancellor, so far from falling into hysterics over the victories of the allies, openly states that 'we will direct our efforts to maintain Turkey's vitality after the war as an economic and political factor.' Do not his further remarks that 'other Powers are making similar exertions' reveal that England is at one with Germany as to the necessity of maintaining Turkey and that England is striving towards the same goal as Germany? Could not then such an announcement have better emanated from the lips of a responsible member of the British Government, from the representative of a Power which has the largest number of Muhammadan subjects, a Power whose friendship for Turkey has been proverbial? The Radical Ministry, however, leaves such welcome news to the world of Islam to be proclaimed by Germany, the rival of Great Britain. and content themselves with courting cheap popularity by pandering to the prejudices of the European public. The only ray of light that sheds its lustre over the profound gloom which the illiberal utterances of Ministers professedly liberal have cast over the Muhammadans of India is the attitude of the Government of India. Lord Hardinge with true insight and a rare spirit of sympathy has shown that whatever the predilections of politicians 'at home,' the Government of India will remain true to the Musalmans. His Excellency and his colleagues and subordinates have won the hearts of the Indian Muhammadans by their open sympathy during the present crisis in Turkey's history. They will go down to posterity as the true well-wishers of Islam and the genuine pillars of the British Raj in the Indian continent."

The Turks.

9. Writing under the heading "Enlightenment of the Turks," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 27th November 1912, contends that Turkey treats her non-Muslim subjects better than England and Russia have as yet treated their respective subjects in India and Central Asia. Persia, it adds, is trying to reform herself, but Russia is always ready to "slaughter" her, of which fact Great Britain is well aware. Continuing, it says that efforts are being made to introduce reforms into China also, but that the Muscovites are intriguing in Mongolia to nullify these reforms. After stating that Anglo-Indian papers are publishing telegrams to the effect that the Tibetans are highly desirous of British rule, it alleges that these incidents are exercising an effect on the minds of Indians that is not liked by the enlightened and loyal children of the soil. It then goes on to say that the London Times, and some other papers of its type have been publishing article after article to secure "political rights" for the Balkan States. Have they, however, ever thought that, if the Turkish Government also were to demand why "the educational and residential rights" of the Muhammadans of Java, Algiers and India are not looked after, it would be perfectly right in doing so, the Sultan being the Caliph of Islam? His Majesty could also send his emissaries everywhere and cause a commotion throughout the world in almost no time. Neither of these things has, however, been done as yet, the reason for which being that the Turks are an enlightened people.

Christianity and Islam.

10. The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 29th November 1912, publishes an article headed "That old Christian city," in which it says that Mr. Asquith's reference to Salonika as the gateway through which Christianity first entered Europe has led many a missionary-minded paper to say things which have lacerated the hearts of His Majesty's ten crores of Muslim subjects. The paper was under the impression that if members of the nation, which has "our" destinies in its hands were now above the generous necessity of keeping "us" pleased they were not at least devoid of the prudent quality of controlling their feelings, which is the first essential of statecraft. As it is, the Englishman now takes pleasure in breaking the hearts of Muhammadans by attacking the most sacred Islamic traditions and in coating (his) knife, not with sugar, but with salt, nay, chillies. And why should he not do so, seeing that even Mr. Asquith has, in spite of his heavy responsibilities as Prime Minister of an Empire owning crores of Muhammadan subjects, openly expressed sympathy with Greece, approved of her occupation of Salonica and displayed eagerness to see the Bulgarian flag fly over Constantinople. Proceeding, the Editor states that the Times of India has recently published an article against the Muslim world and that the same has made him repeatedly ask himself "what has come over the English, to whom we are lovingly loyal and in chanting whose praises we have grown grey, that they have begun to give us kicks at every turn ?" The writer he adds, says that the Amir has been placed in a position to tell Muhammadans that they need not grieve over the ruin of Persia and Constantinople, for the reason that they have him to act as their Chief and Caliph. That Habib-ulla Khan should pervert the minds of the King Emperor's crores of (Muslim) subjects, says the Times of India, is intolerable. The sole object of that paper, however, is to strain the friendly relations between England and Afghanistan and to impugn the loyalty of Indian Muhammadans. After remarking that the ruler of Kabul has never given expression to the sentiments which the Times of India has ascribed to him, the Editor says that "that old Christian City (? Constantinople)," will see the end of Turkish rule in Europe, just as it witnessed the beginning of the same. "We are repeatedly assured," he adds, "that the war in the Balkans is not one between the Cross and the Crescent, but if this is really so, will any one explain, for God's sake, the conduct of Mr. Asquith, the Statesman and other papers of that ilk ? In conclusion, he remarks that the Premier and others do not reflect the united voice of the British Nation.

Pilgrims to the Hedjaz.

11. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 30th November 1912, publishes a communication in which the writer alleges that in several ships the pilgrims complain about the supply of water and fuel, as also against the troubles which they undergo on account of quarantine at Kamran. The writer also heard a person complaining that, as the latter refused to remove the veil from the face of his daughter, eleven years of age, the medical officer (in charge of the quarantine) had her removed to the hospital on the plea that she was ill ; but, on a bribe being paid (to him), the girl was allowed to be removed from the hospital. After remarking that this is a matter which Indian Muhammadans should not suffer to pass without a protest, the writer says that "we" are being subjected to oppression and violence beyond all bounds and that it now remains to be seen what action the Muslim leaders and the patriotic Muhammadans, specially Ulemas, take in the matter. Continuing, he suggests that, if Muslim Anjumans in India and the Ulemas were to submit a memorial to the Sultan containing the grievances of Indian Muhammadans regarding quarantine, it would surely lead to excellent results. It would be better if this work were taken in hand by the Muslim League, the Deoband School or the Nadmat-ul-Ulema Himayat-i-Islam, etc. Another memorial on the subject should also be submitted to the Amir of Afghanistan, as also to the British Government.

England and Egypt.

12. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 30th November 1912, publishes a communication, in which the writer says that it appears from the (accounts of) pilgrims from Egypt who recently arrived at Jeddah that the British Government has ordered thirty thousand soldiers to proceed to Egypt and that, according to the Bilagh, an army consisting of Sikhs and Gurkhas has reached that country. It is also said that the British Government has offered to purchase all rights in Egypt from the Khedive and Sultan in exchange for a sum of 30 or 32 million pounds, and that the Sultan has so far vouchsafed no reply. "O God! what is going to happen. Islam has been so caught in the net of Christianity that it is extremely difficult for it to escape. It is, however, strongly to be hoped that Great Britain and Turkey will become one."

The Western Ideal of National Greatness.

13. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912 :—

"About five years ago a Japanese Christian missionary, Mr. Harada, speaking to a large audience in the Central Model School, Lahore, loudly regretted that national greatness was still judged in holy Christendom by the amount of brute force a nation could bring to bear upon its surroundings. For centuries preceding her War with Russia, he said, Japan had been making continuous progress in arts, industries and the various moral qualities that contribute to civilisation and peace. But during that long period of peaceful progress and enlightenment Japan remained in Western parlance a synonym for 'barbarous.' But as soon as 'barbarous Japan' cast thirty thousand brass images of Buddha into the melting pot and made them into guns and began to kill thirty thousand Russians a day, she became 'highly civilised' and was readily admitted into the comity of nations.

* * * * *

"As soon as Japan demonstrated her ability to hold by the ears the biggest bully that ever oppressed the weak, she was smothered with affectionate overtures of friendship from all quarters of the globe. Australia suddenly developed an overwhelming affection for Japan and hurriedly removed in her case the restrictions imposed upon Asiatics visiting the Commonwealth. Australia's eyes had been opened to the feasibility of Japan finding an outlet, if she so desired, to her increasing population in the direction of Australia, and to her own helplessness in the matter. A wave of admiration and affection for Japan also swept over British Canada on the conclusion of the Russo-Japanese War, and the shameful disabilities imposed upon Asiatics in that Dominion have since been completely removed in her case. The Western ideal of national greatness, so strikingly demonstrated in the case of Japan in Australia and British Canada, finds its latest illustration in Holland in the case of China. Various indignities had been imposed upon the Chinese in that country, and China's repeated protest had fallen upon deaf ears. But now that China has demonstrated her ability and intention to come up to the Western standard of national greatness, the Dutch Government has suddenly discovered that the Chinese are a great and civilised nation, that they are henceforth to enjoy equal rights with the Dutch in all parts of Holland.

(b)—Home:

Sir James Meston on the unrest in India.

14. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 8th December 1912 :—

"The most important part of Sir James Meston's address at Cawnpore was that in which he spoke on the unrest in India. It has been our lot during the last few years to come across a number of theories and various expositions of the Indian unrest, but nobody has, we think, in dealing with the question displayed such a statesmanlike grasp of the subject and generous sympathy for the people of the country as has been done by the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces. While referring to the current notion among a certain section of people that the East is changing slowly Sir James Meston pointed out that the keynote of history today is its rapidity and not the slowness with which the East is changing. * * * * *

"It was a matter of wonder to him, said His Honour, that the unrest and unsettlement in India have not been wider and deeper than they have been. This testifies to his keen insight and genuine sympathy for the aspirations of the educated community, and the way in which he speaks of India as 'our ancient country' shows the place which the country of his adoption has in his heart * * * * "

Hindus and the British rule.

15. Writing under the heading "India is ruled by Aryas: the English and Hindus," the Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, says that the Vedas apply the term "Arya" to all good people in the world and not only to the inhabitants of India. After remarking that, in their present degraded condition, Hindus are not justified in calling themselves "Aryas," it asserts that the Vedic injunction "Always remain the subjects of Aryas," does not mean, as Dharampal and others of his way of thinking contend, that Hindus should not live under the rule of the English or Muhammadans. Its correct meaning is that they should only obey good rulers and, in view of their high sense of justice, the English are undoubtedly "Aryas"; it is, therefore, in accordance with the Vedas, a source of pride for Indians to be their subjects. It is also wrong to say that Government's repressive policy has made Hindus change their attitude: they look upon British rule as their own, always pray for its permanence and are ever ready to lay down their lives for the English.

The National Congress.

16. The Raghbir Patrika (Lahore), for November 1912, has an article headed "The Indian National Congress and its position," in the course of which it says that Muhammadans as a community have never identified themselves with the Congress and that it does not, therefore, represent all sections of the Indian people. Indeed, even Hindus are not prepared to acknowledge it as their representative organization, otherwise they would not have thought it necessary to establish Hindu Sabhas in different places. The present pitiable condition of the Congress is due to that society having always been in the hands of men impatient of criticism and advice and determined to have things their own way,—a state of affairs which the public can no longer tolerate. The journal further remarks that, if the administration entails any hardships on the children of the soil, the sole reason for this is that the authorities cannot know the feelings and difficulties of the people owing to the absence of intercourse between the two. The object of the Congress consists in acquainting the authorities with popular feelings and grievances; but those who attend the said body's meetings never mix with, and never know anything about, the masses and the rural population. The only way to assure the success of the Congress movement is to make it and its objects known throughout the country; the men entrusted with the task visiting villages and going without food in the huts of the starving poor. Next there should be established District Congress Committees, which should hold regular meetings and afford the masses a chance of attending and voicing their sentiments.

The Swadeshi movement.

17. Writing under the heading "A danger for the people of India: commotion in the European commercial world: necessity for the Swadeshi movement," the Shanti (Rawalpindi), of the 30th November 1912, refers to the labour problem in the West and says that if the wages of workmen in Europe are increased the prices of the goods produced there will be doubled or quadrupled. It will, however, be difficult for Indians to pay these enhanced prices and the best solution of the difficulty would be to place the Swadeshi movement on a firm basis.

The Press and National Union.

18. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 10th December 1912:—

"The proposal to start a powerful press and a political association in Delhi is no doubt made in the belief that the press is recognised as an efficient force for directing the progressive affairs of the country. Although no political parties are recognised and for all practical purposes the people form one party as a whole, there are nevertheless the disadvantages of division and disunion arising from sectional and sectarian influences. Some people do not at all consider these as evils so long as they do not go too far in their divisional aims. In the development of a large people, who are in a chaos, small sub-divisions and groups will be formed for the convenience of constructive development. And when these small divisions have reached a stage of perfection they will unite with larger ones and gradually recognise the necessity for a complete national union of such dimensions as would be enough for practical work. We believe it is the function of the press to lead communities to this end. Though they might, to start with, identify themselves with smaller sections or communal interests, they must never forget the ideal of unity that is in view and so direct the trend of thought and activity as not to allow the sectional interests to outgrow those of national union. On a similar principle, we think, Lord Ampthill, the ex-Governor of Madras, spoke some time ago (October 26th) at Criterion Restaurant in London to English journalists that there were great opportunities for journalist-Freemasons to bring about the unity of interests among different nationalities. He said that a great deal might be done to remove international misunderstandings if journalists who were Freemasons, were to get into touch with their brethren of the same profession in other countries. He alluded to the happy beginning that they made through personal intercourse with their brethren in Germany and he suggested the same might be done in England. We have no such great international work here, but to bring the wrangling communities and sects not to forget the common and national aims, would perhaps require all the effort that would influence international action in Europe. The idea of a Press Association in India and even in the Punjab is yet slumbering and we may hope that, now when the mind is accustomed to a new life in India or a new order of events in a general way, something may be done to give birth to a Press Association which will assuredly keep communic and sectional wranglings within discretionary limits."

Sir James Meston at Aligarh.

19. In its leader, the Observer (Lahore), of the 11th December 1912, publishes the following:—

"The speech which His Honour Sir James Meston delivered at Aligarh on Thursday, in reply to the address of the Trustees of the M. A.-O. College, is a remarkable utterance remarkable alike for its open frankness and vigorous expression; and we trust it will be widely read and appreciated throughout Muslim India. Read between the lines, the speech constitutes a severe, though not undeserved, indictment of the Muslim community, and Sir James has laid his finger on many of the weak spots in our body politic with unerring precision. We must readily recognize that he is a sympathetic critic and the advice which he renders the Indian Muhammadans is the advice of a true friend, whose heart is filled with genuine grief for the fall of a once great people and whose eye sees further troubles ahead for the Musalmans if they do not mend their ways and if they continue to maintain their present attitude of general lethargy. 'If the misfortunes of Persia,' truly observes Sir James, 'and the calamities of Turkey have taught us anything, they teach us that a nation cannot live on prestige, on tradition, on memories of past glory. The fierce competition too of modern life brushes these aside and yields the palm of success to strength and efficiency alone, to strength which is moral as well as material to efficiency of mind as well as of body'—strength, which should be, we think it might be truer to say, more physical than ethical, and efficiency which should be more in the direction of a capacity to survive in the race of material progress than in any other. His Honour is perfectly right in contending that it is these qualities alone that can save Islam, and the first duty of Islam is to reach after them, laying aside its regrets, forgetting its wounded pride. That it is the business of every true Muhammadan not to whine or talk large or fly into ineffective tirades on paper, but to play the man, to close up the ranks, to cease from wasteful dissension, to put down extravagance, and above all to prevent the weakness of the present generation from infecting the young and to give them a clearer vision of duty and a better chance in life than their fathers inherited—that this affords a perfectly correct indication of the remedy needed to improve the existing situation is a matter on which there can be no two opinions. It only remains to be seen how far the advice is accepted."

Mr. Mitra's Diatribe.

20. One A. S. Minhas, of Lahore contributes the following to the Observer (Lahore), of the 11th December 1912:—

"Sir,—In the November number of the Nineteenth Century Mr. S. M. Mitra, of Hyderabad antecedents, has once again made a bid for notoriety by counselling the Government in India to set one element of the population against the other. The article is full of rampant cant and I, as an Indian, deem it my duty to protest with all the force at my command against the foul abuse and heartless invective inveighed this time against the poor Musalman, for the simple reason that he has expressed his candid opinion of the administrative changes in India, that he has determined to ask for a freer University than the Secretary of State would allow, and to make the matter still worse he has given an unequivocal expression to sympathy with the wronged Turk. The Hyderabad State has fared badly as a target, presumably as it sends hundreds of Musalmans year by year to Mecca at State expense but did not pay for the passage of Mr. Mitra to England. He asserts that all this commotion in Muslim India is due to Government action in first encouraging the false presumptions of the Muslim that he has been recognised as a factor of great political importance and then administering him a snub when he tried to test these by forcing upon Government his own point of view of things happening in the world. It is on this score that he has put forward the infernal insinuation that the Musalmans must be counterpoised by the Hindus to save the Government facing the rebellion of the 'fanatic Muslim.' It is not that I hold a brief for the Musalmans as such that I raise my voice against it; but that the pity is that once the cursed formula of divide at impera is brought into operation and when once, let us grant for the sake of argument, it has crushed Muslim aspirations, where is the guarantee that it will stop short there and will not extend its sphere of influence to other communities that may unfortunately attract its attention? Be it remembered that it is an ill wind that blows nobody good. To-day the Musalman is found guilty of sympathising with the fallen Khalifa and is damned with the imputation of owning religious allegiance to a sovereign other than His Britannic Majesty. To-morrow it will be the turn of the Hindu to merit at the hands of this vile abuser the condemnation of expressing sympathy with the bankrupt Chinese. It is lucky for the Viceroy that Mr. Mitra is not aware of the fact that His Excellency has allowed the Muslim to translate his lip sympathy into action by permitting him to collect money for needy Ottoman widows, or His Excellency too would have been stamped as a traitor to the British Sovereign. The libeller does not stop short at the mere expression of this wicked assertion, but proceeds on, in his own way, to find fault with the action of the Government of India in transferring the seat of Government to Delhi and thus making itself dangerously liable to Muslim influence. Many critics in India have censured, reviewed, and judged the transfer of the Capital with much force on purely economic or political grounds; but it was reserved for the fertile brain of Mr. Mitra to find out a raison d'etat to calumniate the Muslim. How ridiculously empty is his logic when he says that at Delhi the Government will be painfully subjected to the strong Indian focus of the power of the Crescent, for the reason (sufficiently logical to him) that the Muslim power was at its height at Delhi. But was not Delhi founded by a Hindu prince and had not Delhi reached its zenith before it attracted the attention of the Muhammadan invader? In Delhi lie blended the monuments of the faded glories of the historic civilisations of India. The Hindus built it, the Musalmans several times rebuilt and renamed the present city, the Mahrattas left their mark on the city and the English to-day are impressing their rule on the plains of 'Indra Prastha.' But the fact remains that never was Delhi popularly known by any other name and never was it talked bereft of its associations with Rai Pithora. Side by side with the temple moulder the ruins of the mosque, an eloquent reminder of the fact that the future of India must be based on the union of the temple and the mosque. The same student of history will readily admit that Delhi has as much to plead for the Hindu cause as for the Muslim; and moreover as long as the constitution of the Government of India remains as impregnable to outside influences as it is to-day, it is moon-struck lunacy to indulge in wild dreams of storming the invincible bureaucracy.

"Mr. Mitra's outpour of vitriolic abuse does not run short at the fomentation of only the Government against the Muslim. To excite the hatred of the British reader, he stoops to the mean business of flogging the dead horse of the Wahabis in Northern India. He, like a coward, to save the face, tries to re-open the long-forgotten controversies of the past and suggests, in an air of innocence which is as amusing as it is disgusting, in revealing the old Mr. Mitra of Hyderabad, that the Government should hold the balance by adjusting the Hindu against the Muslim. What can hinder the same mind hinting at the action vice versa if the scales were turned? Could anyone conceive anything else of a meaner type? Nor is this all. Attempt is made to arouse the Hindus and the Christians also in the following passage, which I take the liberty and crave the reader's indulgence to quote in extenso. 'Far-sighted British statesmen always kept in view the following three important facts, which make the position of the Hindu peculiar:—(1) Though many Englishmen have fallen victims to the Muslim fanaticism, a murder of an Englishman by a Hindu from religious motives is absolutely unknown; (2) In their endeavours to save the souls of African Negroes and Indian Bhils there will always be friction between the Cross and Crescent, for both are proselytising faiths, whereas Hinduism would refuse to take a convert, even if anyone like Mrs. Besant, who has spent 20 years in holy Benares and actually preached Hinduism, wished to enter its fold; (3) no Hindu is a permanent resident in any foreign country; so England's difficulties with foreign Powers over the Hindu are reduced to a minimum. With regard to the Muslim these three great causes of friction are always present. Hindu unrest is always a lesser evil than Muslim unrest, because the former cannot become as complicated as the latter. There are many thousands of Muhammadans in the native army and there are the fanatic Muslim tribes of the North-Western Frontier where occasionally a few Mullahs preach Jehad, the holy war of Islam, and give no end of trouble to the Government. With the Persian revolution almost touching the Indian frontiers and putting a strain on the Indian army's resources, an additional burden placed on the Indian executive to suppress Muslim rebellions in all parts of India would perhaps be more of a responsibility than the Viceroy at this juncture would care to add to his already existing burden.' I leave it to the reader to judge with what veracity facts are stated. That there is a growing feeling in favour of shudhi in the Hindu world and that the Hindus are daily migrating to other lands are facts that would forcibly strike the mind of any casual observer, but not that of Mr. Mitra. The suggestion of the Indian troops numbering Musalmans rebelling is absurd on the face of it, and is sufficient to excite, in the most sober person, a fit of laughter, and one cannot but reject it as the creation of a brain haunted by nightmares."

Muhammadans and the next session of the Indian National Congress.

21. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 13th November 1912:— December?

* * * * * *

"Bankipore and Behar occupy a unique position in India on account of the friendly relations existing between Hindus and Muhammadans in that Province. In its last report the London branch of the Muslim League distinctly said that there was no reason why Muhammadans should any longer abstain from the Congress since the League and the Congress had so much in common. We are sure that the Muhammadans of Behar will be well represented at the Congress. The Chairman of the Reception Committee is a Muhammadan and the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Industrial Conference, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Hassan Imam, is also a Muhammadan. Delegates to the Congress are no longer elected at public meetings, but we hope the various Provincial Committees will proceed to elect delegates without delay, and the Punjab will be strongly represented at the Congress. We understand Lala Lajpat Rai has expressed his intention of being present."

IV.—Kine-killing.

Hindus and cow-killing.

22. Writing under the heading "Hindu Shastras and the cow," the Nur (Qadian), of the 1st December 1912, publishes several quotations from the Hindu medical book—Sushrut—in which it is stated that beef taken in different forms cures certain disorders. Next it finds fault with Hindus for raising a tumult over the killing of cows.

Muhammadans and cow-killing.

23. Writing under the heading "Strange return for lakhs of rupees given by Hindus," the Arjun (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912, says that the Muhammadans of Bombay abstained from killing cows on the recent 'Id day in return for the local Hindus having given Rs. 51,000 in aid of the Turkish sufferers. It, however, constitutes no victory for Hindus to have prevented cow-killing in the single city of Bombay by helping Muhammadans with lakhs of rupees. Nor can this be called a (suitable) return for the sincere sympathy extended by them to the followers of Islam. The latter ought to now abstain from killing kine in all parts of India for the future. Cow-killing is the greatest obstacle in the way of a union between the followers of Islam and Hinduism. Muhammadans wrongly call it an economic question, and so long as it exists Hindus can never heartily join hands with them.

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

The Arya Samaj.

24. The Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, has a note headed "Stop this rising storm," in which it says that the quarrel between the two parties of Aryas is based, not on any doctrinal difference, but on selfishness alone. This was why it recently exerted itself to combat "the plague" which broke out at Patiala (Lala Hansraj was not allowed to speak in the Samaj premises there) and was about to spread even to the Samajes in other places. It has received dozens of letters from the mofussil most pathetically appealing to it to combat this plague.

Eight greatest men of the Indian religious world.

25. Writing under the heading "Who are the eight great(est) men of the (Indian) religious world?" the Arya Gazette (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, refers to the article in its issue, dated the 29th August last, inviting the public to decide who are the two most prominent leaders of Aryas, Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians (vide paragraph 15 of Selections No. 36). The number of votes received by the paper come only to 1171,—948 from Aryas, 26 from Hindus, 158 from Muhammadans and 39 from Christians. One Arya voter sets down Mr. Gokhale also as an Arya leader on the ground that that gentleman espouses the cause of Universal primary education. Again, nearly three dozen voters have written to say that Lala Munshi Ram has forfeited his claims to leadership in consequence of the narrowmindedness displayed by him over the Patiala Arya Samaj's conduct (in having refused to allow Lala Hansraj to speak in its premises). As to Sanatanist Hindus, three of them have, strangely enough, voted for Pandit Raja Ram, who is an Arya Samajist. An enthusiastic Muslim young man writes that in these days "our" (only) real leader is the Sultan of Turkey, who has, by bringing about war through his wonderful policy, wakened Indian Muhammadans and that next to His Majesty stands Mr. Zafar Ali Khan, Editor of the Zamindar, who is also engaged in rousing them. The result of the voting is as follows :—

VI.—Legislation.

Mr. Basu's Bill.

26. The Panjab Samachar (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912, has a letter headed "The ship of the Hindu community in a whirlpool," in which the writer—one Ram Rakha, Vidyarthi, of Tanda, Hoshiarpur district—finds fault with those Hindu members of the Imperial Legislative Council who supported the Hon'ble Mr. Basu's Bill, saying that the introduction of the institution of divorce among Hindus would be certain to involve the community in utter ruin.

Redemption of Mortgages Bill.

27. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 11th December 1912 :—

" * * While the evil of agricultural indebtedness continues to be what it is in the Punjab, while the British Government has had to recognize that it is its imperative duty, not only for the preservation of social order but in important State interests as well, to take steps against the wholesale passing away of agricultural land from the hands of the peasantry into the possession of the non-agricultural classes, and while the object of recent land legislation is but partially realized so long as the slow-moving machinery of existing law and practice enables the shrewd bania to defeat the objects of Government and the ends of equity by continuing to maintain his hold on the lands of petty farmers, it was necessary for Government to devise a more equitable and a less cumbersome method of enabling the rightful owner of land to resume possession of it on payment of the bania's dues. And the present bill aims at nothing different from that. The bill will affect only small areas of land, applying to mortgages of land not exceeding 30 acres in area or where the principal money secured does not exceed Rs. 1,000. It also prescribes the procedure by which the Collector will make the necessary inquiries and pass such orders as to him appear just and equitable. And the bill clearly lays down that any party aggrieved by an order under the proposed enactment may institude a regular suit to establish his rights in respect of the mortgage; and we think this last proviso amply safeguards the interests of the mortgagee. After giving the bill our most careful consideration and consulting a large body of opinion on the subject, we endorse its provisions, looking upon the measure as one calculated not only to advance the prosperity of the agricultural classes but also to remove one of the sorest grievances of the latter section of the people."

VII.—General Administration.

(d)—Education.

The Punjab University Convocation.

28. In its leader, the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 10th December 1912, publishes the following :—

" * * One pleasant function was performed at the Convocation, and that was of conferring the honorary degree of D. O. L. on His Honour Sir Louis Dane, who is well known as a scholar in Persian and Arabic. It is truly a fitting recognition of his Oriental scholarship, his deep insight into the Persian literature and mental characteristics of the people. On this subject the Lord Chancellor gave an impressive address which we dare say will go far towards helping the cause of Oriental learning and literature. It is not the fashion of the day, nor is it materially advantageous to study Oriental languages. That, however, is to be deplored. His Honour rightly alluded to the past neglect of the Government in giving adequate encouragement both to officers and others, in studying the Oriental classics. From an administrative point of view the advantages are quite clear. It helps to understand the people, to know their mental nature and the ideals of life which guide their ambitions and activities. But apart from the administrative advantages His Honour pointed out that a study of Oriental Classics helps the development of moral and mental qualities. The older Universities in England, he pointed out, still clung to the study of the dead classical languages of the West, and he was old-fashioned enough to believe that this study was one of the best mental and moral topics which education could provide. But there are additional reasons why the Punjab University should devote greater attention to the study of Oriental classics. The primary object of the University is the promotion and diffusion of European Science, through the medium of the vernaculars, and of encouraging the enlightened study of Eastern classical languages. The Oriental side, therefore, stands out prominently on paper, but in practice, it must be confessed, it is somewhat neglected. Something has doubtless been done to keep the programme intact, but if Oriental scholarship is valued both for itself and as a sort of justification also of the Occident ruling over a big part of the Orient, a great deal more has to be done to encourage the study of Sanskrit and other Oriental languages. His Honour considers it as almost necessary 'to understand the mentality of the educated people' with whom Government officers have to deal and commune 'on terms of equality—and not as mere foreigners here for a day to make a living out of India and gone to-morrow without knowing anything of the inner life of India.' We hope that this somewhat stinging comment on the official and private apathy as regards the study of the classical languages will have a beneficial effect on the future policy of the Government and the University. Something is done to put the local Oriental College on a better basis, but a good deal more has to be done by way of giving grants-in-aid to other Colleges and Schools and by giving handsome scholarships to students. As the money value of Oriental scholarship is admittedly small, the necessity for more inviting scholarships becomes great.

"* * * Next we are told that the Roman script may become the future common script of India. His Honour considers that in this way only will a knowledge of Indian vernaculars be maintained and spread. For no man can expect to learn all the scripts of India, but most can learn a spoken language if presented to him in a garb with which he is already familiar. This presupposes that all or many will be familiar with the Roman script first. This is no doubt true with the English educated classes, whose number is yearly increasing. But what about the great bulk of the population of India who can never hope to learn the Roman script and to whom the progressive knowledge of the West has to be interpreted in the vernaculars only. Already the English language is becoming the common medium of conversation to the educated classes of India. Even where they attempt to speak in the vernaculars a lot of English words and phrases are mixed up. Without prejudice, therefore, and considering from a purely utilitarian point of view, there seems to be much to say in favour of the Roman script—so far as the educated classes are concerned. The next subject dealt with was the extension of the hostel system in the Punjab under the policy of the Government. Religious instruction in schools and colleges, he said, could best be given in hostels. The policy of the Government is to encourage separate hostels for separate creeds. Whether this will promote a common bond of brotherhood and root out sectarian spirit is another thing. But in the beginning and as religious divisions are sharp in the Punjab, sectarian hostels seem to be a necessity, especially as 81 per cent. of the collegiate students in the Punjab concentrate in the Lahore Colleges. * * * * *

"As regards the general progress made during the past five years, His Honour pointed out that the Province was once 'practically bankrupt and there were barely funds to pay the fixed establishments.' Now 6 out of the 10 English arts colleges are provided with new main buildings. During the past years Government spent Rs. 18·21 lakhs for educational buildings and grants-in-aid for High School and hostel buildings. It is the policy of the Government to have a well-equipped Government High School in each district to act as a model, and to help others by grants-in-aid. The total cost of Colleges and Secondary Schools has gone up from Rs. 17·79 lakhs to Rs. 20·59 lakhs during the last five years. The School fees have risen from Rs. 7·19 lakhs to Rs. 11·86 lakhs. It seems that the Government is not satisfied with the increase of School fees, but we should like to know if a free College could not be started for the benefit of the poorer classes of students. Allusion was made to the improvements in the Medical Colege, Law College and the prospects of the Engineering School. All these have their value from a purely administrator's point of view.

"We cannot say that His Honour's opinions on the technical education will be endorsed by the public in the Punjab. Perhaps in industrial and commercial countries of Europe and America, the policy of precedence to factories can be justified. We are told that technical education can hardly attain its full development until our capitalists have embarked more boldly upon the industrialisation of the Punjab. This fallacy has been repeated by others whose knowledge of India is negligible, but in the mouth of Sir Louis Dane it is a strange paradox. Here we have a Government which has done practically nothing to advance industrial education, desiring the capitalists to achieve first of all what we regard as the chief end of that education. The starving man in the street, for instance, who goes to the opulent for help is turned back with the remark that he must first gain ample wealth before he can deserve help! We are afraid this line of argument won't do in India and it does not comfort us to be told that the technical education committee is hatching its scheme for a very very long time and it is best to understand that technical or industrial education in the Punjab is not likely to be of much value. A more pitiful confession of official failure can hardly be made. If the Punjab people are industrially backward it is all the more the reason why special efforts ought to be made for encouraging industrial education through the establishment of well-equipped institutions. This, we are afraid, is the weakest point of the Punjab educational policy, and it has caused very great disappointment to the public.

"Alluding to the progress of female education in the Punjab, which is another weak spot, His Honour said that 'it has not been neglected.' That is certainly the most favourable comment that can be made on the subject. We are given certain percentages of increase, but if we take actual figures in comparison with the total population, especially in the light of progress made in other Provinces, we cannot say we have a good record here. * *

"But the most important subject is the need of primary education. The number of literates in the Punjab is very small, because His Honour explained that 89 per cent. of the people live in rural areas and there is no love for education among them. Among the Hindu non-agricultural class, including about 1½ million persons, no less than 22 per cent. are literate. 'The Punjab trading classes are,' he said, 'as a rule, men of great shrewdness and enterprise and require but little in the way of inducement or facilities to send their children to school.' The difficulty is, says His Honour, in making primary education acceptable to the rural population and to keep them 'contented.' If that is the official ideal, we think we may wait for a thousand years more and fail to do anything for primary education. Knowledge has nowhere brought 'contentment.' The present attitude of the agricultural classes is such, said His Honour, that 'it would require armed force to compel fathers to send their children to school.' That is a pity, indeed. But many things have been done without the use of arms and we quell riots and suppress dacoities with mere police batons. Cannot the rural population be made to read and write except at the point of the bayonet? If His Honour after a life-long experience among the people, cannot give a better opinion of the Punjab rural people, it would seem they are a really hopeless lot. But we are assured that a detailed scheme of extension of mass education is worked out, costing Rs. 22 lakhs in equipment and Rs. 20 lakhs recurring annually, and something may yet be attempted without the use of arms and the smoke of the gunpowder. The Punjabees have fought and defended themselves against great enemies. They have had great generals and heroes who have resisted opposing armies without fear. The spectacle, however, of the modern Punjabee, after 40 years of British rule and progress, opposing primary education thrust by an armed force, would be something cherishing in the minds of mankind."

Sir Louis Dane and the Punjab University.

29. Writing under the heading "The degree (lit. degrees) of D.O.L. (conferred) on Sir Louis Dane," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912, says that, in deciding to confer one of the highest literary titles of the Punjab University, viz., D.O.L., on Sir Louis Dane, the Senate has done an act which is not only appropriate but is entirely in accordance with the expectations of the public. It is true that this title was conferred on previous occasions on two Lieutenant-Governors of the Punjab, but none of them had a better claim to it than the present head of the Punjab Government, who is not only conversant with Persian and Arabic, but can freely talk in Urdu and Punjabi. His Honour has also conferred valuable benefits on education during the tenure of his office.

Education in the North-West Frontier Province.

30. Writing under the heading "The field of the sword and the storehouse of the pen," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 28th November 1912, refers to Sir George Roos-Keppel's review of the report on education in the North-West Frontier Province and says that, thanks to the education imparted by the University at Lahore, there are very few communities in the Punjab, except the Sikhs, whose members can be enlisted in the army. The people of the Frontier Province, are, however, still in full possession of their old (martial) qualities, and if education on the lines followed in the Punjab is introduced in that Province its inhabitants also will become knights of the pen. The paper, therefore, suggests that education in the Frontier Province should be imparted on European lines in order that the same may not destroy the martial spirit. After remarking that the object for which education is imparted in the country is to deaden martial spirit in the people, and congratulating the authors of this policy on their success, the paper requests Sir George not to make babus and munshis of the people of the Frontier Province, adding that if these people are so trained as to lose their martial spirit, no one will be left to bear the brunt of fighting against an enemy. The British soldiers have never acted, and can never act, as vanguards, and the habit of drinking has made the Sikhs and Gurkhas also unfit for the same duty. This being so, none but the Frontier Pathans are suited for the hardships of war, and it will serve no purpose to make them cowards by educating them on Indian lines.

Agricultural College, Lyallpur.

31. Writing under the heading "The Agricultural College, Lyallpur," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 3rd December 1912, says that the College has turned out its first batch of graduates, but that they know nothing of practical agriculture. The desired result can be achieved only by running the College on the lines on which similar institutions are worked in Great Britain. It is idle to look for good results from the College in its present form, which can, indeed, serve no useful purpose whatever. The last annual report shows that the number of students is steadily on the decrease. The chief reason for this is that the sections of the population concerned are ignorant of the advantages of agricultural education. To make the College popular with the rural population agricultural schools and farms, equipped with modern implements of agriculture, should be established in all Zails.

In its issue, dated the 4th December 1912, the paper says that the report states that there is an increasing demand in the European markets for Indian barley, which has also, therefore, begun to sell at dearer rates in villages. When the poor, it adds, used to complain of the dearness of wheat they were told to eat cheap gram and barley. Thanks, however, to agricultural educational institutions in the country they will not now be able to procure even those cereals. If the graduates of Agricultural Schools succeed in increasing the produce from land the extra grain raised will fall, not to "our" lot, but to that of foreign countries. Government should, for God's sake, devise means to fill the stomachs even of cultivators and the labouring classes. It would lead to very undesirable consequences if India were converted into a granary solely for foreign lands. The Editor can say from personal knowledge that fifty per cent. of the tillers of the soil can hardly procure two meals a day. "The fire of starvation is a very bad thing."

Municipal Secondary Schools in the Punjab.

32. The following is from the Punjabee (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912:—

"The recent Resolution of the Punjab Government directing Municipal Committees should be enabled to make more systematic provision than has been possible hitherto for the extension of Elementary education deserves more than a passing notice. It is quite true the Resolution says that 'it is not desired to fetter their discretion in this respect,' but regard being had to the poorness of their resources it is obviously impossible that the Municipal Committees can further both Elementary and Secondary Education. Whether their direction is fettered or not fettered in express terms, the fact that the Government has relieved them of the charges on existing Secondary Schools implies that they should exercise more than ordinary care and judgment before incurring fresh liabilities on Secondary Education. Practically, the effect of the present Resolution is to restrict the opening of Secondary Schools, notwithstanding the fact that the demand for such schools has been everywhere increasing. Lord Curzon on one occasion said that Secondary education was the basis of all industrial and professional occupation in India and, as such, it deserved to be aided by the State with greater liberality than Collegiate education. In his own impressive words 'there is just a danger that between the resonant calls of higher education and the pathetic small voice of Elementary education, the claims of Secondary education may be overlooked.' We hope the Government will make adequate provision for the extension of Secondary Schools in those places where Municipal Committees pass a resolution emphasising the need of such Schools."

33. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912, has a letter headed "Intellectuality of Christianity and Islam compared." The writer—one Abdur Rahman, of Nur Mahal, Jullundur district—observes that it is through its power of knowledge and deep diplomacy that Europe has involved Turkey in trouble, and that if Muhammadans had not wasted their intellectual and scientific forces they would have now been able to checkmate the tactics of Europe. Continuing, he says that if his co-religionists wish to better their lot they should equip themselves with the weapons of knowledge, both theoretical and practical. Their interests are identical with those of the British; and, as the former are also just and liberal-minded it is possible for Muhammadans to complete their scientific and intellectual training under British protection. It should, therefore, be their first duty to obtain a charter for the proposed Aligarh University, as soon as they can divert their attention from the Turks.

Muhammadans and education.

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

34. Writing under the heading "Working of Co-operative Credit Societies in the Punjab," the Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 30th November 1912, asserts that the spread of the co-operative movement will again make the Punjab peasantry prosperous. Indeed signs of this returning prosperity have already begun to manifest themselves in the canal colonies.

Co-operative Societies in the Punjab.

35. In its leader, the Tribune (Lahore), of the 11th December 1912, publishes the following:—

Control and utilisation of waters.

"Reference has been made in these columns to the various schemes relating to the control and utilisation of the rivers of the Punjab, and it has been noted that during the Lieutenant-Governorship of Sir Louis Dane much well-merited importance has been attached to the question. As His Honour made it perfectly clear in his masterly and comprehensive address, delivered on the occasion of the opening of the Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition held in Lahore a little over three years ago, the problem of the control and utilisation of the rivers of the Punjab is intimately associated with that of the industrial development of the Province. By utilising the surplus waters of the Punjab rivers in the irrigation canals which have been constructed during the past 20 years the agricultural resources of the Province have been exploited in such a way as to add very considerably to the material prosperity of the Province. The central idea underlying the various schemes which have been initiated by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor is to make cheap abundant power available for the numerous industries which can with profit be started in this Province, and afterwards to utilise the waters thus dealt with not only in increasing the water-supply of the existing canals, but also in carrying into execution other big irrigation projects which will bring under cultivation millions of additional acres of land which at present lie as waste and jungle. * * *

"* * * In this article it is our intention to refer to the details of three projects. The first is the hydro-electric scheme which it is proposed to establish at Rasul where an Engineering School has been established and which was opened last month by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor himself before a large and distinguished assembly which included the Hon'ble Mr. S. Montagu, Under-Secretary of State for India. As Sir Louis Dane explained at some length in the speech made at Rasul last month, owing to the fact that the Upper Jhelum Canal passed just above the Lower Jhelum Canal at Rasul, there was an available fall of over sixty feet there, and any quantity of electric power up to 25,000 horse power can be generated, by passing the supply of water for the Lower Jhelum Canal or part of it through the Upper Jhelum Canal. * * *

"* * * At present the development of industries in the Punjab is hampered by lack of power to work machinery. The capitalists of the Province possess both energy, enterprise and power of initiative. We have the testimony of Colonel Atkinson and Mr. Dawson who conducted last year what is, to all practical purposes, a technical education survey of India, that the Punjab mechanic is the best qualified in the country for work in mills and factories. Coal is the only means of producing power at present, but it has to be brought all the way from Bengal and is consequently not cheap. But there is an abundance of water in the Punjab rivers and it has been appropriately said that its rivers constitute the potential wealth of the Province. Power could be cheaply generated from water and made available to all who want it at a very moderate cost. There is also another point which strikes us in this connection. Already in the existing canal system of the Province there are places where more or less high falls are available. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor is believed to have tried to induce Syndicates of enterprising exploiters to come forward and tender for the working of these falls. There is every likelihood that their endeavours will bear fruit ere long. By establishing the requisite machinery at the location of these falls, the Syndicates or individuals whose tenders are accepted will be in a position to manufacture power and supply it to all who care to have it not only for their factories and mills but also for helping in the working of their wells. The latter method will ere long literally revolutionise agriculture. In several parts of the Province where it will be possible to supply electric power at fairly cheap cost, wells are at present expensive to sink and build and still more expensive to work. The bullocks are very costly and their cost is yearly on the increase. The peasant will certainly deem it a boon if electric power can even partially replace the bullocks.

"The other project is known as the Jumna scheme, which is an extension, and in some respects alternative of what is known as the Ganges Sarda project. The Irrigation Commission of 1903 whilst expressing the opinion that a large irrigation canal for Oudh was undesirable came to the conclusion that it was desirable to utilise in some way the bountiful supplies of the Sarda and suggested that the water should be used in other parts of the United Provinces, and also directly or indirectly for the protection of insecure acres in the south-east Punjab on the other side of the Jumna river. The suggestion has, after elaboration and development on the lines broadly indicated in the report of the Irrigation Commission, taken the form of a project which is calculated to cost about 6¾ crores of rupees, to irrigate about a million and a half acres, and yield a net revenue of forty-seven lakhs of rupees, or nearly 7 per cent. on the estimated capital outlay. * * * *

"This is the scheme which has received the approval of the Government of the United Provinces. We are told that according to this scheme the water would be almost entirely used in the United Provinces, but the Punjab would be assisted in as much as a discharge of about eight hundred cubic feet a second would be freed for the use of the Western Jumna Canal. There is, however, an alternative project which allows the Punjab the larger supply of fourteen hundred cubic feet, instead of eight hundred, by carrying the water across the Jumna river at Lakhnauti. This alternative scheme has, it is stated, the support of Sir John Benton, the late Inspector-General of Irrigation, and most people will support the contention that 'the thirsty lands of the Punjab are far more in need of water than any of the districts in the United Provinces.' The proposals made by Sir Louis Dane in this connection materially alter the whole scheme and immensely increase its utility. His Honour only recently made a careful and thorough investigation 'with a view to the construction of a reservoir dam across the Jumna river where it passes through the Siwaliks.' This investigation has 'shown that such a dam is perfectly feasible, and its cost not in excess of what could be financially profitable. It is said that a dam two hundred and thirty feet high, constructed partly of reinforced concrete and partly of earth hydraulically sluiced in, according to Californian practice, would cost 255 lakhs of rupees, and would admit of the storage of twelve lakhs of cubic feet. Such an additional supply would be capable of giving 1,400 cubic feet perennial and 3,100 cubic feet per second kharif water, it would irrigate 500,000 acres per annum, and would increase the gross commanded area on the Punjab side by two million acres.' The cost of the whole scheme, which provides for a general remodelling of the Western Jumna Canal to enable it to carry the increased discharge, will be four crores. * * *

"There is no doubt but that the four crore scheme which has been devised by His Honour Sir Louis Dane, would afford the Punjab 'a larger supply of water than any possible help from the Sarda project, and it would also provide a potential 30,000 horse-power for generating electricity which would no doubt be made use of at a future day.' Technically the scheme appears to be sound and we are told that the expert engineers are of opinion that Sir Louis Dane's idea of conserving the waters of the Jumna in one of the Siwalik valleys is quite practicable and that the figures relating to expenditure arrived at by the engineer who framed the project are likely to be accurate. The entire scheme is being at present subjected to a most thorough examination by the expert advisers of the Government of India. We trust that there will be no unnecessary delay and that the Government of India will announce their decision at an early date. We need not add that the final decision of the Government of India will be awaited with considerable interest and concern by all in any way interested in the development of the material resources of the Punjab. It may not be possible for Sir Louis Dane to see the project taken in hand but it will doubtless gratify His Honour if he has the satisfaction of knowing before the close of his term of office that the scheme has been sanctioned by the Government of India."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

Lord Curzon's statue.

36. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 28th November 1912, says that the fashion of raising memorials has made such progress that it is proposed to erect at Calcutta a statue even of an unpopular (Viceroy) like Lord Curzon. The statue, it adds, will keep fresh the memory of the author of Indian unrest and will not let India forget the time when her beloved children descended to unbecoming ways and were crowded into jails "through Lord Curzon's kindness."

37. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 20th November 1912, publishes a communication in which the writer—one Abdul Rahman—says that as the names and addresses of pardahnashin and respectable Indian ladies are written in official papers in a manner highly insulting to them the word "Musammat" which means "such and such (person)" alone being put before their names although the words "Miss" or "Mrs." are placed before the names of Christian women, it is desirable that in future in all official correspondence the word "Bibi" should be placed before, and the word "Sahiba" after the names of all educated or respectable Indian women.

How Indian ladies should be addressed.

NOTE.—The word "Musammat" is feminine of "Musamma", which means "named" or "styled." In ordinary phraseology the word Musammat is a title prefixed to the names of women and is sometimes used in the sense of lady (vide Platt's Dictionary).

38. The Millat (Lahore), of the 29th November 1912, has a letter headed "The deplorable condition of the indigenous system of medicine." The writer—one Aziz-ud-din, of Harmawli, Muzaffarnagar district,—refers to the carelessness displayed by native physicians in treating their patients, and says that being inexperienced and uneducated they can be of no use to the people. If Government, he adds, does not take necessary steps in the matter, people will fall victims to their secret practices. He, therefore, asks the reformers and leaders of the country unanimously to request Government to prevent the havoc wrought by the persons referred to.

I.—Politics.

War in the Balkans.

1. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 4th December 1912, publishes a note headed "The letter of a Turkish mother to her son." A young Turk, says the paper, aged 15 or 16 years, who has just returned from Tripoli and has not as yet gone home, who is the only male member of his family and whose father and brother have fallen martyrs in the Tripolitan War, is engaged in the Balkan War. The military officers permit him to return home, but he shows to them a letter from his old and widowed mother and expresses his inability to profit by the permission. The subject-matter of the letter has been versified into Urdu by Shah Qasim-ud-din, Hasrat, of Bankipur, some of the verses of which are as follows :—

"I wish I could see
"How boldly you fight,
"How the crosses are broken,
"How the enemies are beheaded,
"How the standard of the Cross is trampled on by the sons of the Crescent,
"How the head of the Christian monk is cloven with the axe.

* * * * *
* * * * *

"I have already offered you as a sacrifice for faith,
"I wish I had more sons to offer with you,

* * * * *
* * * * *

"I will call you my son only when you return victorious,
"Let flames of fire arise from Tchataldja,
"Their sparks reaching Sofia.
"Create consternation in the whole of Europe,
"Cause the doors and the walls of the Trinity to shake :
"Salah-ud-Din (Saladin) was also the son of a man,
"His shoes were on the head of Europe,
"You also, O my beloved, should become the same,
"And think of the faith day and night.

* * * * *
* * * * *

"Three of my sons have been killed in the name of God,
"And yet I live and rely on Him.
"You alone now remain ; and you too,
"I offer as a sacrifice on behalf of Islam."

Indian Muhammadans and the Balkan War.

2. Writing under the heading "Enemy in the shape of a friend," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 5th December 1912, refers to an article which it says "probably" appeared in the October number of the Egypt and in which the paper named endeavours to assure "us" that the Tripolitan and the Balkan wars owe their existence to the conspiracy of England, Russia and Italy, and that it was at the instance of England that Kamil (Pasha)—who is a Jew and who served, and remained under the protection of England for a long time—became the Prime Minister of Turkey. The Egypt also says that England employed Kamil Pasha in depriving the Sultan of Tripoli and abandoning the country to its fate; and that with this end in view she brought about the Balkan war so as to put a pressure on Turkey. As a consequence of this move the Ottoman Caliphate has become quite degraded in the eyes of the Muslim world, indeed so much so as to afford no parallel in the history of Turkey. Further it says that Sir Edward Grey will now try to induce the Sultan or to coerce him by a naval demonstration, to suffer his European possessions to be partitioned by the Balkan States. Indeed, the British Foreign Minister knows that Kamil Pasha, who is partial to England and is himself a treacherous person, will succeed in inducing the Sultan to consent to the arrangement. Commenting on this the paper says that there can be no denying the fact that Russia and Italy have conspired against Turkey, but that there does not exist any deep connection between Great Britain and the conspiracy. Indeed, the Egypt has implicated England in the affair merely to inflame the minds of Indian Muhammadans. After describing how Lord Hardinge and other British Officers have contributed towards the Turkish relief funds, the paper says that, nevertheless, there can be no manner of doubt that the British public, and for the same reason the Liberal Party and the Liberal Cabinet, are not well disposed towards the Turks and Indian Muhammadans, the latter of whom they hold responsible for the Indian mutiny of 1857. Next it describes how Muhammadans helped the English people during the meeting and how they saved the lives of English men and women by putting their own lives in danger, and says that if "our" national existence is kept intact after the Balkan war and if "we" live, "we" will publish an account of the obligations (conferred on the English people during the mutiny) and will offer the same to the British public as a present. In conclusion, it says that the writings in the Egypt can make no impression on the minds of Indian Muhammadans, in spite of the fact that the latter have a serious grievance against the British public.

The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 6th December 1912, publishes an article headed "Maulvis, come out of (your) cells!", in which the writer remarks that some of the European Powers have, in a way, openly declared that Islam and its followers cannot stay in Europe. After observing that the reason for terrible attacks being made on the Turks from all sides consists in their being Muhammadans, the writer exhorts Maulvis in India to go about urging their co-religionists to render every possible help to the Turks.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th December 1912, publishes articles headed "The Zamindar's Fund for a loan without interest." After stating that the loans given to Islamic Kingdoms by the political bankers of Europe always prove ruinous for the former owing to their having to pay compound interest and to make different concessions in favour of their creditors, the paper observes that the Porte has never been allowed an opportunity of introducing reforms; that it is not even permitted to enhance the customs duty on imported articles; and that, although it treats its non-Muslim subjects better than any Christian Power has ever treated its non-Christians, still the wicked and vile Christians are always engaged in devising fiendishly iniquitous plans to defame and injure the Turks and to prejudice still further the Powers against them. Europe, it adds, is so bitter against the East that it can never tolerate that the Turks, an Asiatic race and a Muhammadan people, should cast the unclean blot of their tawny colour on its (Europe's) white garment. There is no devilish act which "the henchmen of Europe" do not commit to remove this stain, every Satanic plot (to gain this end) being also hatched by "the thieves, murderers and dacoits of Europe in the name of the cross." After remarking that these doings are thoroughly approved by the Trinity of the European Press, statesmen and missionaries, the Zamindar asserts that the Turks are fully convinced that Europe is determined to sweep them into oblivion and has also been straining every nerve to obtain possession of, or control over, Mecca and Medina. They, however, have made up their minds not to cede even an inch of Islamic territory. But they require millions upon millions for this purpose and Indian Muhammadans should advance to them a loan of two crores without interest. Next the paper reports that it has been proposed to divide the sum into 40 lakhs of shares of Rs. 5 each, and publishes a list of persons who are willing to buy up a large number of these bonds.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 15th December 1912, has a letter under the heading "An important and opportune movement." The writer, Saiyid Muhammad Anwar Husain, Professor, D. J. College, Monghyr, says that it has been made thoroughly clear that the secret societies of the lying European Champions of civilization have definitely decided to end the existence of Muslim kingdoms in general, and "the capital of Islam (? Turkey)" in particular. After remarking that these stupid and savage attacks are promoting union among Muhammadans, he urges both the Shia and Sunni Musalmans in India to give in aid of Turkey the lakhs of rupees they are in the habit of wasting at Muharram celebrations; saying that the Turks are fighting to prevent the sacred places at Mecca and Medina from being interfered with by infidels (Christians).

Writing under the heading "The Muslim League and the British Government," the Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 5th December 1912, tells how, in its opinion, Government has, of late, been conferring favours on Muhammadans. In connection even with the Balkan war, it adds, which is between Muhammadans and Christians, the latter of whom are co-religionists of the English, the Government has helped Muhammadans to get subscriptions. His Excellency the Viceroy himself has given a very large sum of money in aid of the Turkish Relief Fund, for which the Prophet's followers ought to have felt thankful to the English. So far, however, from doing so, they have found fault with Great Britain's attitude towards the Turks and pretend to have postponed the annual session of the Muslim League by way of protest, whereas the postponement is really due to Mr. Amir Ali's inability to come out to India to occupy the presidential chair.

Hindus and the Balkan War.

3. The Paisa Akhbar (Lahore), of the 5th December 1912, reports that several "Hindu raises and Sikh Sardars" of Sialkot have given money in aid of the Turkish sufferers. The liberality displayed by them is not only commendable, but also contradicts the Hindustan's assertion that the Punjab Hindus are hostile to the Turks and wish to render pecuniary help to the Balkans.

In its issue of the 11th December 1912, the Paisa Akhbar publishes a letter from one Indar Singh alias Rajindar Singh, of the State Band, Maler Kotla. The writer finds fault with Muhammadans for insisting on sacrificing cows on the occasion of the Bakr 'Id and with the followers of Hinduism for trying to prevent the sacrifice. After stating that he receives a monthly pension of Rs. 4 for his 23 years' service in the Indian army and that for the last four years he has been in the employ of the Nawab of Maler Kotla, he states that he has despatched his pension certificate to the Editor with instructions that, from the 1st proximo till the end of the Balkan war, his pension should be realised by the latter and given in aid of the Turkish Relief Fund.

Commenting on the above the Editor praises Indar Singh and contends that Muhammadans sacrifice cows, not to offend Hindus, but as an act of economy.

In its issue, dated the 14th December 1912, the paper has a letter from Chuni Lal, Captain of the XX Bughizan (?), Jaipur State. After saying that he was employed in the Indian army for a long time and has also seen some fighting, the writer states that he can supply one thousand efficient volunteers to fight for the Turks, provided Government has no objection to this and "they" are paid a maintenance allowance. He understands that a Hindu rais of Bombay has offered to bear the expenses of volunteers proceeding to the front. He wishes to be informed whether this is so, as also of the place where volunteers are required to present themselves.

The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 11th December 1912, says that its Muslim contemporaries are madly keen on securing the sympathies of Hindus for the Turks. The Millat complains that, although Hindu papers have no concern with either Turkey or the Balkans, still they think fit to sympathise with the latter. But does not this also prove that their sympathy with the Bulgarians, etc., is free from all feelings of bigotry and selfishness? Indeed, they view the matter with an impartial eye and since they know that the Balkans are fighting for truth and liberty, as was recently remarked even by Mr. Churchill, their sympathies are with the Allies.

England and the Balkan War.

4. The Rafiq (Delhi), of the 29th November 1912, publishes the following :—

"O (my) fault!

"While the breathing of a new spirit into the Urdu language has afforded (diverse) facilities (of expression) and imported eloquence and perspicuity into the language, writers have also been confronted with difficulties (through this cause). For instance (when) Arabic words are used in Urdu 75 per cent. (of them) fall away from their (original) central meaning, while the remaining 25 are, after being stretched on the rack of (Urdu) inflexions, driven out of the pale of Arabic grammar. The same is the case with Persian (words), witness (the expression) "imdad dena," which means "to render help," although the word imdad alone is sufficient to convey this meaning. In the same way, some (Arabic) words are used in Urdu in a sense in which they are not employed in Arabic. For example (there are the words) ghárig (and) shaiq, (the former of) which is used in the nominative case in Urdu and the accusative form of which is ghariq, i.e., drowned, whereas, according to Arabic grammar, it does not bear this meaning. Whenever such words form the subject of discussion (and) Pleaders or other worthies with similar tastes are bent on fault-finding, they place strange meanings on words which innocently escape from the pen of a writer; and if there happens to be some grudge between him and them, which God forbid (sic!), they become ready to carry the tale (lit. spread) to the ruling class and the highly placed. For instance, (they) have, by reading in the Rafiq, dated the 12th November, the word ghariq as gharat, displayed their influence with the higher authorities (sic), although as is known to literary men, ghariq is an Arabic word and (lit. which) is spoken of as the nominative form (i.e., the doer*) of gharq." The meaning is that the subject of a verb is the doer of the act signified by the verb. For instance, ilm means "to know" and Alim "one who knows," zarb means "to strike" and zarib "one who strikes." Similarly, if consideration is paid to the secondary (lit. miscellaneous) meanings of gharq, i.e., drawing the bow with violence, exaggerating in praising or speaking ill of any one, drowning, &c., it will mean "one who drowns," "one who exaggerates in praise (or) dispraise," and "one who violently draws a bow." It is true that (lit. although) the subject is sometimes used in Arabic in the sense even of the object and that the nominative meaning nominative from an intransitive verb (sic.) is also used to denote the object; and for this reason it is possible that some persons, who are hostile to us, may give it the second meaning, i.e., may take the subject to mean the object or, treating the infinitive as intransitive, may interpret the nominative as the doer, supporting their position with arguments applicable to Arabic. We tell them, however, that Arabic grammar does not obtain in Urdu, the clear example of which is that Shaiq is generally used in the sense of 'one who is fond,' although in Arabic its meaning is clearly given as follows:—'one who enhances fondness'—page 381 of the Surah printed at the Majidi Press, Cawnpore. In other words, Shaiq means Ma'shuq (the loved one), but (lit. and) in Urdu the word is generally employed to mean 'one who is fond.' It is for this reason that the words Shaiqin-i-Walashan ko Mushda, i.e., good news to those who are fond (of the thing advertised) are employed in the headings of many notices, similarly, the word ghariq also is used in Urdu to denote that which or one who draws (any thing), although in Arabic it might, through some verbal change or some other cause, be taken to mean something else. Well, this was a literary and grammatical discussion. It is stated in (one of Reuter's) telegrams of the 9th November that the British fleet has been ordered to the Bosphorus to help the Porte if necessary, and safely carry refugees from one place to another. The news† (lit. accordingly the news) appeard in the Rafiq of the 12th November and it was written at the end by way of a blessing, Khuda unhen ghariq kare! (vide paragraph 5, Selections No. 46). However uninformed journalists may be they surely know what kingdom has risen for what reason and what connection we have with what kingdom (sic). We have repeatedly said that if Turkey has any friend it is Great Britain. This idea will be found in nearly every issue (of the Rafiq) and in every note (in it) about the war‡. Indeed, the fact of the matter is that to have a contrary thought would be wholly against our beliefs also.

---

* The brackets at the end of the 19th line are the papers.

† NOTE.—Minus the portion in italics.—(S. B., Punjab.)

‡ NOTE.—This is not borne out by facts,—vide the Rafiq's articles in paragraphs 5, 9 and 12 of Selections Nos. 47, 6 and 11 of Selections No. 48, and 4 of Selections No. 49.—(S. B., Punjab.

"But stormy winds have of late been blowing in the journalistic world. Some friends read the qaf in ghariq (printed) in Arabic character, as te and made out the fakir's blessing to be a curse. 'God save us from this and this is not my belief.' We cannot understand how the tongue of a pious fakir can utter anything (lit. evil) but a blessing. It is one thing to fight (and) quarrel for the rights of the country and the community, and another to curse like women, (saying, for instance), that worms may eat Italian guns. What is the use of this? These are things of the battlefield. They are by no means the prayer house of a Sufi, or a fatwa by half a Mulla, or a prescription by a quack headed with the words 'God the Healer.'

"In any case let those of our friends who read the qaf in ghariq as te and carried the mistake to the higher circle first correct their A. B. C. and leave errors of caligraphy and printing out of account. If qaf is taken for te in the Arabic script we are sorry for this shortcoming. (Our) still greater regret is that those who have put such a meaning (on our words) have paid no thought even to the context and (our) communal beliefs."

Note by Selection Branch, Punjab.—The paper contends that the word under discussion has been misread But, as printed in the Rafiq's note of the 12th November 1912, it certainly is gharat (غارت) and not ghuriq (غرق). The position of the points in the middle of the letter shows clearly enough that it is te (ت) and not qaf (ق); besides, the difference between the final forms of the two letters does not solely consist in the position of the points, there being an essential difference in the shapes of the two letters, and in their final forms, at any rate, they should never be confused. Nor apparently is the Rafiq itself in the habit of printing qaf like te,—vide its issues, dated the 11th and 18th November 1912.

But even if it is conceded that there has been a bonâ fide printer's error, it may be pointed out that the word ghariq does not appear to be in general use in Urdu. Indeed, it is not to be found in standard dictionaries such as Platt's, while Urdu writers do not at any rate appear to ever use it in the sense the Rafiq professes to have employed it. It may be added that the well-known Arabic lexicon, the Mumtahi-ul-Arab, gives the meaning of ghariq (غارق) as "gone under water and drowned". Francis Johnston's Persian-Arabic and English dictionary also gives its meaning as "submerged, drowned." while Badger's English-Arabic lexicon includes ghariq among the Arabic equivalents of "drowned." This would show that, if the Rafiq of the 12th November really used this word in its note under discussion, the meaning of the sentence is no better than it would have been had the word gharat been employed.

Alleged Turkish atrocities.

5. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"The report of further Turkish atrocities and massacres will probably show the futility of expecting peaceful progress in the regions recently affected by the war. If Reuter's message is well founded, the Turks are serious in believing the present struggle to be one of Christianity against Islam. Several Christian villages in the neighbourhood of Gallipoli are reported to have been raided by Turkish troops 'in retaliation for their having surrendered to Bulgarian bands.' Nine villages, we are told, were subjected to terrible treatment; and massacres, violation and pillage have been perpetrated on a wholesale scale. It is not difficult to understand in India the horrors of this pillage. Islamic fury is capable of effecting tremendous results one way or the other. But whether an attitude like this will be controlled by the central authority or whether the Balkan States will have a permanent peace are questions of considerable doubt. The massacre of certain Belgian customs officers by Kurds on the Turko-Persian border is also reported. It is doubtful if this has any connection with the anti-Christian feeling aroused in Turkey by the war, but in any case, there will be trouble in restoring peace in that region and the work of those who intend to bring about an amicable settlement will be very hard."

Muslim University Fund and Turkish Relief.

6. The following is from the Observer (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"It has been suggested in more quarters than one that the Muslim University fund should be sent to Turkey as a loan or devoted to the relief of Turkish sufferers from the war. Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk is, however, against the suggestion. If it were certain that the giving away to the Turks of not only the Muslim University fund but the proceeds of sale of the Aligarh College as well would terminate the present troubles of the Muhammadans, the sacrifice, says Nawab Mushtaq Hussain, should gladly be made in the interests of Islam. But even these sums would prove utterly inadequate to repair the ravages of the war. What is required for Turkey is not lakhs but crores of rupees. If house to house collections are made in every town and every village and every hamlet in India, if Muslims throughout the land are acquainted with the real state of affairs and aroused to a consciousness of the dangers that threaten Islam at the present juncture, there is every reason to hope that public enthusiasm and religious fervour will collect an amount for the relief of our suffering brethren by the side of which the University Fund would be a mere bagatelle. The diversion of the University Fund to the Red Crescent Fund would, on the other hand, cool the spiritual ardour of the Muslims and lull them into a false sense of imagining that no more subscriptions were needed for Turkish relief. The former cannot evoke as much enthusiasm as the latter and if once spent it will be impossible to collect a similar sum for the education of Indian Muslims. The best course, therefore, is to leave the Muslim University Fund untouched and to devote our exertions to collecting ten times more for the Red Crescent Fund. Such in brief are the views of Nawab Viqar-ul-Mulk. And coming as they do from a man of his love of religion, his independence of judgment and his courage of convictions, they deserve the earnest attention of Indian Muhammadans."

The ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid.

7. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 30th November and 7th December 1912, has a note headed "Reinstatement of Sultan Abdul Hamid," in which it reports that her inability to checkmate Europe's moves in connection with the Tripolitan and Balkan wars has brought home to Turkey the necessity of restoring Abdul Hamid to the throne. The ex-Sultan can fully see through the tortuous ways of the European Powers and was several times successful in protecting Turkey against their aggression. The hope is, therefore, entertained in Islamic circles that his reinstatement will make it easy to end the present complications (in Turkey). It is being said indeed that the recent Turkish successes are attributable to the Turkish foreign affairs having already practically passed into his hands.

England and the Caliphate.

8. The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 7th December 1912, has a note headed "Who will succeed to the Islamic Caliphate?" Writing on the above subject, says the paper, the Review of Reviews observes in a recent issue that the effect on the Muslim world would be brilliant if England were to proclaim that, being the greatest Muslim power in the world and seeing that the Caliphate is confronted with difficulties on all sides, she would take upon herself the responsibility of safeguarding the sacred places of Islam and protecting Muhammadans from external aggression. Commenting on this the Vakil remarks that Indian Muhammadans are admittedly loyal to England, but that, nevertheless, they will never tolerate the idea of the sacred places of Islam passing out of the possession of a Muslim power and becoming subordinate to Christian power. "We" are thankful, it adds, to the Review of Reviews for expressing the wish that the British Government would extend protection to Muhammadans in the event of the Turkish Government ceasing to exist, but "we" may tell the paper named in the words of Nawab Vicar-ul-Mulk that the time for interference has not as yet come. God willing it will be soon proved that the thoughts regarding the destruction of the Turkish Government are premature. Continuing, the paper says that, according to the Review of Reviews, the edifice of Islam is supported by the sword. It is to be wished, it adds, that the paper named had not raised this question at all; seeing that a Muhammadan will retort that the edifice of Christianity is supported by (both) fire and sword. After quoting from Robertson's "History of Christianity" in support of its contention, the paper says that, in the words of a historian, if all the blood which Christians have shed all over the world for the sake of religion were collected it would make an ocean so deep that even the biggest ship afloat could float over it. It then concludes by remarking that, in criticising Islam, the Christians should bear in mind that, if the edifice of Islam is supported by the sword, that of Christianity is supported by (both) fire and sword.

Islam and subject faiths.

9. Writing under the heading "Turkey and England," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 4th December 1912, reproduces the recent remarks by Tawfiq Pasha, in which he contrasts Turkey's liberal treatment of her Christian subjects with the ill-treatment of Indians in the British Colonies. Such a difference in the treatment of their conquered subjects by Islam and Christianity, adds the paper, has been in evidence ever since Islam first saw the light. It regrets, therefore, that the Turks should be called bigots and charged with trampling upon the feelings of races under their rule.

The Power of the British Workman.

10. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"Indians cannot but view with amazement the extraordinary power and influence that a single British workman can wield by combination. A single engine driver by name Knox, who was convicted for drunkenness and consequently dismissed by the North-Eastern Railway authorities, has been able to bring about what threatens to be a temporary national economic collapse. Nearly ten thousand workmen have refused to work unless Knox is re-instated and other railway men will probably join this extraordinary strike. A question was put to the Home Secretary about the dismissed workman, and he replied that he was considering the petition. Nothing but his reinstatement will satisfy the army of British strikers and in the meanwhile there is a serious suspension of industrial activities with their connected economic losses. Apart from the contentions raised about the truth of Knox's claims, the point of interest to most Indians is the extraordinary power of organisation and the force of Trade Unions. It is difficult to see what the European industrial combination will lead to, but how will India benefit from these lessons and examples ?"

Indians in South Africa.

11. Writing under the heading 'Mr. Gokhale's return to India,' the Tribune (Lahore), of the 17th December 1912, publishes the following :—

"We heartily associate ourselves with the welcome accorded to the Hon'ble Mr. Gokhale by the citizens of Bombay on his return from his patriotic and philanthropic mission to South Africa. Mr. Gokhale returned on Friday last and on Saturday a public meeting was held at the Bombay Town Hall to give him the city's welcome and to hear his experiences in South Africa. Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy presided. Mr. Gokhale made a most important and exhaustive statement, a summary of which has been telegraphed to us by our Bombay correspondent. When setting out for South Africa Mr. Gokhale was himself doubtful of the treatment that he would receive from the authorities and the European colonists, but he was re-assured on this point and had nothing to complain of on this score while he was in South Africa. If, however, it was thought to placate Mr. Gokhale by personal consideration and kindness, or to induce him to close his mouth about the real state of things in South Africa then it was a mistake as his speech on Saturday showed. For the great courtesy shown to him by the highest authorities in the Colony, for the cordiality of the reception accorded to him by the representatives of the Union Government he and his countrymen are duly grateful, but it is not of his personal experiences alone that he has to speak but of what he found there and of the treatment which his countrymen and countrywomen in South Africa receive."

* * * * * *

"Mr. Gokhale's speech clearly impresses upon the mind two important facts,—first, that no more Indians should go to the South African Colonies on any account and, second, that every endeavour should be made to improve the lot of those already there."

Egyptian affairs.

12. Writing under the heading "A tear of sympathy," the Rafiq (Delhi), of the 4th December 1912, refers to the announcement made by the Cairo correspondent of the Pioneer that the Egyptian Government had stopped the publication of the Alam and says that "the Military Government of Lord Kitchener" regards the Alam as guilty, because it is alleged that in one of its issues it had taunted Turkey, the Suzerain of Egypt, with being insolent, and had declared that Nazim and Kamil, the masters of the Civil and Military Power of Turkey were enemies (of Egypt). The Editor, however, regrets that he cannot believe this ; seeing that only the other day, on the outbreak of the Balkan War, Lord Kitchener, out of solicitude for "the Greek Slave" could not suffer the Egyptian Government to show so much respect to the Suzerain Power as to give the Greek Consul at Cairo his passport. The Alam is also charged with having stated in one of its issues that the Christian States had combined in order to expel the Turks from Europe. So far, however, as the Editor is aware, the cry of expelling the Turks from Europe was first raised by the Greek and Bulgarian cabinets. In India it is on the lips even of children that the Balkan States have the expulsion of the Turks from Europe in view. From this it can be imagined how far the charge brought against the Alam is reasonable. And yet on this very charge the publication of the paper named has been stopped. Can this be the act of a civilised and enlightened Government? Continuing, it says that it is not those papers, nor Farid Bey, but spirited feelings which create nationalists. The question, however, arises, who creates this spirit? The correspondent of the Pioneer will be surprised to learn that, so long as British Ministers like Mr. Asquith, Sir Edward Grey, Mr. Churchill and their colleagues do not vacate their offices and so long as they are not succeeded by intelligent and enlightened Englishmen like Lord Newton, the troubles in the East will not come to an end.

13. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 30th November and 7th December 1912, publishes a letter under the heading "The secret of Japan's advancement." Writing about the wonderful progress achieved by Japan during the past 50 years, the writer—Lala Godha Ram, of Shahpur, now residing at Seattle, America—says that the event is due, among other things, to the strenuous efforts of the Japanese from the very outset, to make their native tongue the sole medium of instruction and to fill its literature with useful information. India also should follow their example and leave nothing undone to enrich her "national language," Hindi, and create a "national literature" therein. Hundreds of young men should be sent to study in foreign lands and should, on their return home, translate into Hindi the books read by them abroad. Another great cause of Japan's advancement is free and compulsory education. Fortunately for Indians their country is now under the most civilised nation in the world, and their Government may be relied upon to co-operate with them in making education free and compulsory. So long, however, as it does not do so they ought themselves to put forth strenuous efforts in the matter.

Secret of Japan's advancement.

(b)—Home.

14. The Akhbar-i-'Am (Lahore), of the 4th December 1912, publishes an article headed "Strengthening the British Navy." The paper praises Mr. Asquith for declaring, in reply to a question in the House of Commons, that in the opinion of the responsible authorities, India already bears more than her sufficient share of the defence of the Empire and that it is not possible to add further to her burdens. After remarking that there would have been no need to raise this question at all if Canada and other British Colonies had borne one-fourth or even one-eighth part of the burden which falls on India in meeting the expenses of British rule, the paper refers to a remark which appeared in a recent issue of the Englishman and in which the paper named says that "the independent rulers of Native States in India" are consulting each other with a view to presenting three Super-Dreadnoughts to the British Navy for the defence of the Empire. Commenting on it the Akhbar-i-'Am says that nobody can even dream that the Native States are in a position to bear the heavy expense of presenting three Super-Dreadnoughts, the expenses of which are calculated to amount to 37½ crores of rupees. The public opinion in India is that the British Government is daily growing so rich that it stands in no need of receiving presents from the Native States of India for the defence of the Empire. The Native Chiefs are undoubtedly "independent" within the bounds of their States, but they are not really independent in the true sense of the term. They are already "giving sufficient proof of their generosity" in sharing the burden of the Military defence of the Empire. Is this insufficient? Does loyalty mean that they should bear the burden of 37½ crores of rupees? The responsible rulers of India are not likely to be deceived by such fallacies. It is said that the Imperial Government in England has been surprised to hear of this suggestion; and this is a sufficient proof of the regard which is paid to a paper like the Englishman.

India and the Naval Power of England.

The Zamindar (Lahore), of the 6th December 1912, reports that the recent writings in the London Times about the Native Chiefs in India presenting a Dreadnought to England prompted the Editor to offer to give Rs. 1,000 in aid of the proposal. Next it publishes his telegram to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy on the subject, as also the reply which was vouchsafed to him from Bhopal and in the course of which he is informed that no proposal like the above has so far been made.

15. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

His Majesty's Gracious Message.

"His Majesty the King Emperor has on the first anniversary of the memorable Darbar at Delhi, sent to India a gracious message of his deep interest and good will for his loving subjects and princes. The message is very touching and betokens the heartfelt and deep solicitude of our Gracious Sovereign for India's happiness and progress. His Excellency the Viceroy has replied in terms of graceful acknowledgment of the message and expressed the gratitude and hopeful contentment of the people. We cordially endorse every word of this assurance, and wish to convey to His Excellency our grateful acknowledgments of the same."

Indian National Congress 1913.

16. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 15th December 1912 :—

"We are exceedingly pleased to learn by telegram that at a largely attended meeting of the Karachi District Congress Committee on the 13th instant, the Hon'ble Mr. Harchandrai Vishandas presiding, the Hon'ble Mr. Bhurgri, the Hon'ble Mr. Harchandrai and others were appointed delegates to the Bankipore Congress, and it was unanimously resolved that the Sind delegates be requested to invite to Karachi the Congress of 1913. The statement lately telegraphed that it was unlikely that the Congress would meet at Karachi next year was unauthenticated. We very earnestly hope that the invitation of Sind will be accepted, and the Congress of 1913 will meet at Karachi. There may not be a very large attendance, but the success of the session will be assured.

In an article on the Congress the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912, expresses itself as agreeing with the views of one Mr. N. C. Mehta as expressed in the 'Modern Review' for December. It quotes from his article :—

"To avoid the unpleasant and ungraceful appearance of choosing the same men over again the Congress Committee has been forced to fall back on lawyers with lucrative practice, perhaps of local eminence, but without absolutely any claim of being politicians, or even having taken part in politics of this country. For a short time before the Session of the Congress they suddenly emerge into prominence, only to relapse soon after into their wonted obscurity. It is a singular fact that apart from the actual founders of the Congress not a single public man of eminence has come out from the ranks of the rising generation, and those who had the good fortune of becoming Presidents have hardly attracted much notice beyond their own circle of admirers, have hardly done anything more than deliver the usual hour-and-a-half speeches set in the old form."

Constituted as it is, even with the best of Presidents the Congress can no longer excite the same enthusiasm among the public as it did in the days gone by. The reason is not far to seek. It has not kept pace with the times and is fairly out of date. Says Mr. Mehta :—

"Many things have changed within the last twenty-five years, but the Congress has stood immobile, unchanged, unresponsive to the growing requirements of our times. Presidents have come and gone : their speeches too rigidly cast in one mould have excited a momentary interest in the press, provided a kind of political diversion for the people at large, and been soon forgotten How the committees are organised, how the members are chosen, perhaps elected, whether any change in the personnel of the committees has taken place since the beginning of the Congress, are matters impossible for the general public to know. The curiosity of the inquisitive few remains unsatisfied ; the grumblings of the impatient outsiders remain unheeded ! The critic of bureaucrats not seldon behaves himself like a bureaucrat, as was seen at the last session of the Congress."

"Even ardent Congressmen are getting tired of the business * * "

Mr. Mehta would have some sort of permanent political organization whose activities will not be limited to the last fortnight of the year only, but extended throughout the year. A central body with provincial branches should act as a centre of information about the country, distribute suitable literature on the political and economic problems of India among the masses and send missionaries for the purpose to the villages and districts 'in the splendid isolation of ignorance.' It is essential that popular attention should be directed to the activities of the association and the public given a large and more direct share in its control. The old order is changing, giving place to new. Even the Congress has got to move with the times.

III.—Native States.

17. The following is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 13th December 1912 :—

Education in Patiala.

"It would be a matter of great pleasure to the educational community at large to learn that like Baroda, the State of Patiala too is making educational advancement with leaps and bounds. Its promising and youthful Maharaja Bhupindra Singh Bahadur, G. C. S. I., is taking keen interest in matters educational. The greater occasion for rejoicing is that His Highness prefers to educate his subjects in their own language. And really to educate and instruct young men in their mother-tongue is the first step to national progress. From the educational report of Patiala for the year 1911-12, it appears that the number of Punjabi-teaching schools in the State is 33, and that the teaching of Punjabi is on the same level with Urdu, so that Punjabi may be established as the court language in the State. The number of schools has increased to 35 now, and these schools are primary schools at present. The number of male students in the State is 1,579, and that of females 11,187, in other words, the education of girls is being conducted on a large scale than that of boys. From the above happy circumstance we have every reason to believe that in the succeeding two or three generations not a single boy will remain illiterate in the State. For to educate a boy is to educate a man, but to educate a girl is to educate a family, and surely the truth of the maxim may be realised if efforts in this behalf are continued incessantly as at present. The number of recipients of State Scholarships is 91, and in the State there are 15 boarding houses in which some 490 students reside. The Maharaja is thinking of opening more schools in the State, and he has ordered that the State should defray all expenses on the building of schools. Moreover, the Medical Department has been strictly ordered that its officers should inspect these schools whenever they happen to be on tour. Students have been strictly forbidden from cigarette-smoking. We have every hope that other Sikh States will also imitate the noble example of Patiala in this behalf, and that by making the study and teaching of Punjabi compulsory and important in their respective States, they will place the whole of the Punjab under deep debt of gratitude and thankfulness."

IV.—Kine-killing.

The Bakrid riots at Ajodhya.

18. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"The full account of the Bakrid riots at Ajodhya as published in the Leader of Allahabad shows that the lamentable incidents which have shocked the Hindu community all over the country could easily have been averted by an exercise of the usual regard for precedent on the part of the responsible authorities. The holy city of the Raghus is practically a Hindu colony inhabited principally by Sadhus and Bairagis and resorted to by pilgrims in large numbers from all parts of Hindu India. The Moslems, including women and children, do not form more than four per cent. of the total population. Cow-killing had never been heard of in that city, and Hindus and Muhammadans had been living in peace and concord. That the impropriety of cow-killing in the sacred city of Ajodhya has always been fully realised in the official world will be evident from the following incident :—

"In 1906 the Municipal Board resolved to construct a slaughter house for goats and sheep at Ajodhya. The Mahants, Bairagis and other Hindu residents of the place, misunderstood the resolution and sent a memorial to the District Magistrate through the late Maharaja of Ajodhya. The District Magistrate, Mr. F. J. Pert, wrote to the Maharaja as follow :— "You will inform the memorialists that I fully sympathise with their objections to the construction of a slaughter-house for the purpose of killing cattle intended for human consumption in Ajodhya, and that so long as I am District Magistrate they may rest assured that I have no intention of sanctioning the construction of any such building." This pacified the Hindus, and they went home blessing the British Raj.

"Shortly after the local butchers applied to the Municipal Board for licenses to sell beef at Ajodhya. The application was rejected. A second set of applications was put in, but with the same result. The Chairman of the Health Committee, Major Charles Milne, Civil Surgeon, Fyzabad, after due inquiry, expressed himself strongly against 'permission for the slaughter of cows, bullocks and buffaloes and the sale of beef at Ajodhya.' An appeal was made against this order to the District Magistrate Mr. L. C. Porter, who summarily rejected it. Applications were filed before every new Deputy Commissioner that came, but without any effect. Then an application was put in on behalf of the Muhammadans of Ajodhya—it was no longer the butchers alone, but that also was rejected.

"After a lull of four years the Muhammadans of Ajodhya made a grand effort in 1910 and sent a memorial to Government, which too was rejected. Then they gave a religious turn to the movement and tried to sacrifice cows on the Bakrid festival of 1911. With commendable foresight Mr. Dewar, the then Deputy Commissioner, stopped the sacrifice. Telegrams were sent to the Government against the order of Mr. Dewar, and the Government ordered an enquiry to be made as to whether cow-sacrifice had ever been made at Ajodhya. The Hindu witnesses, who were all respectable men, unanimously deposed to having never heard of any such thing in Ajodhya. The Muhammadan witnesses, who were men of little or no consequence, said they had made sacrifices secretly, but, cross-examined, they contradicted one another and also their original statements. It is noteworthy that the higher class Muhammadans, though summoned, did not come forward to give evidence. It is not known what orders the Government passed on the enquiry.

"Things remained quiet for a year, and matters were thought to have come to a satisfactory end, while as a matter of fact they were coming to a head. On the occasion of the last Bakrid the Muhammadans again approached the Deputy Commissioner, and the latter, it is said, notwithstanding the protests and warnings of the Hindus, sanctioned the sacrifice and pointed out the places where it was permitted to take place. The Moslems, it is said, went about proclaiming their victory all over Ajodhya, with the result that the Bairagis and other Hindus got excited, and on the Bakrid day came out in large numbers and tried to avert the slaughter by seizing the cows brought for the purpose. This resulted in a riot. * * * * The sacrifice was not performed on the 20th, but on the day following it was performed under military supervision. * * * * The Hindus are also said to have been roughly treated by the Pathan cavalry. All Hindu shops were closed for a week both at Ajodhya and Fyzabad, and were opened on the official assurance that the offenders would be punished.

We reserve comment pending the official enquiry which is proceeding. We may, however, note in passing that the Nawab of Murshidabad has prohibited cow sacrifice in his Zamindari in deference to Hindu sentiments and feelings."

V.—Native Societies and Religious Matters.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

19. The Jhang Sial (Lahore), of the 5th December 1912, has a note headed "Complaint against Muhammadans," in which it states that of late the Prophet's followers have been expressing a desire for a reconciliation with Hindus. Not only did they, however, practise unbearable oppression on the latter in their days of rule, but even now they miss no opportunity of injuring their Hindu neighbours, witness their conduct in having made Government confer political importance on them. Do they not, moreover, know that Hindus favour cow-protection, and that the prosperity of India is bound up with the existence of kine? If they, knowing this, still kill cows and have begun to regard the practice as an Islamic rite owing simply to Hindus feeling annoyed at their conduct, does not this clearly mean that they consider it no sin to offend the followers of Hinduism and have also no regard for the welfare of their country? Again, what should one think of their having taken advantage of the Jhatka-halal question to plunder hundreds of Hindus and harass thousands more? Their high-handed doings have inflicted deep wounds in the hearts of their Hindu fellow-countrymen. It is one thing to make a mistake and quite a different thing to do a malicious act of set purpose. Muhammadans have tried to over-reach Hindus in everything, and this has caused an impassable gulf between the two communities.

Hindus.

20. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 30th November and 7th December 1912, has a note headed "Decline of public life among Hindus," in which it says that those nations which are now seen at the zenith of their advancement have had to struggle to reach the top. It is, however, to be regretted that, so from profiting by the example of these nations and forging ahead, Hindus are more and more lagging behind in the race for progress. After stating how new workers have ceased to appear in different Hindu societies, the paper attributes this to the fact that the servants of the Hindu community are no longer appreciated as they should be. They are severely attacked by the press and public over trivial mistakes and sometimes without any justification; while they are called selfish men and notoriety seekers. This has not only discouraged the present workers, but has also deterred new men from coming forward. If the Hindu press and public wish that Hindu public life should acquire vigour and Hindus become a living community, it should learn to encourage and honour men engaged in its service.

Special Lectures for University Students in Lahore. A Great Missionary Propaganda.

21. Mirza Yaqub Beg, L. M. S., Lahore, contributes the following to the Observer (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"A series of lectures was delivered at the Bradlaugh Hall, Lahore, by Dr. Mott and Mr. Eddy. It appears from the circular and notices issued to the students and the public that the former gentleman has travelled through the countries in the West and the latter in the East, and that their object is to impress their ideas on the minds of the student community of the whole world. They claim to have come with the idea of 'helping India in her struggle of to day.' They have a belief that their efforts have satisfied the hunger of the students in Europe, China and Japan. Dr. Mott is said to be the General Secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation. The notices for the lectures were headed 'Five Special Lectures for University Students.' Admission has been allowed on the production of tickets. Besides other agencies arrangement was made through the Professors of various colleges to distribute the tickets to every student, and in some colleges the signatures of students were taken to bind them to be present at the lectures. Almost all the University students have been attending these harangues, expecting to find something of educational interest in them. Some students were under the impression that the lectures had been arranged by the Punjab University, as the notices did not mention the names of the conveners of the lectures.

"I must admit that the lectures were really very interesting in many ways. Both the speakers were very eloquent, Mr. Eddy acquitting himself better. The lectures after explaining several moral and social evils among the students, suggested that they could only be elevated by believing in the Bible and Christ as man and God and in His resurrection. During one of the lectures cards were issued to students to take pledge to study the four gospals; accordingly some students signed the cards and took the pledges.

"The only regrettable point about these lectures is that although the lecturers are very highly educated gentlemen and have had ample opportunities for mixing with the students of the whole world, yet they do not appear to have made a careful study of the various religions professed by the students of the world. If they had done so, surely they would have found much nobler ideas than the atonement, the Divinity of Jesus and the Problem of Trinity to preach to the educated students of the world. These Christian dogmas are the remnants of the superstitions of bygone ages, and can secure no allegiance in the present age of rational views. For example, to preach the Divinity of Jesus and the Trinity before Muhammadans and other unitarians is absolutely ridiculous and is a step that proposes to lead people back to the time of primitive thinkers on theology. The Christian mind cannot boast of any superiority over primitive Hindu conceptions, wherein one meets with the belief in incarnations. The only difference is that the Hindu incarnations, like Lord Krishna and Raja Ram Chandarji, wrought far mightier deeds than the demonstration of weakness made on the cross by Jesus Christ. As to the question of Trinity, no Hindu student is so weak at arithmetic as to compute three times one as one. Nor does he understand the abstruse problem of atonement which proposes to teach that one can secure salvation worked by knocking out the brains of another.

"These lectures finished on the 11th instant and side by side with them a Mott-Eddy conference has been going on in the Young Men's Christian Association where Christian Missionaries were present. They have been thinking over the means of spreading Christianity in India.

"It is not in India alone that Christian Missionaries have started to spread Christianity, but these Christian zealots are swarming the whole of Asia in these days.

"Practically, Christianity has lost its hold over at least nine-tenths of the population of Europe. For the majority of men follow Rational Conceptions and cannot believe in the Christian dogmas of atonement and Trimity. So that Christian Missionaries have made it their object to convert Asia into Christianity, but that effort is not likely to meet with much success. But it is high time for us to be on the alert against this great religious propaganda which is carried out in various forms. We now appeal to the Muhammadans, Brahmans, Aryas, and the followers of all other theistic religions of this vast continent to join hands and oppose this great movement of deifying a man from one platform. Jesus really had never made such a claim, and the doctrine is found only in Gospels which were written a long time after the death of Christ, and, according to European critics themselves, have undergone great interpolatious and changes.

"The Anjuman-i-Ahmadiya of Lahore has addressed the following letter to the two reverend gentlemen requesting them to hold a friendly discussion on the points of difference between Islam and Christianity. If the learned gentlemen have no time for a discussion they may appoint the Bishop of Lahore to take their place in the controversy. Moulvi Muhammad Ali, M.A., LL.B., Editor, the Review of Religions, or one of his assistants will represent Islam.

"The following is the copy of the letter :—

AHMADIYA BUILDINGS, LAHORE,
Dated 11th December 1912.

MY DEAR MR. EDDY,

"THE Ahmadi gentlemen of Lahore, on whose behalf I take the liberty to write these lines to you, are very thankful to you and Dr. Mott for the very interesting lectures you have delivered to the student community of Lahore. Your great interest in the religious problem of the world, and the desire to interest in it the rising generations of the various countries, is indeed laudable; and the method of delivering lectures is sure to be very effective in turning peoples' attention to the great problems affecting the life and destiny of man. I am desired by the Anjuman i-Ahmadiya of Lahore to thank you for your efforts, and to ask you if you and Dr. Mott are willing to hold a public discussion with us on the comparative merits of Islam and Christianity. The discussion will be conducted in a perfectly friendly spirit, with a view to enlighten people on the religious problem and the views of human life and aspirations which which these two great religions take. I am sure this discussion will serve the best interests of both the parties and the public in general. If you agree to this proposal, details will be settled afterwards."

I remain,

Very faithful yours,

(Sd.) MIRZA YAQUB BEG, L. M. S.,

Vice-President, Anjuman-i-Ahmadiya, Lahore.

VI.—Legislation.

The Redemption of Mortgages Bill.

22. The following is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 17th December 1912 :—

"The meeting which was held on the 14th instant was the last of the first Council. Its proceedings were remarkable for the indecent haste with which the Redemption of Mortgages Bill was passed. Posterity will learn to remember the First Council by associating it with the two great retrograde measures which it has placed in the statute book—the new Municipal Act and the Redemption Act to be. A time will come when the Government will regret the passage of the Redemption Bill which the Hon'ble Chief Justice Sir Arthur Reid has rightly characterised as "mischievous." The Government has not had the fairness to publish the text of the opinions expressed by the Hon'ble Judges of the Chief Court and has rushed the Bill through the Council without giving the public time to discuss it and to point out its sinister effects." * * * *

The Punjab Council Elections.

* * * * * *

"The net result is the success of Hindus in five out of six constituencies. It is an unfailing index of the change that has come upon the Province as a consequence of persistent efforts made to keep down Hindus. Considerations of justice demand that those who pay for the music should have a right to call for the tune. But in this Province the policy has been of the reverse order, especially in Municipalities which have a communal right of representation ; and Muhammadans have been invited to administer the funds contributed largely by the Hindus. Quite recently replying to an address presented by the Muhammadans of Burdwan, His Excellency the Governor of Bengal said that a mere population test for representation is inadmissible and that the number of qualified voters and the rates paid by the communities are important factors in determining the share of representation for each community. It is unquestionable that the Municipalities of the Punjab owe their prosperity to the enterprise and zeal of the Hindu merchants and traders. As such it is but right that they should represent the interests of the Municipalities in the Legislative Council through Hindu members though, of course we gladly welcome Muhammadans for this purpose when they are equally fitted to express the wants and wishes of the civic population." * * * * *

* * * * * *

"We have two Arya Samajists, three Sanatanists, and one Sikh among the elected members. On the whole we have now a better and more satisfactory class of men in the Council ; and we have a right to expect from them more tangible work than it was possible from the purely nominated members of the First Council. In conclusion we trust that the Hindu community will profit from the lesson of the electoral contests and will not forget that by closing the ranks and standing with their brethren shoulder to shoulder victory is theirs."

VII.—General Administration.

(a)—Judicial.

Legal Practitioners in the Punjab.

24. The Parkash (Lahore), of the 7th December 1912, has a note headed "A new obstacle in the way of Legal Practitioners in the Punjab." It says that the Chief Court's decision to limit the enrolment of new lawyers having caused feelings of great uneasiness in the Punjab, it has now been proposed to reduce the number of admissions into the Law College by taking in only students who have passed the B. A. examination in the 1st or 2nd division. If Government or the Chief Court is, however, of opinion that a further increase in the number of lawyers is injurious for the rulers and the ruled why does it not, instead of employing subterfuges, close the Law College for a few years ?

The Hindustan (Lahore), of the 11th December 1912, says that more than 50 per cent. of the successful candidates at the B. A. examination pass in the 3rd division. The proposal, therefore, means that more than half the B. As. in the Punjab are to be debarred from receiving a legal education. Law examinations in this province are, moreover, stiffer than in any other part of the country, while further obstacles are placed every year (? in the way of the study of law); with the result that the doors of the legal profession are being shut in the face of young Punjabis. This has the effect of placing the general public in a position to say that the University wishes to limit the number of lawyers owing to their taking a very prominent part in popular movements. It is undesirable to let such an impression go abroad and the University should, therefore, state the real reasons for its conduct.

(b)—Police.

Sikhs and Police Service.

25. In its leader, the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 13th December 1912, publishes the following :—

"The capacity, aptitude and qualifications of Sikhs for the various grades of Police Service are practically admitted on all hands. In the army they have made a name for themselves for loyalty, fidelity and devotion, and in the Police with its quasi-military duties, the Sikhs should not be found lagging behind any other community. Rather they should be in far greater and more general demand than members of the sister communities. * * *

" * * The Army naturally has attractions of its own and it rests largely with Government and responsible heads of the Police Department to make Police Service at least far more attractive than it at present is to Sikhs. We have not the least doubt but that the high officers responsible for the recruitment and administration of the department will give the subject their serious and anxious consideration with a view to remove the paucity of duly qualified Sikhs in their service. We trust such consideration will bear out our contention that the Sikhs themselves are not entirely at fault; and that with greater encouragement their numbers may be substantially increased.

* * * * *

The writer quotes the figures for Europeans, Hindus and Muhammadans and Sikhs. The comparison leads him to observe that the numbers of the last are inadequate. Summing up, he says—

"Can this be considered satisfactory by any criterion? Can this be regarded as an adequate share for any community which has the claims, services and qualifications of the Sikhs? The Government is anxious to give us an adequate share in public employment, so are its high officers who have the recruitment of the department and the prospects and promotion of their subordinates in their hands. We appeal to their good offices and broad-minded sympathy. Facts and figures loudly call for their ready and willing intervention and we fervently trust they will not fail to take such substantial and adequate measures as are necessary to give the Sikhs an adequate share. By graciously taking requisite action they will, it goes without saying, place the loyal and faithful Sikh community under deep obligation and earn their unstinted gratitude."

(d)—Education.

The proposed Benares University.

26. The Hindu (Lahore), of the 30th November and 7th December 1912, complains of the present unreasonable lack of enthusiasm for the Hindu University scheme, saying that if the organisers continue indifferent the greatest, the most important, and the most useful movement organised by Hindus is likely to come to naught.

The Punjab University Convocation.

27. In its leader the Observer (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912, publishes the following :—

"The very first degree to be conferred was that of Doctor of Oriental Learning (honoris causa) on His Honour Sir Louis W. Dane, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab and Chancellor of the University; and there can be no questioning the fitness of the distinction bestowed. His Honour's deep interest in Oriental classics, and especially his knowledge of Arabic and Persian, fully entitled him to the senior degree of the senior Faculty of the Punjab University, and in the long roll of the distinguished men, whom the Punjab University has from time to time honoured, Sir Louis's name, we are sure, will occupy a position of no small eminence. Similarly, the degree of Director of Laws bestowed honoris causa on the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Robertson, late Vice-Chancellor of the Punjab University, comes as a most suitable recognition of high position and great scholastic attainments."

The following on the same subject is from the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 13th December 1912 :—

"At its recent annual Convocation, the Punjab University conferred honoris causa the Degree of Doctor of Oriental Learning on His Honour Sir Louis Dane. The recognition is as befitting as it is deserved, and we heartily congratulate the University on having done the right thing. Sir Louis Dane possesses an intimate knowledge of Persian and Arabic and many of the Vernacular languages of the Punjab and was eminently fitted by virtue of his high attainments as well as his exalted position to be the recipient of the highest distinction of the gift of the University whose respected head he has been and in whose activities he has taken such an eminently practical and sympathetic interests. In his matter-of-fact aud business-like Convocation address His Honour made a brief but highly interesting survey of the numerous directions in which steps have been taken in advance. His Honour took institution after institution and showed by facts and figures what has been done in respect thereto in the matter of buildings, equipment, apparatus and the like. The survey is highly absorbing and instructive and one rises from its perusal with a feeling of heightened respect for the august ruler who has been responsible for all this activity and advancement in many important directions. A detailed notice of these must be reserved for another occasion. It is sufficient, however, to realize that it was in the fitness of things that a ruler whose regimé has witnessed so many improvements and extensions in education should have been made the recipient of such a signal mark of honour as the conferment of the highest Degree in the gift of the University denotes. We wish and trust that Sir Louis Dane will long enjoy the Degr. e conferred on him.

"In his Convocation address Sir Louis Dane made a passing but important reference to the burning question of a Common Script. His Honour advocated the claims of the Roman script. * * * *

"Our own views on the subject are too well to need reiteration, nor is this the time and place for that purpose. Sir Louis Dane's views, with the weight and deference attaching to them, we have placed before our leaders and for the present we leave them to ponder over the same. The case of Roman as a common script, for India is not fraught with so many difficulties when it comes not as rival of existing scripts but as supplementary of the same, and may perhaps be accepted without demur. It must, however, be borne in mind that all that Sir Louis Dane would appear to imply by the term 'a common script of India' is a script by means of which the several vernaculars may be put down in black and white so as to appear in the same garb. This is materially different from the aspiration entertained in certain quarters of a common language of India appearing in different garbs in the several scripts in use. The main advantage of a common Roman Script will be, as mentioned by His Honour, the facility and rapidity with which a person can learn a language through a familiar garb. Even this advantage cannot be belittled or minimized, and the point is one which deserves careful study and consideration at the hands of all interested in the promotion and spread of knowledge."

Sir Louis Dane on Oriental Learning.

28. The following is from the Arya Patrika (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"In his Covocation address the Hon'ble Sir Louis Dane, Chancellor, did full justice to the signal honour the Syndicate of the Punjab University has done to him by conferring upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Oriental Learning. The chief burden of his address was Oriental Learning, for the encouragement of which he made an eloquent appeal to the Universities of India, especially that of the Punjab, which was founded, as His Honour pointed out, with the primary and special object of promoting the diffusion of European science as far as possible through the medium of the vernacular languages of the Province and affording encourgement to the enlightened study of the Eastern Classical languages and literature. * * * * * *

Sir Louis Dane's regime, which is coming to a close, will be remembered for the impetus it has given to Oriental learning in the Punjab.

29. In its leader, the Tribune (Lahore), of the 17th December 1912, publishes the following :—

The battle of the vernaculars.

"In the Punjab the cause of primary education has suffered grievously from the fact that the language through the medium of which education is imparted in the primary classes is not the mother-tongue of the pupils. The fact that the language of even the most elementary text-books is practically a foreign tongue for the student has stood in the way of primary education making satisfactory and steady progress. Whilst other Provinces such as Bengal, Bombay and Madras have been able to build up good and useful vernacular literature of a most creditable description, in the Punjab even after half a century of education there is little or no vernacular literature worth the name. The vernacular used as the medium of instruction being not the mother-tongue of the pupils, it has not been possible for primary education to make much headway in this Province. Efforts have no doubt been made to simplify text-books, but they have so far proved abortive. The fact is that if the difficult and unintelligible Persian and Arabic words with which the Urdu language is replete are eliminated very little is left of the Urdu language. For this reason it has not been possible to simplify the text-books. So difficult and above the head of the boys is the language employed in the Urdu Primer and the subsequent eight readers, that the infant learning the Qaida is unable to grasp the meanings of most of the words. In his case his education is tantamount to a teaching of the elements of language through the medium of a foreign tongue. It is true that the Muhammadans who constitute the majority of the population of the Punjab claim that Urdu is their mother-tongue. But we all know that the claim is false and that Urdu is as much a foreign language to the Muhammadan peasant and artisan as it is to his Hindu confrere on account of this great and serious defect—viz., the imparting of elementary education through the medium of a foreign tongue—much of the energy, time and money spent in imparting primary education is wasted. The educational systems of no other country in the world contain a parallel to what is seen in the Punjab. It cannot be said that educationists in the Punjab have not perceived this grave defect in the Provincial educational system. They have seen it, but no serious attempts have been made to remove it. The reason for this inaction or indifference is the fear to raise racial passions of the worst description. Unfortunately for the educational progress of the country the people, Muhammadans, Sikhs and Hindus, are not prepared to view this question from the sole standpoint of education. Religious and racial considerations are allowed full play and scope in the discussion of the problem with the result that its solution on sound and satisfactory lines is postponed indefinitely, if not made impossible. The Muhammadans have taken up a decided attitude in the matter. They have committed themselves to the Urdu language and Persian characters. The Urdu they affect is Hindustani interspersed with most difficult Arabic and Persian words. To the uneducated peasant and artisan no matter what his caste, cr ed or race, Urdu is perfectly unintelligible. Not many years ago when a Vice-Chancellor of the Punjab University, merely in the interests of sound education, and with the view to promote a thorough diffusion of useful knowledge among the people, challenged the unsuitability of Urdu as the medium of instruction in the primary classes, there was great excitement and the Vice-Chancellor was bitterly assailed. It will be in the recollection of our readers that when the other day the Right Hon'ble Syed Ameer Ali broached on behalf of the All-India Moslem League certain proposals to restore friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, he suggested that the Hindus should give up their agitation for the dethronement of Urdu. Soon after the Vice-Chancellor of the Punjab University referred to above had been attacked in the Muhammadan papers for his temerity in pointing out a very weak point in the educational armoury of the Province, an Educational Conference was held under the auspices of Government and the subject of suitable vernaculars for instruction in the primary stage of education was included in the agenda. A few non-official Indian gentlemen, Hindus, Sikhs as well a Muhammadans, were asked to attend this Conference. The energetic condemnation of different vernaculars which had formed of an integral part of the recriminatory campaign in the Press was ushered into the Conference Hall, and a battle royal raged between the advocates of Urdu, Hindi and Gurmukhi. The Conference, however, came to no decision and the Government also when dealing with the proceedings of the Conference selected the line of least resistance and decided to let sleeping dogs lie. The result is that the cause of education is still suffering and the application of the right remedy is deferred for fear of racial passions being roused. The position is certainly a most unsatisfactory one."

"The Mahomedans are strongly in favour of the Urdu language and Persian characters. Among the Hindus the desire to dethrone Urdu is general, and there is small but by no means the least energetic and influential section which are strongly wedded to the Hindi language and Sanskrit or Deva Nagri characters, as the Mahomedans are to the Urdu language and Persian characters. They favour Hindi which is as full of difficult Sanskrit words as Urdu is full of Persian and Arabic words. No compromise is possible between these strong and vehement advocates of conflicting interests. There are then the Sikhs who favour the Punjabi language and Gurmukhi characters which are a mere variation of the Deva Nagri characters. It is quite true that the Deva Nagri characters are scientifically the most perfect and phonetically the most suitable and the least difficult. But the Mahomedans will not listen to any proposal for their adoption and the Sikhs are equally vehement and denunciatory in their opposition. The Mahomedans have one advantage in this matter over both Sikhs and Hindus in that the language and the characters they advocate hold the field. Urdu being the language of the courts and the public offices, it cannot but be the language of the text-books and the medium of instruction in primary and middle schools. It is quite true that during the past fifteen years Persian which used to be at one time a compulsory subject of study in the curricula of schools is now optional and that both Hindi and Gurmukhi have been made optional subjects of instruction. Again in some of the schools which owe their establishment and maintenance to private enterprise Urdu and Persian have been replaced by Hindi, or Punjabi and Sanskrit. But in the case of the schools managed by Government or the Municipal or District Boards although Urdu and Persian are optional in actual practice they are taught and studied as if they were compulsory.

"This important and difficult subject was referred to in Sir Louis Dane's Convocation address and His Honour put forward a solution which we think should commend to all classes of the people. The solution in question is that whilst Punjabi, the mother-tongue of the people, might be the medium of instruction in primary education the Roman script might be substituted for the present Persian characters. His Honour said that he was confident that before the lapse of many years the Roman script which is at present used by all nations for general and extra-mural purposes, will, as being the vehicle for teaching English, become the common script of India, in which all the peoples of this continent, while keeping their own special scripts for their own special use, will be able freely to communicate with others outside their special language limits. His Honour said that he believed that in this way, and perhaps in this way only, would a knowledge of the Indian vernaculars be maintained and spread. Most sensible persons will agree with Sir Louis Dane that no man can expect to learn all the scripts in use in India, but most can learn a spoken language if presented in an already familiar garb. His Honour said, "I am glad to see that at the last Educational Conference the Roman script was put forward for use in Punjabi, where the special Sikh script of Gurmukhi might not be readily accepted. At a recent meeting of linguists in Europe the same conclusion was arrived at by that great scholar, Sir G. Grierson. I trust that as old controversies and rivalries die down the advantages of an Empire script may be recognised in theory as well as they already are in practice, and its use will, I am confident, do much finally to terminate those controversies and still those rivalries which, however interesting and even creditable in their origin, undoubtedly do much here to check and retard our common progress and even lead to deplorable strife." All true well-wishers of the Province and sincere friends of amity and concord will be inclined to endorse His Honour's words and to support a proposal which is eminently just and reasonable and acceptable as the solution of a difficult and vexed question."

(e)—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

American cotton and India.

30. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 17th December 1912 :—

"The International Federation of Cotton Spinners in Europe has been trying through the Lancashire millowners and cotton-spinners to bring pressure to bear upon the Government of India to take special steps to enforce the cultivation of the long-stapled American cotton in India. It appears that an experiment in compulsion in this matter is going to be tried in the Punjab. It is stated in the Agricultural Notes for November 1912, supplied by the Agricultural Department, Punjab, that 'a larger demand than usual is anticipated for the American cotton seed. So far we have been dependent on seed from Dharwar for distribution. This year it is proposed to start some seed farms in the Lyallpur district and multiply American seed grown at Lyallpur farm. Most of this will be required in the following year for the lands to be colonised on the Lower Bari Doab Canal; for it is probable that one of the conditions of grants on that canal will be that only cotton seed approved by the Agricultural Department may be sown. By reserving this area for American cotton and constantly issuing fresh seed we hope to secure large supplies of pure long stapled cotton which should command a special price.' As these notes are written by the Director of Agriculture it is clear that in the Lower Bari Doab Canal Colony the cultivators will have no option to grow any other than American cotton. When this proposal was first mooted by the Secretary of the International Federation of Cotton Spinners in his report compiled after his return from this country we entered our protest against it. Now that an attempt is going to be made to enforce it in the Punjab we repeat that it is both unwise and objectionable to fetter the discretion of the cultivators as to the kind of cotton that he should grew. The cultivator should in this matter have unfettered and absolute discretion, and it is a mistake to bind him by hard and fast rules of any kind. Will the seed be supplied free of cost by the Agricultural Department? And will the Agricultural Department undertake all the cotton that the colony will produce? How will the cultivator be remunerated for the extra trouble that he will have taken in growing American cotton? What steps will be taken in connection with the distribution of the seed to see that the cultivator does get the right quality of the seed and in sufficient quantity? All these questions require to be answered. We hope Government will reconsider its decision if it has been decided to compel the cultivator to use no other but American cotton seed. It must be remembered in this connection that most of the experiments that have hitherto been tried in the Punjab in the matter of cultivating American cotton have not been a success. The cultivator is not a fool. He knows what suits his interests best. Show him once that it will pay him to cultivate American cotton and he will cultivate none but that cotton. But it is one thing to demonstrate by practical experiments that a certain variety of cotton is remunerative to cultivate, and quite another to force its cultivation on him."

(h)—Miscellaneous.

Security from the Afghan.

31. Writing under the heading "The Islamic press on the rack of torture," the Vakil (Amritsar), of the 4th December 1912, complains that a number of Muhammadan papers have so far fallen victims to the Press Act, and that, in governing India, the most liberty-loving nation in the world (the British) take away the liberty even of those papers which are always full of praises of Government. Next it refers to the demand of security from the Afghan, and goes on to say that the writings objected to have been misunderstood and represented to the authorities, who do not know Urdu, as contravening the law. In conclusion, it urges the Muhammadan community to help its Frontier organ out of its present trouble.

The next Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

32. The following is from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 12th December 1912 :—

"The appointment of the Hon'ble Mr. Michæl Francis O'Dwyer, I.C.S., C.S.I. as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, in succession to Sir Louis Dane has been welcomed by the organs of Anglo-Indian opinion. Anglo-Indians have a choice in such matters and, they can both approve and disapprove of appointments such as these. Indians have no choice and no voice. Their approval and disapproval are alike of little value. Not unoften the approval of Indians is a disqualification to well-meaning men. Indians are not expected to express an opinion as regards present or prospective appointments to high offices like the Lieutenant-Governorship. However, a remark or two as regards the present appointment is possibly pertinent. In the first place the elevation of an experienced official of the Foreign Department keeps up the hoary traditions of the Punjab. The special acquaintance of the Lieutenant-Governor designate with the technique of the Foreign Office seems to be a necessary qualification for a ruler of this Province. In addition Mr. O'Dwyer's knowledge of the Russian language, his intimate connection with the Muhammadan tribes of the North-West Frontier Province and his love of the Punjab and Frontier system of land revenue are points worthy of notice. Secondly, we have the outstanding fact that the choice has fallen on Mr. O'Dwyer who, though belonging to the Punjab Commission, had cut himself off from its influences for upwards of a decade, and that this choice has fallen upon him in preference to others who are his seniors and are subject to local influence. However, the people of this Province need be in no great hurry to judge the merits of the Lieutenant-Governor-designate."

The following on the same subject is from the Panjabee (Lahore), of the 14th December 1912 :—

"Our Lieutenant-Governor will retire in May next and His Majesty has appointed Mr. O'Dwyer to be the next Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. We have had changes of rulers in Bengal, in Madras, in the United Provinces and Assam and we shall ere long have one in Bombay. The change in the ruler of the Punjab has also been known. But it is difficult to say what the change denotes. One thing is inevitable. There must be change in the policy of the Government in greater conformity with the spirit of the reforms and the principle of autonomy. That the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer has been unconnected with the Punjab for the last many years is probably a matter of advantage. He will probably be able to handle and direct local affairs with greater sympathy. Sometimes we see things better when we come from a distance. Too close a familiarity with objects is not often a matter of advantage. If the rulers of Presidencies are able to do better justice to local affairs, so can Lieutenant-Governors not in close touch with the Province."

Writing under the heading "Our Lieutenant-Governor-Designate," the Khalsa Advocate (Amritsar), of the 13th December 1912, publishes the following :—

"We desire to express our heartfelt and respectful congratulations to our Lieutenant-Governor-Designate, the Hon'ble Mr. Michael Francis O'Dwyer, on his appointment to succeed His Honour Sir Louis Dane, when the latter's period of office is over about May next. We do so in the name and on behalf of the Sikh community not only of this Province but of the whole country. The Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer is not only the one of the senior members of the Indian Civil Service in the Punjab but one of its most exalted and distinguished representatives. He has had varied and unrivalled experience in diverse capacities in the Punjab, North-West Frontier Province and in the Political service where he won the highest prize posts open to members of that department, this last appointment being as Agent to the Governor-General in Central India. It may be taken for certain that a high and distinguished administrator of the calibre and position of the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer will bring, in addition to a wide and varied experience and ripe resourcefulness, deep and unstinted sympathy with the people of this Province and an abiding solicitude for their interests. * * * * *

We respectfully trust in the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer the Sikhs will find a sturdy and stout-hearted friend of these aspirations and a willing and broad-minded champion of their progress. To the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer we, the members of a backward community now struggling for their advancement and amelioration, shall look up to to lend us a helping hand and to extend us that broad and large-hearted sympathy without which we could not hope to progress as steadily and rapidly as we should. To the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer we shall look up to to safeguard the interests of an awakening community, to help it in its efforts at progress, and to fulfil, as far as lies in Government, its aspirations. It will thus be for the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer, not merely to continue the noble work of Sir Louis Dane and his predecessors in office, so far as the Sikh community is concerned, but also to extend and complete it, so that the Sikhs may soon be in a position to take their seat side by side with the sister communities. The Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer knows full well that in the Punjab the Sikhs occupy a special position by virtue of their history and traditions, their services and achievements on many a hard-fought field and their loyalty and devotion to the Throne and Government. And as in the past so in the future they will not fail to rise to the occasion and to respond to any call that may be made upon their heroism, courage or resources. Once more we respectfully offer our sincere and heart-felt congratulations to the Hon'ble Mr. O'Dwyer on his appointment to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab."
